H. E. Riggle made his home with an uncle, John Moninger, after the death of his parents, and was educated in the schools of Chartiers township. John Moninger was a brother of Mrs. Ellis Riggle, and a native of Washington county, born May 10, 1810, in Amwell township. He was the eldest of a family of ten children, and passed his boyhood on the farm, receiving a country school education. About the year 1848 he moved to Chartiers township, this county, locating on the farm now owned by our subject. John Moninger was an active politician of the Republican party, and was assistant assessor for several years, besides serving in other ways. He was highly esteemed by all who knew him, and was a member of the Presbyterian Church. He died in June, 1889, in Chartiers township. H. E. Riggle was married August 1, 1869, to Mary E. Weaver, a native of Canonsburg, this county. She was a daughter of Thomas and Mary Jane (Griffin) Weaver, who were also born in Washington county. The father followed the vocation of a saddler in Canonsburg, where he died in 1853, the mother passing away the same year. After his marriage to Mary E. Weaver, H. E. Riggle settled on the farm where he is now residing. It is a fertile, well-cultivated tract of 150 acres, has two gas wells, and adjoins the town of Houstonville, this county. Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Riggle have had children as follows: John M. (a graduate of Duff's Commercial College, class of '87, deceased March 25, 1892, aged twenty-two years), Mary Jane, Charles R. (also a graduate of Duff's Mercantile College, class of '91), Ida May, Ellis Reed, Thomas Andrew, James, Bertha Elizabeth, Mabel Catherine, Dora Gillin (deceased July 6, 1892, aged two years, nine months and eight days), and Grace Douglas. Mr. Riggle deals extensively in stock, making a specialty of sheep raising; He is interested in all public movements, is an active worker in the Republican party, and has served on the board of election, also as assistant assessor. Mrs. Riggle, together with several of her children, is a member of the Houstonville United Presbyterian Church.

JOHN McADOO is one of the well-known and successful farmers of Donegal township, and is a son of James McAdoo, who was born December 16, 1780, in County Donegal, Ireland, and being the son of a farmer, he in early life received a practical training in that vocation. In 1807 he was married to Catherine Ralston, who was born in September, 1786, in the same county, and the children born to them in Ireland were as follows: Jane, born August 12, 1808, living in Johnson county, Mo.; James, born August 30, 1810, also living in Johnson county, Mo.; Letitia, born November 18, 1812, died February 8, 1870; John (subject of this sketch), born May 15, 1815; Margaret, born July 10, 1818, died November 9, 1870; and Catherine, born August 29, 1820, died June 1, 1866.

In 1821 Mr. McAdoo and his family sailed from Londonderry, Ireland, on the vessel "Marquis Hill" commanded by Capt. Bryson, and after a voyage of nine weeks they reached St. Johns, Newfoundland, thence sailed to Baltimore, and then traveled from there by wagon to West Alexander, Washington county, Penn. Though then but a child of six years, John McAdoo (our subject) distinctly remembers the journey. He recollects riding on the high front seat with Tupper, the driver, who took a fancy to him. James McAdoo purchased some land in Donegal township, lying about three miles north of West Alexander, and erected a log cabin, which was afterward supplanted by a larger and more comfortable residence. On this farm the following children were born: Elizabeth, born December 17, 1822, died July 13, 1864; Alexander, born June 15, 1825, died March 17, 1863; William, born July 23, 1827, died December 1, 1861; David, born January 16, 1830, died August 11, 1864; and Robert (a miller of Ashland, Ohio), born November 14, 1833. Mr. McAdoo resided on his first farm several years, and then bought a place of John Huston, where he lived the remainder of his life, dying December 6, 1813; Mrs. McAdoo died in February, 1852. John McAdoo was born in County Donegal, Ireland, and, as previously stated, came with his parents to America, where he received a common-school education, and assisted on the farm. In 1837 he was married to Julia Ann Porter, of Harrison county, Ohio. Their children were as follows: Catherine (who died in infancy); Margaret Ellen (Mrs. Thomas Muldoon, of Pettis county, Mo.); Julia Anne (Mrs. C. F. DeFrance, of Donegal township), John (farming in Independence township); James (a farmer of Brooke county, W. Va.); Catherine (Mrs. Robert Mealy, of Donegal township); Oliver (farming in Donegal township); and John (deceased in infancy). The mother of these children died in 1863, and in 1865 Mr. McAdoo was married to Mrs. Margaret (Miller) Anderson, widow of George Anderson.

Mr. McAdoo passed the earlier years of his married life in Donegal township, afterward moving to Brooke county, W. Va., but finally returning to Donegal township. He has since remained on the farm, which is located about six miles north of West Alexander. Politically, he has always been a Democrat, and cast his first vote for Martin Van Buren. He possesses a remarkable memory, easily recalling incidents which occurred many years ago; in personal appearance he is a fine specimen of of perfect physical manhood. He began life with no financial aid, but by years of hard work and perseverance has succeeded in securing a comfortable competency. He and his wife are both members of the Baptist Church.

HIRAM HORNER. Among the intelligent citizens of East Bethlehem township none occupy a more prominent position than the gentleman whose name opens this sketch. He is a son of William Horner, whose father, also named William, was a native of Maryland, born of English ancestry. In early life grandfather William Horner moved to Fayette county, Penn., and there patented a large tract of land, part of which was bounded by the Monongahela river. Here he passed the remainder of his life, dying at an extreme old age, being yet remembered as a gentleman of unusual intelligence and keen sense of honor; who was a thorough Christian, ever giving liberally to the cause of the Master. His children were born and reared as follows: James; William; Thomas, an extensive landowner in Greene county, Penn.; Ephraim, who lived to be ninety years of age, and died in Adams county, Ohio; Benedict, who started West, and being suddenly taken ill, died in Pittsburgh, Penn.; Bennett, who resided in Wisconsin; Mrs. Sarah Moore, of Jefferson county, Ohio, and Mrs. Harriet Preston, who lived near the village of Chatham, near Newark, Licking Co., Ohio. None of this family are now living. It is said of Ephraim, who was a famous fisherman, that he once had an encounter with a monster tortoise, which possessed such great strength that it carried him on its back for nearly half a mile.

William Horner, son of William, the pioneer of this family, was born on the farm in Fayette county, Penn., and passed his boyhood in the usual pursuits of agricultural life. His school advantages were limited to a few winter months, which were spent with his brothers and sisters. After leaving school he became a wagoner on the National pike, and for many years made trips over the mountains to Baltimore. He was married to a Miss Swively, of Fayette county, who bore him fourteen children, of whom Hiram is the only one mentioned. Mr. Horner was killed by a horse, which kicked him to death near Uniontown, Penn.

Hiram Horner, our subject, was born June 21, 1831, beside the Monongahela river, in Fayette county, Penn. He was left an orphan in early boyhood, and being obliged to earn his own living, learned the carpenter trade. For four years he resided with James Hill, of West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., then followed the drover business several years, making frequent trips across the mountains with large numbers of hogs and cattle. For these services he received the meager pittance of 30 cents per day. In 1850 he went to Licking county, Ohio, where a brother was living, and remained near Chatham two years, meanwhile working at his trade, and following the drover business. He then engaged with a party to take a drove of cattle from Licking county to Lancaster county, Penn., receiving $10 per month for his services. Upon arriving at Lancaster he visited the home of his boyhood, and his brothers and sisters; then hired out as a drover for the remainder of the season at $1 per day. After this work was finished he resumed the carpenter trade, and in the latter part of 1854 assisted in repairing a mill at Amity, Amwell township, Washington county. He then took a drove of cattle to Vermilion county, Ill., afterward resuming work on the mill, and in March, 1855, he again entered the employ of the same firm for whom he had worked the previous autumn. He started on the trip with 170 head of cattle, arriving at his destination in June, then returning to Washington county, spent the following winter in completing the mill, and other carpenter work. The spring of 1856 found him with tools packed, on his way to Ottawa, Ill., where he worked the following summer, and returning to Pennsylvania in the fall, passed the winter of 1856-57 in Millsboro, Washington county. During the spring of 1857 he assisted his brothers on a freight barge on the Monongahela river, purchasing grain and produce along the river, which he sold in Pittsburgh. In the midst of his success as a boatman, Mr. Horner was taken sick, and suffered with a long and tedious illness. After regaining his health, he accepted a position in the mercantile establishment of his brother, at Millsboro, Washington Co., Penn. He then attended a commercial college at Pittsburgh, afterward resuming his former position at Millsboro, and finally started on a western tour. He first located in Adams county, Ohio, where he assisted an uncle with his farm work, and the spring of 1859 found our traveler teaching writing in the schools of Licking county, Ohio, where he continued for several months, then returning to Millsboro, Penn., took charge of a general store. This establishment was soon afterward moved to Merrittstown, Fayette Co., Penn., and Hiram Horner became a partner, remaining in that business eighteen months, during which time he served as postmaster. In the spring of 1862 he sold his interest in the store, and with a brother opened a mercantile business at Clarksville, Greene Co., Penn., which they conducted successfully for nine months. In the autumn of 1862 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of William and Charlotte (Rush) Litzenberg. After his marriage Mr. Horner bought the 132 acres of valuable land in East Bethlehem township, to which he has since added fifty acres, which are located in Greene county, Penn. In this home children have been born as follows: Joseph H., born November 2, 1863; Frank W., born June 15, 1865, and Julia, born March 30, 1870, all of whom are living with their parents. Mr. Horner conducts a general agricultural business, devoting special attention to the breeding of Shorthorn cattle and Black top sheep. In politics he is a Republican, and has served as auditor and school commissioner, in which offices he has given good satisfaction. His wife is an active member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

AMON ENGLAND is a representative of one of the pioneer families of East Finley township, this county, who were prominently identified with the early history of that township. The first of the name to settle in America was the great-grandfather of Amon, by name Samuel England, who emigrated from England and located in Philadelphia during the earlier part of the eighteenth century. He had a family of three sons: Samuel, John and Robert.

Samuel England was born in 1756, in Philadelphia, Penn., and at an early age learned the carpenter trade, which he followed in Baltimore for some time. In 1778 he removed to Washington county, where he secured a "tomahawk claim," and also purchased of Thomas Atkinson 200 additional acres, located near the headwaters of the Templeton fork of Wheeling creek, adjoining Pleasant Grove in East Finley township. He was married to Tacy Evans, who bore him the following named children, all of whom lived to an adult age: Tacy, Jane, Mary, Hannah, Joseph, Samuel and George. Mr. England was an intelligent and successful man, doing all in his power to improve the county, and advance the interests of its citizens. Politically he was a Whig, and served as squire for many years. In religion he was a Quaker, a follower of William Penn. Mrs. England died in 1836, Mr. England in 1838.

Samuel England, father of our subject, was born December 2, 1800, near the present home of his son in East Finley township. He received a limited education, and in early life began to farm, learning also the trade of a cabinet maker and carpenter. On May 1, 1833, he was united in marriage with Emma Given, who was born October 27, 1801, a daughter of Moses Given, of East Finley township, this county, and their children were as follows: Moses G., born January 22, 1834 (a Protestant Methodist minister in Cedar county, Ark.); Samuel T., born April 28, 1835 (a farmer living near Lincoln, Neb.); Tacy, born May 20, 1836 (deceased at the age of nineteen years); Amon (subject of the present memoir); Joel, born November 28, 1839 (residing in Washington county, Iowa), and Mary Ann, born October 7, 1844 (now deceased). After his marriage Mr. England settled near the home of his father, and as years passed by added to his property, until at the time of his death he owned over 1,000 acres of farmland, located in Washington county (Penn.), Illinois and Iowa. Mr. England was a rigid supporter of the temperance cause, and would not allow intoxicating beverages to be given to the workmen during harvest, although such was then the universal custom. He gladly furnished any other refreshments, but would not deviate from his temperance principles. He was a man of exemplary habits, and by industry coupled with shrewd financiering, became very successful in business. The present postoffice, "England," was named in his honor. In politics he was originally a Whig, and after the formation of the Republican party became an active worker in its ranks. He died January 9, 1886, his wife having preceded him to the "Better Land" October 25, 1870.

Amon England was born in East Finley township, Washington Co., Penn., July 7, 1836, and passed his boyhood days on his father's farm. On September 16, 1869, he was married to Deborah J. Knox, born in 1841, a daughter of Joseph Knox, of East Finley township, and they have had two daughters: Margaret E., born November 20, 1870, and Elnora Josephine, born February 10, 1874, both at home. After his marriage Mr. England continued to live with his parents on the home farm, which he now owns, and which is one of the best in the township. He has been a very successful business man, and enjoys the esteem of all acquaintances. In his political preferences he is a member of the Republican party.

GEORGE L. TAYLOR, a citizen of West Finley township, was born March 7, 1846. His father, Thomas Taylor, was a son of Matthew Taylor, who settled in South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., and there his son Thomas was born.

Thomas Taylor was born in 1805, on the farm of his father as above mentioned, and was early inducted into the mysteries of agriculture, which vocation he followed all his life. He was united in marriage with Susan Darlington, who was born about 1813, near Hagerstown, Md. The young couple commenced married life on the farm which is now known as the "Old Taylor Homestead," and children were born to them as follows: Julia A., Sarah C., Griffith D., Henry M., Isabella, William G., George L., Thomas F., Nancy J., James W., Mary M. and John M. Three sons of this family entered the Civil war, and fought for the cause of freedom. Griffith D. was the first man to enlist in West Finley township. He was a member of the Eighth Pennsylvania Reserves, and fell December 13, 1862, gallantly fighting at the battle of Fredericksburg, under the command of Gen. Burnside. Henry M. enlisted in Company E, Eighty-fifth P. V. I.; he was taken sick at Mars Island, and died before he could be taken home. William G. enlisted at West Alexander, Washington county, in the Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and six days later was in the battle of Petersburg; he lived to get home, where he died, honored and mourned by all who knew him.

JOHN FRYE. The Frye family, of which this gentlemen is an honored member, are numbered with the earliest and most prominent citizens of Washington county. The first of the name to settle in Pennsylvania was one Samuel Frye, who was born, in 1729, in Virginia, and was there married to Christina Speers, also a native of Virginia, born in 1752. They came overland to Washington county in a very early day, and July 19, 1792, took a "tomahawk right" to a large tract of land in Fallowfield township. He was a famous hunter, and also worked on his farm, remaining in the fort at night for protection from the Indians. He died in 1814, and was followed by his wife November 9, 1811.

Abraham Frye, son of Samuel and Christina (Speers) Frye, was born in 1792, on the home farm in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn. He received a subscription-school education, and in early life was married to Isabella Ringland, a native of Washington county. She bore him eleven children, namely: Samuel, living in Allen township, Washington county; John, also living in Allen township; Christina, Mrs. Abraham Colvin, of Fallowfield township; Abraham, who entered the U. S. service in Washington county, and is now living near Nashville, Tenn.; Henry, a resident of Sumner county, Tenn., on the Cumberland river; Noah, who died in Fallowfield township; Sarah, wife of Thomas McGowan, Lock No. 1, Fallowfield township; Jackson, living in Cowley county, Kans. (he enlisted in the Civil war, was taken prisoner, and confined in Andersonville prison eleven months); Clarissa, who married Alexander Allman, and died in East Pike Run township; Smith, living in Fallowfield township, and Isabelle, wife of Elgy T. Van Voorhis, of Kansas City, Mo. After their marriage Abraham and Isabella Frye settled on the upper part of the old homestead in Fallowfield township. He was actively interested in public matters, and first affiliated with the Democratic party, then becoming a Whig and Republican. He died December 11, 1866, followed by his widow April 12, 1881, she having lived to see her youngest daughter the mother of twelve children. Both parents were members of the Disciple Church.

John Frye, son of Abraham and Isabella Frye, was born December 25, 1815, on a farm near Lock No. 4, Washington Co., Penn. He was reared to manhood in Fallowfield township, and educated in the subscription schools. In October, 1839, he married Christina, daughter of Parker and Sarah (Carson) Scott, natives of this county, who died many years ago. After his marriage John Frye bought the 137 acres in Fallowfield township which he now owns, and upon which he has made many improvements. One year after her marriage Mrs. Frye died, leaving one son, Abraham, who was accidentally killed at Lock No. 4, this county. On January 19, 1844, John Frye married, for his second wife, Elizabeth, daughter of George and Eliza (Jackman) Carroll, who were natives of East Pike Run township, Washington county. They moved to Ohio, thence to Wheeling creek, West Virginia, where the father died; the mother is now living in Meigs county, Ohio. In 1849 John Frye erected a handsome brick residence, also a commodious barn 32 by 48 feet, and has been engaged in farming and stock raising, making a specialty of sheep. In politics he votes with the Republican party, and in religion he and his wife are members of the Disciple Church, in which he is an elder. They have two children: Josephine, wife of M. S. Krepps, and Ida B. Mr. Frye is now seventy-seven years old. He has settled sixteen estates, and has been guardian for twenty-one children and two lunatics.

THEODORE F. BURGAN, son of John Burgan, was born December 12, 1844. His grandfather, James Burgan, was a native of Westmoreland county, Penn., and was there married to Elizabeth Smock, who was born in the same county. Eleven children was the result of this union, of whom the living members are Joseph (residing in Washington, Penn.), Matthias (an agriculturist of Somerset township) and John (whose sketch is given below). James Burgan followed farming all his life, and died at the age of sixty-five years on the place now occupied by his grandson, Theodore. His widow passed away on the same farm in her eighty-fourth year.

John Burgan was born February 27, 1808, in Westmoreland county, Penn., and received his early education in the subscription schools of the period, and afterward came with his parents to the farm in Washington county, where he is now living. In 1831 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Huffman, who was born December 26, 1812, in Washington county, Penn., a daughter of Latimer and Mary (Kelly) Huffman, early settlers of Pennsylvania, who reared a family of fifteen children, two of whom are yet living, Elizabeth (Mrs. Burgan) and Cassandra (widow of Joseph Taylor, living in Monongahela City, Penn.); the father was a farmer and stock dealer; he died at the age of forty-nine years; his widow died in her eighty-first year. John and Elizabeth (Huffman) Burgan were the parents of the following children: Mary A. (wife of Harrison Long, a merchant of Vanceville, this county), born August 25, 1838; Keturah L., born October 20, 1842; Theodore F., (the subject of this biography); Elizabeth J. (living at home), born October 19, 1846; John W., born December 19, 1848; Clarinda (residing at home), born February 8, 1850; Sarah J. (wife of William Wright, a farmer of Somerset township), born March 21, 1855; Emily and James L. (both deceased), and one that died in infancy. John Burgan has always followed agricultural pursuits, giving considerable attention to stock raising. He and his wife are members of the Disciple Church.

Theodore F. Burgan grew to manhood on the home farm, and on December 13, 1889, was united in marriage with Jane McDonough, who was born December 25, 1859, in this county, daughter of Henry and Mary (Smith) McDonough. Mr. and Mrs. Burgan are members of the Disciple Church in Vanceville, this county; in his political opinions he votes the Republican ticket, and is actively interested in the success of his party. They are living on the home farm with his parents.

THOMAS PEPPER, farmer and stock dealer of East Pike Run township, is a native of the same, and was born July 15, 1834. His parents were William and Harriet (Nankivel) Pepper, who were natives of England, where the father was born in 1797, the mother in 1807. William Pepper was a butcher and a farmer and emigrated to Pennsylvania many years ago, settling permanently on a farm in Washington county. He was a supporter of the Democratic party, held various local offices, and was also prominently identified with the religious and educational interests of the locality. Mr. and Mrs. Pepper reared a family of seven children, namely: William, an agriculturist of West Pike Run township; Mary, wife of Alexander Mollitt, a resident of Washington, D. C.; Thomas, whose name opens this sketch; Anna, wife of B. F. Jeffries, a farmer of West Pike Run township; James, John C. and Elizabeth, of whom the latter three are now deceased. The father died in October, 1879, having been preceded by the mother in March, 1877.

Thomas Pepper received a subscription-school education in the home neighborhood, then learned the carriage maker's trade. He settled on a farm in Washington county, and on December 2, 1856, was united in marriage with Mary Crable, who was born in 1836, in Fayette county, a daughter of George W. and Hannah (McDonough) Crable, early settlers of Washington county, Penn.

Mr. and Mrs. Pepper are the parents of eight children, namely: Hannah J., wife of Joseph L. Walker, a resident of West Pike Run township; Harriet D.; James C.; Thomas W.; Elizabeth A.; Caroline J.; Mary E. (deceased), and one who died in infancy. Mr. Pepper owns 113 acres of good land, which is cultivated to the highest extent. He is a practical farmer, using all modern improvements to facilitate his work; in politics he is a staunch supporter of the Republican party. Mrs. Pepper is a member of the Catholic Church.

WILLIAM COOPER, a prosperous agriculturist, and a descendant of one of the oldest families in the county, is a native of Franklin township, born November 13, 1821, a son of Stephen and Hannah Cooper. He received a thorough practical training on the old home farm, and his literary education was limited to the subscription schools of the vicinity. On April 13, 1847, he was married to Eleanor, daughter of Stephen and Sarah Day, and soon afterward the young couple came to their present farm in Franklin township, on which they made many improvements, a comfortable residence and all other buildings having been built by them. Here, by industry, perseverance, economy and sound judgment, Mr. Cooper has made an enviable success, and is now the owner of a large and highly improved farm. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Cooper: Murray A. and Howard C. (the last named being deceased). Mr. Cooper is a member and supporter of the Presbyterian Church of Prosperity. In politics he was first a Whig, and, since the party was organized, has been a Republican. He has never sought office, but has attended strictly to his occupation as a farmer and stock raiser, and now, at a ripe old age, finds himself surrounded by the comforts of life and a competency of this world's goods.

Murray A. Cooper, son of William and Eleanor Cooper, was born in Franklin township, September 18, 1849. He was educated at the Southwestern State Normal College of Pennsylvania, and at Union College Ohio. At the age of seventeen he commenced teaching, and continued in that vocation in Ohio and Pennsylvania. Read medicine but never practiced. On September 18, 1871, he established the Washington Advance (name changed to Observer), with H. B. Durant as partner, and continued its publication until November, 1873. This he sold and then purchased the Mt. Pleasant (Penn.) Journal, which he edited and published five years. He was recording secretary of the Pennsylvania Editorial Association in 1877. In 1879 he located in Steubenville, Ohio, and was connected with the Herald two years. For three years he was special correspondent with the Cincinnati Gazette. Owing to failing health, Mr. Cooper retired from newspaper work in 1884, and turned his attention to farming and stock raising, locating upon the home farm in Franklin township. In 1890 he became interested in Dorset Horn sheep, and was the first to introduce this important breed of English sheep into western Pennsylvania. In June, 1891, he made an importation from the best flocks in England. On March 31, 1891, at Pittsburgh, Penn., he assisted in organizing the Dorset Horn Sheep Breeders Association of America, being unanimously elected secretary and treasurer of the organization; re-elected in 1892, and January 11, 1893, in New York City, was elected to the same position. He is now a resident of Washington, Penn., where he conducts the business of the Association, which has become one of the most successful organizations of the kind in the country, having members in twenty-four States, Canada and England. In politics he is a strong Republican, and in religion he is a Presbyterian.

JAMES CALDWELL, a well-known farmer of Hanover township, is of Irish descent. His grandfather, James Caldwell, was born, reared and married in Ireland, and finally immigrating to America, located in Hanover township, near Paris, Washington county, Penn. In the midst of a wild and lonely forest his cabin was erected, and he passed the remainder of his life as a "tiller of the soil." He and his wife died, and they were buried in the Paris cemetery. James Caldwell was a prominent man, highly respected by all, and was elected a justice of the peace by the Democratic party, of which he was an enthusiastic supporter. The children of this family were as follows: Samuel, who owned, lived and died on a little farm now owned by John McClurg, adjoining the home farm on the north; William, who lived in Carroll county, Ohio; Joseph, who resided in Hanover township, this county; Elizabeth, married to Matthew Russell, of Hanover township; Thomas, of whom further mention is made; Jane, Mrs. Parks; Andrew; Robert and James; all are now deceased.

Thomas Caldwell was born in 1805, near Paris, Hanover township, Washington county, Penn., on the farm where his father first located, on his arrival in the county. He was reared on the home farm, and attended the subscription schools. In early manhood he was married to Jane, daughter of Samuel Carson, a native of Ireland, who came to America with her parents when very young, and they located in Carroll county, Ohio. Thomas and Jane Caldwell located on the home farm, near Paris, this county, where he successfully followed agriculture during the remainder of his active life. He was a popular citizen, took an active interest in elections, and during almost every political demonstration his wagon and horses bore an enthusiastic load of Democrats to the meeting. He passed away in 1875, and in 1885 the wife of his youth was laid to rest by his side in Paris cemetery.

James Caldwell, son of Thomas and Jane Caldwell, was born January 26, 1841, on the same farm which he now owns and resides upon. He attended the common schools, and when a young man began to learn the carpenter trade under David Met'urg. After serving his apprenticeship he followed his business until his marriage, February 17, 1876, to Amanda Elizabeth Freshwater, who was born March 1, 1852, daughter of Archibald Freshwater, of Hanover township, this county. After his marriage he located on the old Caldwell homestead near Paris, where he is yet living, devoting his attention to general farming and stock raising. In politics he has always been a Democrat, but gives his personal business the greater portion of his time. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Paris, which he has served in various offices. His children are: Charles, Elizabeth, James L., Jenny, Robert C., Grover C., Mina, Clara Bell and Donald D., of whom Robert C. and Grover C. died when young.

DANIEL DUNN (deceased) was a native of Greene county, Penn., born December 6, 1807. His father, Samuel Dunn, was a native of New Jersey, born in 1765. When a young man he moved to Greene county, Penn., where he married Jane McIntire, of the same county, who bore him six children: Joseph, William, Daniel, Edmund, Elizabeth and Anna.

Daniel, the third child in the order of their birth, left home at the age of twelve years, and became an apprentice in Buckingham's woolen factory, at Ten Mile creek, Washington county, where he learned the trade of carder. He married, in 1834, Sarah Baker, who was born November 9, 1813, a daughter of David Baker, of East Bethlehem township, where the father had settled at an early day, having come from New Jersey with his father. For six years succeeding his marriage, Daniel Dunn worked at his trade, near Clarksville, Greene county. In 1840 he purchased the farm, one-half mile west of what is now Dunn's Station, upon which his widow still resides. Here he remained, giving his attention to his farm, until his death, December 27, 1862. Daniel Dunn was a representative self-made man. Starting under the most adverse circumstances, he made a success of life, and left an unsullied record. He reared a family of nine chilchildren (six of whom are living): Malinda Jaue, born October 4, 1835, married to Milton Day, and residing in Waynesburgh, Greene county; Emmeline, born January 30, 1838, married to Oliver Day, of Somerville, Mo., where they now reside; Edward, born August 29, 1840, married to Rhoda Yeagly, of Connellsville, Penn., at which place they make their residence; David B., born March 7, 1843, married to Mary E. Auld, of Morris township, where he resides; Margaret Ann, born November 3, 1845, married to J. N. Minton (now deceased), and residing in Morris township; Hiram B., born June 15, 1848, died October 29, 1854; Alexander H. (of whom special mention is made further on); Florella W., born December 2, 1854, married to Thomas Rice, of Greene county, and died May 13, 1877; Apollon B., born in October, 1858, died June 11, 1881.

Alexander Hamilton Dunn is one of the most prosperous young farmers of Morris township. He was born January 25, 1851, was reared to farm life, and received a common-school education. Since starting out life for himself he has given his attention wholly to farming and stock raising. He manages the old home farm, upon which he raises considerable graded stock. He was married January 9, 1878, to Maria J. Loughman, a daughter of Frederick Loughman, of Morris township, Greene county, and they have one child, Clarence M., born December 5, 1878. In politics Mr. Dunn is an ardent Republican. Both he and his wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

MRS. RACHEL WILSON (widow of Thomas Wilson, of Somerset township) was born November 9, 1833, in Washington county, Penn., and is a representative of one of the oldest families of the county. She is a daughter of Nicholas Peese, a native of this county, born in 1812, who when a young man was united in marriage with Elizabeth Wallar, who was born in 1806. After his marriage Mr. Peese settled on a farm where children were born to their union as follows: Rachel (the lady of whom this sketch is written), Lydia, Lawrence (farming in Somerset township), George W. (farming in South Strabane township), William (an agriculturist of Hardin county, Ohio), Andrew (a farmer of Hardin county, Ohio), Martha A. (wife of Homer Vaughn, also of Hardin county, Ohio), Mary E., Nancy (married to George Wygandt, a farmer of South Strabane township) and Nicholas. The father died in 1877, in South Strabane township, the mother in 1885; both were members of the Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church.

Rachel Peese grew to womanhood in the home of her parents, and on June 24, 1856, gave her hand in marriage to Thomas Wilson, a farmer, who was born December 16, 1835, in Washington county, Penn., a son of James and Mary (Van-Eman) Wilson. He died December 3, 1878. In religious faith he was a member of the Presbyterian Church, of which Mrs. Wilson is also a member.

WILLIAM F. RALSTON was born August 31, 1816, in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his school days in the vicinity. His father, Rev. Samuel Ralston, was born in 1758, in Ireland, and received a theological education at Glasgow, Scotland. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery, and soon afterward immigrated to America. He settled in Washington county, Penn., and preached several years in Monongahela City, and Horse-Shoe; then took charge of the Mingo church, of which he was pastor during his later life. His mother afterward came to America, and resided with him and another son, Ralf, for some time on the latter's farm of 150 acres in Carroll township; died there and was buried at Mingo. Samuel Ralston was married to Rachel, daughter of William Ferguson, and children were born to them, as follows: Sarah (wife of Benjamin Williams), Matilda, Mary (Mrs. James McVey, of Mingo creek), James, Margaret (wife of Samuel Kidoo), Lizzie (Mrs. Robert Patten), Samuel, and William F.

William F. Ralston grew to manhood in his native county, and on March 8, 1837, was married to Jane R. Hackett, a native of Chester county, Penn., whose father, David Hackett, is a well-known agriculturist of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Ralston have had three sons and two daughters, namely: Samuel (who served three years in the First Pennsylvania Cavalry under a cousin, Joseph William, and was slightly wounded), James H., Martha (deceased), Margaret, and William.

Mr. Ralston owns thirty acres of land upon which he is now boring a gas well. He is a Republican, has taken an active interest in local politics, and served in various township offices. He is the only remaining one of the family of Samuel Ralston.

THE FURNIER FAMILY in Fallowfield township come of French ancestry, David Furnier, the first of them to emigrate to America, having been a native of France, from which country he fled in the days of religious persecution.

He first located near Hagerstown, Maryland, afterward coming to Washington county, Pennsylvania, and making a settlement near Speers run some time prior to 1772. In 1798 he purchased of Henry Speers a tract of ninety-four acres of land near the stream just mentioned, having a river front of 100 rods. A log house was erected on this land either by Speers or Furnier, probably the latter. In addition to this tract David Furnier also owned a large portion of the land now in the possession of the heirs of Levi Johnson, the title of which has long been disputed. In 1823 this land was deeded by the heirs of Furnier to Solomon Speers, who, in turn, sold it to L. M. Speers, and it is now the property of S. F. and William Jones. A log flouring-mill was erected on this land many years ago, just below the stone house of Samuel McKean. The original owners of this mill are not certainly known, but it is supposed that Elliott and Williams erected on a lease of several years' duration. At all events David Furnier was the sole proprietor of both mill and store in 1790, and also conducted a distillery—the entire business being known as the “Barter Mills,” the name having been characteristic of the enterprise. This was the first store opened in that locality, and at the same time David Furnier owned an establishment at Devore's Ferry, opposite Monongahela City, and one at Pittsburgh. He did an immense business, keeping all kinds of goods, including groceries, etc., and of the vast quantities of grain brought in from the surrounding country the rye was transformed into whiskey, while the wheat sold in adjacent cities. This was perhaps the largest business existing at that time in the Valley. The old distillery was situated above the log mill, and was afterward supplanted by the stone still-house, which was near the greenhouse of Samuel McKean. In 1803 a large brick mill was erected near the present stone bridge crossing Speers run, but it was torn down in 1837, part of the brick being yet in use in the old schoolhouse in Gould's hollow. A sawmill was afterward erected by Solomon Speers, near the site of the old brick mill. David Furnier had three brothers, Henry, John and James, of whom James lived with Henry in Washington county, and was never married. He died of sunstroke. John, who was also a bachelor, owned a tannery on the present farm of John Irons, and was also proprietor of a store at Becket's place, now Degg's ferry. Henry, the remaining brother of David Furnier, had two sons, David and Simeon. The father erected the stone part of the house now owned by Philip Johnson, where his son, Simeon Furnier, died in 1848. The latter was married to Jane Stout, and their children were Henry, Jesse, John W., William, Simeon and Mary. David, eldest son of Henry Furnier, had four children, namely: Bela, Matilda, Lucinda (wife of Judge James Fuller, of Perryopolis, Penn.) and Bowman.

DAVID FURNIER was born in 1825, in Adams county, Ohio, and in 1827 was brought by his parents to Washington county, Penn. Here he was educated, and when a young man he worked on a steamboat. On October 15, 1850, Mr. Furnier was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Stephen Colvin, and she has borne him two sons and four daughters, namely: Eliza S., wife of Henry Carson; Florentine; Henry, of whom a sketch follows; Joan; Lincoln, married to Lydia Sickman; and Allie, living at home. Mr. Furnier is distantly related to the Marquis de La Fayette, that famous patriot (now so long since deceased) having been a cousin of Mr. Furnier's grandfather. David Furnier's mother was a Dunlevy, and her mother was a Crawford, a full cousin of Col. Crawford, who was burned at the stake by the Indians in what is now Crawford county, Ohio.

HENRY FURNIER, son of David and Elizabeth (Colvin) Furnier, was born October 8, 1855, on the home farm in Fallowfield township, Washington county, Penn. He attended the common schools, was early inducted into the mysteries of agriculture, and has since continued to follow rural life. In October, 1882, he married Martha, daughter of Henry Frye, a well-known agriculturist of Washington county, Penn., and they have had two children: Charles L. and Edna A., both living with their parents. The home farm contains eighty-four acres of land, situated five miles from Monongahela City.

MOSES SCOTT (deceased) was a native of Washington county, Penn., born in Union township, October 12, 1809. He was of Irish descent, his father, Thomas Scott, having emigrated from Ireland to America in 1796, being then a young man of some twenty-two summers.

After landing, Thomas Scott proceeded to this county, making a settlement on Mingo creek in Union township, where he cleared the land and followed farming and milling until 1850, in which year he moved into Monongahela City, and there ended his useful life, dying February 19, 1856. In politics he was a Whig, in religion a member of the Mingo Creek Presbyterian Church. In 1802 he had married Margaret Turner, a resident of the county, and the children born to them were Rebecca (Mrs. Franklin Goldthrop), William, Joseph, Alexander, Moses, Mary, John, James, Matilda (Mrs. James Rodgers), Elizabeth and Jane. The mother was called to her long home December 24, 1849.

Moses Scott, of whom this memoir is written, received a rudimentary education in the schools of the neighborhood, afterward attending Marshall's academy and a school in Monongahela City. He learned the milling business which he followed in his native township until 1850, when he came to Monongahela City. Here, in 1856, he opened a general grocery store, which he conducted several years, and then, selling out the business, moved to

Masses Scott

Beaver, same State, where he remained some three years, at the end of which time he returned to Monongahela City, and there passed the rest of his life, dying March 5, 1891. Moses Scott was married in 1855 to Miss Rowanna A. McFarland, of Franklin county, Penn. In his political affiliations he was for some time a Republican, but in the later years of his life he voted the Independent ticket. For five years he served as alderman of his adopted city. In early life he identified himself with the Presbyterian Church, but afterward enlisted under the banner of the Baptist faith. His widow is still a resident of Monongahela.

James Scott, M. D., brother of Moses, was born in Union township, April 15, 1815. In the subscription schools and at Marshall's academy he received a liberal education. He studied medicine, and at Ohio Medical College took his degree, after which he commenced practice at Lebanon, Warren Co., Ohio. He was a very prominent and influential man, and for some time represented his State in the Legislature on the Republican ticket. He married Hannah Fowler, of Cincinnati, and by her had one child that died young. In church connection the Doctor is a Presbyterian.

MRS. SUSANNAH ALLEN, a well-known and intelligent lady of Cross Creek township, was born November 21, 1823, a daughter of the late John Harper, of Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn. On November 19, 1850, she was united in marriage with Josiah Allen, son of John Allen.

John Allen was born in Chambersburgh, Penn., and, coming to Washington county about the year 1800, settled on the farm now occupied by his descendants. The land was then covered with dense forest, but two acres had been cleared off, and an orchard planted. Here the young pioneer constructed a cabin from round logs, and immediately brought his bride (Miss Anna Tweed) to assist in building the new home. He then began clearing the forest from the land, and soon the wild, uncultivated region assumed an air of civilization as various improvements were made. Time passed on, and the once lonely forest rang with the shouts of happy children, who came to bless the homes of the early pioneers. To John and Anna Allen were born Martha, John, Josiah, Nancy, Samuel and William, all now deceased.

Josiah Allen was born November 15, 1808, on the home farm, in the house where his widow is now living. His boyhood days were passed at home, in attending to the usual farm duties. After his marriage to Susannah Harper they settled on the old farm, where children were born to them as follows: William Harper, born August 24, 1851, married to Emma Anderson, daughter of H. C.

Anderson, of Cross Creek township) they have four children, namely: John Ellsworth, Lemuel Harper, Emma M. (deceased in infancy) and William Earl); Anna Martha, born November 30, 1852; Phoebe Jane, born March 14, 1854; John Graham, born July 11, 1855; Ada Ethelinda, born May 26, 1857; Ella Agnes, born March 21, 1859; Francinia Elizabeth (wife of Joseph Marquis), born January 23, 1861; James Craig, born October 14, 1862; and Josiah Harvey, born December 19, 1865. Of this family, Phoebe Jane, John Graham and Ada Ethelinda are deceased. Mr. Allen was a staunch Democrat, but took no active part in politics. He was a consistent member and liberal supporter of the Presbyterian Church of Cross Creek village. He commanded the respect and admiration of all who knew him, being one of the most useful, honorable and public-spirited men of the community. Josiah Allen died July 14, 1883. At the time of his death he owned 137 acres of land, which was left to his widow and children.

COLIN L. BAKER is a son of Nathan Baker and a grandson of Enoch Baker, whose father (Nathan) lived in Maryland, where, on November 28, 1788, Enoch was born, and whence when an infant he was brought to Pennsylvania. Although deprived of educational opportunities, Enoch Baker became a successful man. He first learned blacksmithing, and after serving his time at that trade worked four years as a journeyman; then purchased a farm, and passed the remainder of his life in agricultural pursuits, at one time being owner of 500 acres in Amwell township. On March 3, 1814, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Jennings, and to them were born the following children: Nathan, Lemuel, Elmer, Evans, Parmelia (deceased), David (deceased), Mrs. Lucinda Stockdale (deceased) and Daniel. Enoch Baker was a very prominent Republican. In religion he was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, with which he united in 1831, ever taking an active interest in all questions touching its welfare. His parents were Quakers. He died August 29, 1861, his wife following him to the "Better Land" August 5, 1862.

Nathan Baker was born October 21, 1816, on the old home farm in Amwell township, Washington county, and obtained his education in the common schools, which at that early day afforded but meager opportunities; yet such as they were he turned to good account, and he has become a well-informed man. He left home in 1845, and the same year was wedded to Maria Horan, who bore him four sons: John W., born May 16, 1846; David E., born January 5, 1849; Robert C., born June 24, 1854, and Colin L., born July 11, 1856.

Mr. Baker resided on two or three different farms, remaining on each about a year, and finally settled on a place where he remained twenty-one years, thence removed to the home he now occupies. He is a Republican, and has always been actively interested in public matters. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

Colin L. Baker was born on the old farm, and moved with his father to the home where he now lives. He received a common-school education, and afterward attended the Pleasant Valley Academy, preparing himself for the profession of a teacher, which, however, he never followed. On October 12, 1883, he was united in marriage with Roberta Horn, of Amwell township, and to their union four children have been born: Bernard, born August 4, 1885; Ruby and Cherry (twins), born August 5, 1886, and Nellie, born April 4, 1889. He is a successful business man, an extensive reader and student of history, and in politics is one of the most active young Republicans in the township.

CHARLES PITTMAN, a much esteemed, progressive citizen of Hopewell township, one who has made his own way to the front ranks of business life, is a son of Frederick and Mary Ann (Armstrong) Pittman, the former a native of Maryland, the latter of Germany, whence she came to the United States when twenty years of age. Frederick and Mary Ann Pittman were the parents of six children, namely: William, John, Charles, Fred, John and Anna. The father died in 1852.

Charles Pittman was born in 1849 in Steubenville, Ohio. After the death of the father his mother removed to Washington, afterward settling in South Strabane township, this county, where Charles attended school. The support of the family depending upon the sons, Charles had little opportunity for securing an education. After the Civil war broke out, William, the eldest son, entered the service, in the Eighteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, remaining during the conflict. The brunt of the family support then fell upon Charles, who was the next in age, his elder brother, John, being previously deceased. After William returned from the army, the sons all worked out until they secured sufficient funds to start farming for themselves. About three years after his return from the service, William married, went West, and is now residing near Mexico, Missouri. Charles and his other brothers worked together until 1874, when he was married to Harriet Linn, daughter of "Squire" Linn, of North Strabane township. Charles Pittman resided in that township for eight years after his marriage, then lived in Washington for two years, in 1884 settling in Hopewell township, where he is now residing. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Pittman, named as follows: Sadie, Lorena, Mot, Mary, Claretta, Garnet, and Charles (deceased at the age of seven months). The farm is located north of the Washington and Middletown road at Tarrtown schoolhouse. It consists of 127 acres, beautifully situated, on three sides sloping gently toward the center where his buildings are located, while the fourth side opens out into the beautiful Cross Creek valley. Mr. Pittman gives his attention almost entirely to farming, raising only such stock as is required in carrying on his business. He takes little part in political questions other than to attend the elections. In local affairs he is independent, but in State and National contests he votes with the Democratic party.

JOHN I. CARSON, a prominent real estate and insurance broker in the borough of Washington, is a native of Virginia, born in Ohio county October 21, 1853.

Richard Carson, grandfather of subject, an American by birth, married Elizabeth Irwin, who bore him the following children: Abner, John, Nancy, Joseph, David, Elizabeth and Irwin. He moved to Ohio county, Va., from Dauphin county, Penn. (near Harrisburg), some time in the latter part of the eighteenth century, and there purchased the farm which was afterward occupied by his son Joseph. He served in the war of 1812, and while on his way home from the army died at Delaware, Ohio; his widow subsequently married William Faris. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Ridge Presbyterian Church at West Alexander, in which he was an elder.

Joseph Carson, father of John I., was born August 21, 1801, in Ohio county, Va., on the old home farm, and received his education at the subscription schools of the period. For several years he taught in his native county, one of his scholars being Prof. Ray. In 1828 Mr. Carson married Anna, daughter of William Brown, of Ohio county, Virginia, and their children were Elizabeth (Mrs. Robert Criswell), Hannah J. (Mrs. Harvey J. Milligan), Richard, Mary A. (Mrs. David B. Boggs), Sarah (Mrs. Van-Tassell), William, Almira S. (deceased), Harriet (deceased), Vincent B. and John I. The father died July 20, 1887, on the farm on which he was born, after a long life of usefulness, activity and enterprise, being always deeply interested in religious and educational affairs. He was a straight Democrat, and served as a justice of the peace; he was a consistent member of the West Alexander Presbyterian Church, in which he was an elder for a quarter of a century.

John I. Carson, the youngest in the family of ten children born to Joseph and Anna (Brown) Carson, received his rudimentary education at the common schools of the vicinity of his place of birth, and West Alexander Academy, and at the age of sixteen he entered Waynesburgh College. On completing his studies he taught school in Ohio and Marshall counties, W. Va., and finally in Peoria county, Ill., from which latter locality he returned to his old home in 1875. On November 25 of that year Mr. Carson was married to Josephine M., daughter of Perry Whitham, of Ohio county, W. Va., and the children that have blessed this union are named respectively Ross Milligan, Glenn Pere, Muriel Joy and Salome. After marriage our subject resided in Chesterfield county, Va., four or five years, farming; thence moved to Philadelphia as clerk in a commission house, and from there, after one year's sojourn, came to West Alexander, and was principal of the Public Schools of West Alexander, this county, 1882. In July, 1891, he came to Washington and entered into partnership with J. W. Murray as pension agents, and in the real-estate insurance and loan business. Mr. Carson is a Republican, and in 1887 he was elected a justice of the peace at West Alexander, serving until 1892, and in 1892-93 he was secretary of the Republican County Committee. Mr. Carson is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and was leader of the choir at West Alexander ten years. On January 1, 1893, he was appointed deputy-collector of Internal Revenue of the Twenty-third District, having charge of the Seventh Division, embracing Washington, Greene, and part of Fayette counties.

MRS. MARGARET DUNBAR was born November 10, 1838, near Bulger, Smith township, Washington Co., Penn., a daughter of John S. Russell, who was a son of William Russell.

William Russell was born in the latter part of the last century, in Smith township, this county, and received a somewhat limited school training, as the educational opportunities of those days were comparatively meager and primitive. In 1798 he was married to Nancy Strain, whose parents were early settlers in Smith township, this county. In about 1800 Mr. and Mrs. Russell, with an infant son, removed to Portage county, Ohio, residing there until the close of the war of 1812, in which William served as a soldier. Being dissatisfied with the country, he returned, about 1815, to Smith township, locating near the line of Cross Creek township, where he continued to follow farming till his death. In politics he was a Democrat. His wife died several years prior to his demise, and left the following children: Abraham (deceased in this county at the age of eighty-five; was never married), Sarah (deceased wife of James Fulton, formerly of Cross Creek township, afterward of Hanover township, this county), John S., Samantha (cared for her father in his old age, and died unmarried) and James (deceased in Smith township).

John S. Russell was born February 14, 1806, on the home farm, in Portage county, Ohio, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. On February 12, 1833, he married Jane Simpson, who was born September 3, 1815, daughter of James and Ellen (Stewart) Simpson, early residents of the township. The children born to this union were as follows: Ellen (living in Burgettstown, Penn., unmarried), Cynthia (unmarried, also residing in Burgettstown), Margaret (widow of James Dunbar), Ophelia (Mrs. Hugh Wilson, of Hanover township, this county), William S., Agnes (an unmarried lady of Burgettstown, Penn.), James C. (an agriculturist of Smith township) and David A. (deceased farmer of Smith township). The mother of this family died July 23, 1851, and Mr. Russell afterward wedded Mary A. Vincent, who was born February 20, 1818, daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Rea) Vincent, of Mt. Pleasant township, this county. Two children were born to John S. and Mary A. (Vincent) Russell: John (deceased in youth) and Sarah (Mrs. D. W. Smith, of Smith township, this county). After his first marriage Mr. John S. Russell settled on a farm one mile west of Bulger, Smith township, where his life was passed successfully in agricultural pursuits. Year by year his possessions increased, until by dint of careful management, business sagacity and good financiering he became one of the most extensive wool growers and largest landholders of the township, at the time of his death owning nearly 600 acres of valuable and productive real estate. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church, which he served as an elder. He died September 15, 1879.

James Dunbar, who became the husband of Margaret Russell, was one of the most highly esteemed farmers of Smith township, and was a representative of an old and prominent family. His grandfather, James Dunbar, was born near Belfast, County Antrim, Ireland, and, being of an adventurous disposition, became a sailor in early life. He came to America and made a permanent settlement on Raccoon creek, Smith township, this county, where he was obliged to "grub out" a site for the first cabin which he erected; but his energy knew no discouragement, and success at length crowned his efforts. He was united in marriage with Mary McConnell, of Robinson township, this county, who bore him twelve children, namely: James, Jane, Thomas, Joseph, Robert, Martin, Elizabeth, John, Samuel, Mary, William, and an infant son (deceased). In the latter part of his life Mr. Dunbar lived for some time in Robinson township, this county. Although beginning life a poor sailor boy, he was possessed of the right spirit of perseverance, and at the time of his death was a wealthy man. He died in 1842, having been preceded by his wife many years. Thomas Dunbar (a son of James and Mary (McConnell) Dunbar) was born and reared on his father's farm in Robinson township, this county, and received a common-school education. He was married to Mary Scott, who bore him three children. After her death he married Mrs. Susanna (Scott) McBride, widow of John McBride. She bore him no children. He died at an advanced age; his widow is yet living in Bavington, this county.

James Dunbar, son of Thomas Dunbar, was born April 3, 1834, in Robinson township, this county, was reared to manhood on his father's farm, and obtained a common-school education. On December 18, 1862, he was united in marriage with Margaret Russell, and three children were born to them: John T. (deceased in infancy), Mary E., and Thomas E. (managing the home farm). After his marriage Mr. Dunbar purchased the farm, which he owned and cultivated at the time of his death. It is located about one mile and a half south of Bavington, in Smith township. He devoted some attention to stock raising. In politics he was a strong adherent to the principles embodied in the Democratic party. He was a member of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church, giving liberally to its maintenance. Mr. Dunbar passed away May 10, 1891, and since his death his widow has resided on the farm, which is managed by her son Thomas E.

SAMUEL CASTNER is one of those successful farmers who merit the hearty commendation of every good citizen, for the manner in which they have achieved such favorable results, by years of patient toil.

He is a son of George Castner, whose father was born in Germany, and in early manhood immigrated to America. He located in New Jersey and was there married, passing the remainder of his life in his adopted State. Among the children of this couple was the son George, who was married to Susan Nicholson, of Millin county, Penn., and reared the following children: Mary, Sydney, James, Frederick (living in Holmes county, Ohio), William, Nancy (widow of Jacob Miller, of Donegal township), Samuel, Susan (living near Midway, Penn.), George (lived in Kentucky), Hannah, Sarah (living in Missouri), Maggie (widow of James Davis, of Bethany, W. Va.), Eliza and John T. (a farmer of Hopewell township). Of this family Mary, Sydney, James, William, George, Hannah and Eliza are deceased. Mr. Castner removed to Washington county, Penn., some years after his marriage, and died there in the year 1860, being followed by his wife in 1864.

Samuel Castner (subject of sketch) was born August 25, 1823, in Millin county, Penn., and attended the country schools in that vicinity, until he became old enough to assist on the farm. His parents were growing old and soon became dependent upon him, but in a short time he accumulated enough to support them, and continued to supply their needs as long as they lived. In 1848 Mr. Castner was united in marriage with Martha Dunbar (who was born March 2, 1832), daughter of James and Mary (Elder) Dunbar. The children born to them were as follows: Susan (Mrs. Albert Liggett, of Hopewell township), James D. (of Bethany, W. Va.), George J., Mary L. and Samuel W. (all three of whom are deceased), Elmer E. E. (a carpenter of Bethany, W. Va.), and Charles A. (living at home). Mr. Castner passed the first portion of his married life near Burgettstown, Penn., and then moved to Judge McKeever's farm, where he resided as a tenant for seventeen years. Five years previous to leaving this place he bought an adjoining farm, and then managed both places. In the year 1875 he sold the farm in Hopewell township, and purchased the valuable property where he now resides, which is situated in the eastern part of Independence township, near the Hopewell line. Mr. Castner is extensively engaged in raising stock, the farm being well managed, and capable of accommodating a large amount of stock. Mr. Castner has been the architect of his own fortune, but like the greater portion of the successful citizens, much of his prosperity is justly due to the sympathy, tact and assistance of the faithful wife who has shared the joys and sorrows of her husband's life. Politically, he was formerly a Whig and an active Abolitionist, feeding and sheltering many a fugitive, while they attempted to escape from the cruel bonds of slavery. During the slavery troubles, he frequently had six or eight negroes under his protection at one time. He is now a Republican. Both he and his wife are members of the M. E. Church.

WILLIAM HENRY DAGUE. The great-grandfather of this gentleman, in company with two brothers, immigrated to America some time during the last century, and while crossing the ocean a warm discussion concerning their different religious views having arisen among the passengers, the three brothers took part in the debate, in which their opinions differed. The dispute became so heated that the brothers quarreled, and upon landing in New York each went his own way, and they never met again. One of them went to Maryland, and there had children, one of whom, John, was born in 1788. After a stay of some years in Maryland, the family set out for Pennsylvania, the journey across the mountains being made with horses and mules. John and a twin brother were placed in pack-saddles (with only their heads protruding), which were thrown across the back of a mule. The family settled in West Bethlehem township, Washington county, where John grew to manhood on his father's farm, in the cultivation of which he assisted. He married Catherine Horn, a native of Germany, to whom were born children as follows: Jacob, John, Henry, Samuel, Levi, Dewalt, George, Catherine, Elizabeth, Ann and Lavina, all of whom are now deceased, with the exceptions of Levi and Ann, who are residents of Washington county. Of this family, Henry was born in West Bethlehem township, and here grew to manhood, assisting his father in the duties of the farm. He married Eliza Amos, and to them were born John, George, Levi, Mordecai, Mary Ann, Eliza Jane, Rachel M. and William Henry.

William Henry Dague was born November 13, 1848, in West Bethlehem township, and attended school till twelve years of age, when, much to his regret, he was taken from his books to assist his father on the farm. However, his ambition to secure an education was not dampened, for he occupied every spare moment in study. When a young man he attended school twelve weeks, two terms in the Southwestern State Normal School at California, this county, and taught in the common schools for four winter terms. On March 13, 1879, he married Isabell U. Ross, a daughter of Samuel Ross, and then settled upon the farm of 173 acres which he now owns in West Bethlehem township. To Mr. and Mrs. William H. Dague have been born the following children: Hubert R. (who when six years of age lost his right arm), Samuel Blaine, William Grant, Ethel G. and Mabel B., all yet at home. Mr. Dague is a Republican, and has been elected to the office of school director of his township. He belongs to the Lutheran Church, while his wife is a member of the Methodist Church. Mr. Dague is one of the most enterprising and esteemed residents of West Bethlehem township.

DEMAS ELWOOD TOMBAUGH is a worthy representative of one of the prominent families of West Bethlehem township. His grandfather, Matthias Tombaugh, who was of German parentage, when the country was yet new settled in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn. It was then perilous to travel after nightfall, as the wolves were very numerous and fierce. He married Rachel Spohn, and reared the following family: Solomon, John, George, Matthias, Eli, Isaac and Jacob (twins), Adam, Lavina, and Mary. Of these, Lavina, Mary and Matthias are deceased. While filling the office of superintendent of schools of Livingston county, Ill., Matthias was accidentally drowned. He was out fishing with several companions, when the boat suddenly lurched, which caused one of his friends to be thrown overboard. Matthias made an heroic attempt to rescue him, succeeding at the expense of his own life. Jacob now resides in Livingston county, Ill., where he is a prosperous and well-known farmer. Adam lives in Bond county, Ill., where he is esteemed by all who know him. John, Isaac and Eli are residents of Washington county, and are influential farmers.

Solomon Tombaugh, the father of Demas Elwood, was born in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn., in 1823. His boyhood was spent upon his father's farm, and he received a fair education. When a young man he taught school one year in Indiana, and after his return to Washington county married Lydia Leatherman, daughter of John Leatherman, who was one of the first and strongest Abolitionists of Washington county. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Tombaugh: Irvin, John, Leon, Demas Elwood, James, Byron, Lucy, Ida and Annie. Of these, Irvin, Lucy, and Annie are dead; John is a resident of West Bethlehem township; Leon is a practising physician in Millburn, Lake Co., Ill.; James is a minister of the Gospel, residing in Fayette county, Ohio; Byron is county superintendent of schools, and lives in Washington (the county seat); Ida is with her husband, David Hootman, in Philadelphia.

Demas Elwood Tombaugh was born November 22, 1854, in West Bethlehem township, this county, and received a common-school education. He was married November 20, 1879, to Lola Wilson, a daughter of Harvey Wilson, of Somerset township. Both Mr. and Mrs. Tombaugh are influential members of the society in which they move, and are esteemed by all who have their acquaintance. The Tombaughs are all Republicans, and no Tombaugh has ever asked for political office, save occasionally, and then it is for an educational office.

ZEDIKER. John Zediker, son of Louis Zediker, was born in 1818, on the family home place in South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn. In his boyhood he attended the subscription schools of the vicinity, in the winter time, while in the summer months he assisted his father in the duties of the farm. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Susan, daughter of John Kuntz, also a resident of Washington county. To Mr. and Mrs. Zediker were born seven children, namely: Maria J. (Mrs. Andrew Plymire), Lizzie, Isabella (Mrs. Boyd Zediker), Matthew C., Sarah A., Mary (Mrs. Leroy Van Kirk) and Lewis M. Mr. Zediker began life on the home place in South Strabane township, and afterward removed to the farm which is now the home of his sons. He was frequently intrusted with the business of others, and was always faithful to any confidence which had been thus reposed in him. An ardent friend to educational progress, he was ever active in any enterprise tending to the improvement of the schools. He was equally enthusiastic in religious matters, as a leading member of the United Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek. In political opinions he was formerly a Whig, and after the formation of the Republican party, became actively identified with it. He served many years in the township as justice of the peace, being elected by an almost unanimous vote, although the Democratic party were in the majority in that locality. He passed from life May 24, 1887, and was buried at Pigeon Creek. His widow still resides on the home farm.

MATTHEW C. ZEDIKER, son of John and Susan (Kuntz) Zediker, was born on the home farm in South Strabane township, Washington county, and has there passed his entire life. His education, obtained at the common schools, has been improved by general observation, reading and study. On November 5, 1877, he was united in marriage with Jennie, daughter of John Moninger, and they have three children: Edith P., Sheldon R. and Hester C. Mr. Zediker is one of the leading young men of his township, and in politics is a prominent Republican. He is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek.

LEWIS M. ZEDIKER, son of John and Susan (Kuntz) Zediker, was born in South Strabane township, this county, and received his education at the common schools of the neighborhood. On November 21, 1882, he was united in marriage with Annie, daughter of James Adams, and they have one son and one daughter: Harry W. and Ellen Jane. Mr. and Mrs. Zediker are living on the home place. He is an adherent of the United Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek, and in politics is a well-known Republican. Mr. Zediker has always resided in the vicinity of the place of his birth.

GEORGE KINDER was born May 30, 1831, near the place where he now lives, in West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn. His great-grandfather, George Kinder, resided on Plum Brush, and followed the Ohio and Mississippi rivers as a trader and boatman. For a time he was successful in business, but being overtaken by financial trouble, a few years later moved to New Orleans and never returned. His son George was born in East Bethlehem township, this county, and lived in that vicinity until after his marriage, when he was accidentally killed in a carding mill, which he owned and operated. The maternal grandfather of our subject, Christian Booze, was born in Greene county, Penn. He followed farming and carpentry, and eventually became a successful business man.

Valentine Kinder, the father of subject, was born in 1805, in East Bethlehem township. He received his education in the common schools, and was a good penman. When a young man he went to Galena, Ill., upon a mining expedition; thence proceeding to St. Louis, he there raised a crop of corn, and on returning home taught school for a time. He then married Miss Julia Booze, at which time his entire wealth amounted to the modest sum of $35. He located just below the present home of his son, George, where he remained two years, and then removed to West Mill. Six years later he bought the home of his son, Louis, where he lived a number of years; and thence removed to the old Nicholl farm, near Hillsboro. At the time of his death, which occurred June 12, 1890, he left $10,000 for distribution, having previously divided $50,000 among his children.

George Kinder, the subject of this sketch, received but a limited education in the country schools, as, being the eldest son, he had to work on the farm from early boyhood. Notwithstanding these disadvantages, being naturally a student, he is one of the best-read men in his township. Much of his life has been spent in farming, and he has given some time to the carpenter trade. He owns the farm of 163 acres where he resides, besides also other land. Mr. Kinder was married, in 1853, to Miss Esther A. Wilson, and children as follows have been born to them: James V., Calvin (deceased), Julius (was first married to Miss Emma Nichols, and later to Miss Ida McCarthy), Wilson, Frank S., White L., Emma Eliza and Vossier. Mr. Kinder is a Republican, and has been auditor of the township for many years, proving a most efficient officer. In church connection, he was formerly a Methodist, but about ten years ago, he united with the Old Christian Church; the family, however, are Methodists. Mr. Kinder is a representative self-made man, and has won the esteem and friendship of all who know him. [Since the above was prepared for the press, we have been informed of the death of Mr. George Kinder—Ed.]

MANNING M. BROCKMAN. Of the well-known and successful citizens of Smith township, Manning M. Brockman is prominent among the leaders. He is a son of John, whose father, Edward Brockman, was an agriculturist.

John Brockman was born in 1788, near Kennett Square, Chester Co., Penn. He learned the shoemaker's trade when a lad, and after serving an apprenticeship followed same for some time. In 1809 he was married to Jane Thomas, a native of the same county, who bore him one son, N. R. The mother died in 1811, and was buried in Chester county. In 1818 Mr. Brockman came to Washington county, locating in Claysville, where he followed his trade. On June 13, 1822, he was married to Margaret Martin, who was born January 17, 1798, in Donegal township, this county, daughter of Manning Martin, who was born in 1758, in County Donegal, Ireland, and coming to America settled one mile and a half southwest of Claysville, Donegal township, this county. To the union of John and Margaret (Martin) Brockman the following children were born: Margaret (Mrs. Amos Shreves) and Jane (Mrs. Aaron Lobaugh) (twins, both deceased), and Manning M. (subject of this sketch). N. R., the only son born to John and Jane (Thomas) Brockman, came with his father to East Finley township, Washington county, and followed farming till his death. After his second marriage John Brockman (the father of this family) resided in Claysville until 1837, when he removed to Coon Island, same county, and successfully followed farming for many years, being a very vigorous man up to the last of his life. In politics he was originally an Old-line Whig, then a Democrat, and in the latter portion of his life voted the Republican ticket, being a hearty supporter of each in turn. His wife died April 26, 1849, and he then resided with his children until his death, which event occurred December 2, 1870.

Manning M. Brockman was born September 7, 1827, in Claysville, Donegal township, this county, where he received a common-school education. On April 3, 1843, he began to learn the wagon maker's trade, of John M. Mahanna, at West Alexander, Donegal township. He remained there but a short time and then for three years worked in the shop of J. T. Lucas. In 1846 he became an employe of Busley & Little, extensive wagon makers on Main St., Wheeling, W. Va., and with them remained some time. He then returned to West Alexander, dividing his time between the last mentioned place and Burgettstown, and following his trade. On April 12, 1849, he married Julia P. Canon, who was born September 14, 1825, daughter of Joshua Canon, whose father was the founder of Canonsburg.

Manning M. and Julia P. Brockman were the parents of the following children: Leah M., widow of A. Wiley Montgomery, now living at the home of her father, with her son and daughter, Harry W. and Ella M.; Carrie A., Mrs. Robert E. Hill, of East Liverpool, Ohio; John C., deceased at the age of eighteen years; Calvin M., who died in youth; William H., a telegraph operator at Midway, Penn.; Amanda J., deceased in youth; Ella

R., wife of Dr. Gracey, of Jonesborough, Ark.; Cynthia W., deceased wife of A. M. Keys, of Smith township, and Harry E., a telegraph operator, of Burgettstown. After his marriage Mr. Brockman followed his trade in Burgettstown till March 1, 1852, when, in company with some others, he started to California on a gold-hunting expedition, taking the "water route." The distance to Pittsburgh was made partly on foot and partly by conveyance. The Pennsylvania R. R. was at that time completed as far as Turtle Creek, from which place they proceeded by stage to Latrobe, thence by rail to Johnstown. From the latter point they passed over the old "Inclined Plane" to Hollidaysburg, thence going by rail to New York, where they took passage on the vessel "Crescent City" to Aspinwall, at which place the journey across the Isthmus of Panama was begun. The first seventeen miles of this fever-haunted part of the route were traversed by rail, then they went by water, and the last twenty miles were walked by the whole party. After reaching Panama they embarked on the vessel "Panama," and April 7, 1852, landed at San Francisco. Mr. Brockman followed gold-mining in Placer and El Dorado counties for about one year after his arrival, meeting with fair success; but having concluded that gold was more easily and perhaps as quickly obtained by other means than mining, he decided to resume his trade, which he did for two years in the "gold-diggings." On September 16, 1854, he started on the homeward journey, embarking at San Francisco on the vessel "Sierra Nevada," which he left at San Juan, Nicaragua, thence traveling by way of Virgin Bay to the mouth of the San Juan river, in Costa Rica. He then took passage in the ship "Northern Light," which landed him at New York, whence he proceeded to Burgettstown, Penn., and here again he began to work at his trade.

On September 3, 1861, Mr. Brockman enlisted at New Brighton, Penn., in Company C, Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry, and was sent with the regiment to the Shenandoah Valley. At the close of the war he received an honorable discharge, and returning to Burgettstown, resumed his trade. In 1881 he began farming on the place adjoining Burgettstown, where he had located in 1861. Mr. Brockman was first a Whig, and is now a Republican; he is a leader in the political questions of his neighborhood, and has held various township offices. In 1869-70 he served as mercantile appraiser, and in 1879 became the successful one of eleven candidates for the office of county commissioner, which position he held from 1879 to 1881, inclusive; he has served two terms in this position. In 1892 he was again appointed to the office of mercantile appraiser, filling the duties incumbent upon him with judgment and ability. His acquaintance is very extensive throughout the county, few being more widely known or more universally esteemed. On January 6, 1892, he was called upon to mourn the death of his wife, who was buried in Burgettstown cemetery.

NOAH COX, prominent among the enterprising and intelligent agriculturists of East Bethlehem township, is a grandson of Christopher Cox, a native of Germany, whence in early life he emigrated to America, at once settled in Greene county, Penn., where he patented a large tract of land, which he improved. His children were John, Jessie, Hiram, Aaron, Christopher, Moses, Jacob, Matilda Ann, Mary and India, all now deceased with the possible exception of Mary, who, years ago, removed to Iowa. Grandfather Cox died at a very advanced age.

Jacob Cox, father of Noah, was born in 1762, in Greene county, Penn., and was reared on his father's farm, attending, during the winter months, for a year or two, the subscription school in the neighborhood, one of the first ever opened in Greene county. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Hartsoc, who came to America from the Fatherland about the time of Christopher Cox's immigration, making his new home in East Bethlehem township. Shortly after the birth of their son Noah, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Cox settled on the old Hartsoc homestead in that township, where they reared the following children: Nancy, Susan, Annie, Elizabeth, Catherine Ann, India Ann, Mary, Noah, Christopher, Jacob, Hiram, Andrew, Jonathan and Henry, of whom the following are yet living: Mary, relict of Joshua Martin; Henry, in Fayette county, Penn.; Christopher, in Summit county, Ohio; Hiram, in Iowa; Jacob and Andrew, both in Missouri, and Noah, in Washington county, Penn. The father died August 2, 1839, a patriotic Whig; the mother in March, 1875.

Mary Cox, sister of Noah, was married to Joshua Martin, by whom she had the following children: Brady (in Summit county, Ohio), Jacob (living near Bentleyville, this county), William (a graduate of a medical college, now residing in Lone Pine, Washington Co., Penn.), Kate (wife of George Matthews, of West Bethlehem township, this county), Emma (married to Samuel Hill, of East Bethlehem township), Sadie, Hattie (wife of Charles Hill), and Nannie, living with the subject of this sketch, as is also their mother. Joshua Martin died in August, 1871.

Noah Cox, of whom this memoir more particularly relates, was born March 12, 1819, in Greene county, Penn., and a short time thereafter his parents removed to East Bethlehem township, this county, as already related. He attended the subscription schools of the neighborhood of his new home, receiving a fairly liberal education for those early times, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. He owned one of the first threshing outfits in the county, and for fourteen years it did service throughout the vicinity. Mr. Cox never married, but with true filial piety remained with his parents, caring for them in their old age, and closing their eyes in death. As a philanthropist he is known far and near, and his many deeds of kindness toward those less fortunate have perpetuated his good name. He has reared many orphans, and in every way in his power befriended the worthy poor. It is stated on good authority that at one time he had in his house, and cared for, as many as fourteen orphans, two widows and two maiden ladies. Politically he is a Republican, and although frequently urged to accept office, has preferred to serve his country in other ways more beneficent and more in accordance with the generosity of his charitable nature and the warmth of his heart. His farm comprises 160 acres of prime land, the cultivation of which he superintends in person.

ROBERT J. STEWART. Among the citizens of Smith township, none can claim more noble ancestry than the gentleman of whom we write, he being descended from the Scottish royal house of Stewart, his great-great-grandfather having been Lord Stewart.

Many generations ago Lord Stewart left his highland home in Scotland, and settled in County Tyrone, Ireland, where some of his descendants yet remain (as Lord Robert, brother of James, remained as lord), while others of them emigrated to America. James Stewart embarked with his family for America on the ship "Doras," which was boarded while on the voyage by a British man-of-war. All able-bodied men on the "Doras" were impressed into the British navy, and Robert Stewart (a son of James), being eighteen years of age, was one of them, and he served on board a man-of-war for several months, when he was released. The youth then joined his parents in Washington county, Penn., settling in Mt. Pleasant township, and soon afterward he was united in marriage with Ann McGaugh, also a native of Ireland. Six children were born to their union, namely: John, Eliza T. (Mrs. Kidd), Sarah, Robert, James and Andrew.

John Stewart (a son of Robert and grandson of James) was born in 1818, in Jefferson township, this county, where he assisted in the duties of the farm during his earlier years. In 1843 he was married to Tamar McClurg, who was born in 1821, daughter of Joseph McClurg, and their children were Mary A., Sarah E., Robert J. (whose name opens this biography), Rachel L., Eliza J., and Cynthia M. (deceased). After his marriage John Stewart located in Jefferson township, where he followed farming till 1858. He then moved to a farm in Smith township, where he died August 14, 1881, his widow being laid beside him in 1888. John Stewart was successful in business, and generous and kind-hearted in private life. Politically he always voted the Democratic ticket, and he and his wife were members of the U. P. Church at Burgettstown.

Noah Cow

Robert J. Stewart was born April 2, 1849, in Jefferson township, this county, and received a common-school education. Being naturally adapted to work of a mechanical nature, he followed the carpenter trade without serving any apprenticeship, while he also farmed on the home place. On September 29, 1870, he married Elizabeth J. Johnston, who was born April 2, 1848, a daughter of Frederick Johnston, of Cecil township, this county. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart passed the first portion of their wedded life on a part of the home farm in Smith township, and in 1872 moved to Venice, same county, where he farmed for two years; then in 1874 he located on part of the home farm in Smith township, where he is now residing, all the present buildings on the place having been erected by his own hands. He is a prosperous farmer and stock raiser. Like his father he votes with the Democratic party, though taking no active part in the contests of the different factions. He and his wife are conscientious members of the United Presbyterian Church.

JOHAN J. RICHARDS, a representative citizen of East Pike Run township, is a son of Thomas Richards, who was born November 18, 1801, in the State of Maryland, where he grew to manhood, and on November 28, 1824, was united in marriage with Esther Richards, who was born June 14, 1807. They moved to Washington county, Penn., many years ago, and settled on a large tract of land in East Pike Run township, upon which he made many improvements. He was a Republican in political views, and in religion a member of the M. E. Church, with which his wife was also identified. They were the parents of three children, viz.: John J., Sarah A. (deceased), and one that died in infancy. The father died October 2, 1873, and was laid beside his wife, who passed away August 29, 1868.

John J. Richards was born September 30, 1829, on the home farm in East Pike Run township, where his school days were passed. On November 17, 1857, he married Elizabeth Ward, born August 10, 1830, in Washington county, Penn., a daughter of William Ward, who was born December 16, 1787, in Harford county, Md., and coming to Washington county, Penn., was there married to Pleasant Speers (born November 29, 1796), daughter of Henry and Nancy Speers, who were of Irish descent, and early settlers of Washington county. Mr. and Mrs. Ward were the parents of the following named children: Nancy, wife of James Warren; Solomon; Wilson; Rebecca; James; Elizabeth, wife of John J. Richards; Mary J.; Sarah M., wife of Noah Speers; Melissa, Henry, Martha and William (the latter three being now deceased). The father of this family was a Republican. He followed farming and blacksmithing in Allen township, this county, and was also a local Methodist minister, with which denomination he and his wife were identified. He died November 8, 1863, and Mrs. Ward entered the dark valley July 12, 1874.

Mr. and Mrs. Richards have passed their wedded life on the old homestead, consisting of 100 acres. An elegant two-story residence, a barn, and other buildings, have been erected upon this farm, which is an ideal rural home, furnished with all modern improvements. Mr. Richards is a Republican, and has served in nearly all the township offices. He and his wife are members of the M. E. Church.

DAVID MYERS. The Myers family are numerous in Washington county. They are of German descent, and trace their ancestry to one George Myers, who in 1785 purchased an extensive tract of land situated on the north branch of Pigeon creek, on the boundary line between Somerset and Nottingham townships. The tract, the greater part of which is yet in the possession of the family, contained about 700 acres. George Myers had eight or ten children, all of whom are now deceased. His descendants now living are named as follows: David, Henry, Andrew, Jesse, Samuel, Levi, Jacob, Hiram, Jeremiah, Abner, William, John and Anderson.

Jacob Myers, a son of George, was born in 1784 in Washington county, Penn., and was a lifelong farmer. In 1811 he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Swickard (who was born in 1792, in this county), and to their marriage came the following children: Samuel, David, Levi, Catherine D. (Mrs. Oller), Mary (Mrs. Kammerer), Jessie, Barbara, Susan, Daniel, Andrew and Eliza. Of this family the five last mentioned are deceased. The father served in many township offices. He died in 1848, the mother in 1886.

David Myers was born in 1828 in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn., and in his boyhood attended school in the home neighborhood. He assisted his father on the farm, and upon the death of the latter took charge of the home place, consisting of 232 acres. In 1876 he married Miss Margaret Howden, a native of this county, daughter of John Howden, and granddaughter of Andrew Howden, who was born and reared in Ireland, and there married a Miss Nixion, a cousin of Mrs.

John Arbuckle, of Coffee county. They came to this county in about 1789, when the Indians were very numerous. For two years their home was in a hollow tree fitted up as a room, where two of their children were born. Andrew Howden was a prominent pioneer settler of Washington county, and followed farming all his life. He owned several thousand acres of land, which eventually became the property of the West family, and also owned the island below Pittsburgh, known as the Seven Miles Island, which is yet in the possession of the family. His children were born as follows: Jane, August 1, 1785; James, June 1, 1789; Mary, April 10, 1792; John (whose sketch follows); Ann, April 30, 1798; Margaret, April 1, 1801; Andrew, January 23, 1801; Thomas, September 16, 1807; William, January 25, 1810. Of this family Andrew was married on March 2, 1831, to Anna B. Dito, and died January 31, 1838; Thomas died May 30, 1848, and all are deceased save Margaret, who is now living in the State of Ohio.

John Howden was born May 12, 1795, in this county, and was reared to agricultural pursuits, which he followed through life. On September 23, 1819, he was married to Elizabeth West, a native of the same place, born April 20, 1800, and eight children came to them, as follows: Frances (wife of M. McJunkin, of Washington county); Andrew (married to Louisa Newkirk, of Kansas City), formerly a merchant, now a retired stock raiser (he has traveled extensively in the South and West); Margaret, Mrs. Myers; Elizabeth, Mrs. Galaway, of Illinois; Lucinda, Mrs. Kammerer; Myra M., wife of Joseph Jennings, professor in the Third Ward school in Pittsburgh, Penn.; John A. (married to Miss Riddle), a real-estate broker, of Washington county; and Mary Ann (deceased in early youth). The parents passed their lives in this county, where the father died in October, 1869, the mother on July 11, 1880.

After his marriage Mr. Myers settled on the home farm, and has given special attention to raising cattle. The place contains a coal mine which yields a paying quantity.

WILLIAM M. McNARY. The pioneer ancestor of this eminent family was one James McNary, a native of Scotland, who sailed to America about 1760, first locating, in the New World, on a farm in York county, Penn. His son James afterward moved with his family to Washington county, locating in Hanover township. Thomas McNary, son of James, was born in York county, Penn., and after coming to Washington county he bought 219 acres of land called the "Sugar Tree" tract. The children of Thomas McNary were Samuel, James, David, Joseph and Matthew.

James McNary, son of Thomas, was born February 25, 1803, in Washington county, Penn. In 1813 he was married to Miss Caldwell, a native of Virginia, and soon afterward settled on a farm in Nottingham township, this county, containing 116 acres of land. The children of this marriage were as follows: Ann (Mrs. McClain), Samuel, John, Belle (deceased), Adeline, James (who has charge of the home farm), Joseph and William M. During the Civil war Mr. McNary was too old to enlist, but he always took a lively interest in public matters; he served his township in almost every capacity, and was supervisor and justice of the peace for many years.

William M. McNary, the subject proper of this sketch, was born in 1861 in Nottingham township, this county, where he was reared to manhood. In 1881 he was united in marriage with Jennie Lash, who was born in 1863, in Washington county, Penn., and they have had two sons, Walter and Albert. Mr. McNary owns a fine farm of 133 acres, and is very successful in his chosen calling.

WILLIAM J. ELLIOTT, a prosperous merchant and substantial citizen of Canonsburg, was born December 15, 1857, in Cecil township, Washington county. The family were natives of New Jersey, where the great-grandfather, William Elliott, was married and reared a large family of children. In 1799 he and his family crossed the mountains to Washington county, Penn., and located permanently on a small homestead in Cecil township. His son William, also a native of New Jersey, always worked on the farm, and when a young man was married to a Miss Smith, of Washington county, who bore him three children, namely: Ellen (Mrs. James Moore), James S. and William. The father was a leading politician in the Whig party, and in religion was an active member of Dr. McMillan's Church, the first church founded in Washington county.

James S. Elliott also passed his entire life on the old place in Cecil township, where he attended school. He was married to Mary, daughter of John Wilson, a native of Allegheny county, Penn., and the children born to this marriage were as follows: John W., Lizzie, Maxwell, William J. and Mary B. Of these children Lizzie, Maxwell and Mary B. are deceased. John W., the eldest son, attended Washington and Jefferson College, then, entering Princeton at the age of seventeen years, took a post-graduate course. After completing his general studies he took a course at the Theological Seminary, graduating with honor in his twentieth year, and receiving his first call to preach before he was twenty one. The father was a very prominent man in all local enterprises, and during the Civil war he was one of the relief committee appointed by the county to aid the destitute. He was one of the first citizens of Washington county to introduce the Spanish Merino sheep. In politics he was a Whig and Republican, and served as justice of the peace many years, county commissioner two terms, and in various other capacities. He first joined the Seceder Church, then united with the Chartiers U. P. Church, of which he was a trustee. He died March 18, 1874, and August 25, 1882, his widow followed him to the grave.

William J. Elliott was born in Cecil township, and received a good business education. He managed the home place for some time, and on December 11, 1882, was married to Flora J., daughter of Enoch Hixon, a native of Canonsburg, Penn. They have three sons, namely: James Maxwell, John Lloyd and Norwood. In 1886 Mr. Elliott entered into partnership with D. F. Young, a hardware merchant of Canonsburg, and in 1891 Mr. Elliott purchased the entire business, which is now the most extensive of any in the place; he handles all kinds of farm machinery, in addition to the regular lines in the hardware trade. He is an active worker in the ranks of the Republican party, and in religion is a member of the U. P. Church, to which he gives a liberal support.

JAMES EDWARD LONG, M. D. is an ardent devotee of the Esculapian art, to which his life has been devoted. He is a son of Thomas H. Long, a native of the District of Columbia, who married Sarah Fulyard. Thomas H. Long followed carpentry in early life, and afterward entered mercantile business at Dunningville, Penn., thence moving to Independence, same State. He finally went to Grafton, W. Va., and conducted a hardware business in that place, where he died, leaving the following children: Sadie (wife of Dr. Hill, of Dunningville, Penn.), Thomas C. (residing at Grafton, W. Va.), William, James Edward, and Harry L. (also in West Virginia). The mother died when the children were small, and since the death of the father the hardware store has been conducted by two of the sons, Thomas C. and Harry L., under the firm name of Long Bros.

Dr. James Edward Long was born in 1862, in Washington county, Penn., and attended the common schools during boyhood. He afterward graduated at Independence, Penn., and then took a five years' course of study at the academy of Prof. J. C. Messenger. After finishing this course he entered the office of Dr. Parkinson, at Independence, also reading medicine three years with Dr. Hill, of Dunningville, Penn. He then passed two years at the Baltimore College of Physicians and Surgeons, and returning to Washington county, Penn., practiced his profession one year, then returning to college, graduated in 1881. On March 1, 1883, he located in Kammerer, Somerset township, this county, where he has since resided. In June, 1887, he was united in marriage with Miss Maggie Kammerer, who has borne him two children: Francis O., and Edith Virginia (deceased in early youth). Dr. Long has served in many local offices in Somerset township. The family are all members of the Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church.

MCCLELLAND. The genealogy of the family of this name, in East Finley township, can be traced to Thomas McClelland, a native of Ireland, descended from a sturdy and rugged race who left their heather-clad mountain homes in Scotland for the North of Ireland during the days of religious persecutions.

About the middle of the eighteenth century Thomas McClelland, then but a boy, left his native country for America, landing at Philadelphia, where he was employed at various kinds of work for some time; then moved to the eastern part of the State, and commenced farming on a small piece of land he had purchased with his hard-earned savings. Here he married Nancy Ferguson, a native-born American of Irish parentage. At the breaking out of the Revolutionary war Thomas McClelland enlisted in the defense of his adopted country, was in active service and severely wounded on several occasions, which caused his return home to his wife and little ones before the close of the struggle. In 1790 he came to Washington county, and located in South Strabane township, where the rest of his children were born, and where he and his wife passed the remainder of their days, both dying at a ripe old age, she several years before him.

Hugh McClelland, the fourth child in the order of birth of Thomas and Nancy (Ferguson) McClelland, was born December 13, 1789, in eastern Pennsylvania, and came to Washington county with his parents, with whom he lived sometime afterward, laboring on the farm and attending school during a few weeks in winter. About 1810 he commenced learning reed-making with James McKeown, of Washington borough, which trade he followed several years. In 1815 he was married to Elizabeth Martin, born February 26, 1795, a daughter of Peter Martin, of South Strabane township, this county, and the result of this union was nine children, as follows: Thomas, born January 31, 1816, died June 13, 1842; Peter M. (special mention of whom is made further on); William, born August 9, 1820, died January 24, 1821; Samuel, born August 14, 1822, died September 3, 1842; Hugh F. and Mary Jane (of whom special mention is made further on); John, born November 16, 1830, died September 30, 1851; James, born July 31, 1833, died October 14, 1843, and Nancy, born July 23, 1836, died April 26, 1838. On June 26, 1849, the mother of this family died, and in 1851 Mr. McClelland was married to Ann, daughter of Alexander Craig, of Buffalo township, this county, and she died in 1882 without issue. After his first marriage Hugh McClelland followed his trade of reed-making until 1827, in which year he purchased a tract of land in South Strabane township, near where his father located when first coming to Washington county. Here he successfully carried on farming till 1833, when he bought of Frank Stone a large tract of land lying in East Finley township, not far from the Buffalo township line, where he continued to follow agricultural pursuits up to 1862. In that year he retired from active farm work and removed into the borough of Washington, where he lived some years; then took up his residence in Claysville, where he peacefully passed from earth at the patriarchal age of ninety-five years. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics was a Democrat. Of his family only three are now living: Peter M., born September 11, 1818; Hugh F., born April 27, 1823, and Mary Jane, born July 31, 1828.

In 1862 the two brothers, Peter M. and Hugh F., rented the home farm in East Finley township, which a few years later they purchased. The property consists of 206 acres of prime land, equipped with commodious residence and out-houses. The brothers have been constant companions from boyhood days, have never married, and are quiet, unassuming men, good citizens and respected neighbors. Both have been lifelong Democrats. They now rent their land, and are living retired lives in harmony and peace along with their sister, Mary Jane, a spinster, who has been with her brothers since 1862, attending to the household duties.

Such is a brief record of the only surviving representatives of the family descended from Thomas McClelland, the pioneer immigrant to Washington county of over a century ago.

ROBERT K. SCOTT, a leading citizen and representative agriculturist of Smith township, is a grandson of Abraham Scott, who was born and reared in Maryland, and when a young man came to Pittsburgh, Penn., afterward settling in Washington county with his brother Alexander. He purchased a wild tract of land near Raccoon postoffice, Robinson township, where his active life was passed in agricultural pursuits. He was married to Jane Finley, a sister of John Finley, the founder of Finleyville, and reared the following children: Rachel (Mrs. James Russell), Mary (wife of Thomas Fletcher), Ann (married to James Kerr), Jane (wife of David White), Elizabeth (Mrs. William Scott), Susan (married to John McBride), Abraham, Finley, Holland and Samuel. The father of this family was a Democrat in politics, and in religion was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Raccoon.

Finley Scott, son of the pioneer Abraham Scott, was born in 1800 in Robinson township, this county, and educated in the schools of the neighborhood of his birthplace. In 1822 he married Margaret Stephenson, a daughter of James Stephenson, of Smith township. The young people first located on a farm in Robinson township, remaining there a few years, when they rented a neighboring farm, afterward purchasing a place in Smith township, where they lived twenty years, and finally moved to the home where the remainder of their useful lives was passed. The children born to this couple were Ann, Robert K., James, Samuel, Finley, John, Levi, Jane F. (Mrs. William Cowen) and Margaret (Mrs. Thomas Ackleson). Mr. Scott was the architect of his own fortune, and owned 450 acres of land at the time of his death, which occurred in 1878. He was a Democrat, and held various township offices. In church connection he was first a member of the Associate Reformed Church, in which he was an elder, afterward uniting with the U. P. Church at Burgettstown. Both he and his wife are buried in the United Presbyterian cemetery.

Robert K. Scott was born November 8, 1824, on the home place in Robinson township, Washington Co., Penn., and received his education at the primitive log schoolhouse of the day. He has been reared to agricultural pursuits, which have been his life vocation. On June 13, 1850, he was married to Miss Rachel, daughter of Matthew Welch, of Smith township, and they have had children as follows: Margaret A. (wife of John Moore), Elizabeth H. (Mrs. S. D. Moore), Jennie C. (wife of Hugh Lee), Matthew W. and William F. (twins), Agnes (married to John Russell), Robert P. (deceased), Mary C. and Flora M. (wife of T. Nichols). Mr. and Mrs. Scott passed their married life on the old Mathon farm, where the mother died May 18, 1865, and the following year the family moved to their present home in Smith township. Mr. Robert K. Scott adheres to the political faith of his forefathers, being a staunch Democrat, and has served his township as school director and in various other capacities. In church relation he was formerly a member of and an elder in the Associate Reformed Church, which is now the United Presbyterian Church, in which he is an elder and active worker.

WILLIAM HANLIN. The Hanlin family for almost a century have been identified with the progress and development of Hanover township. They have assisted in the advancement and support of the schools and churches, and all other enterprises which have served to place Hanover township in its present position with the magnificent galaxy of townships contained in Washington county. The present generation of this family trace their ancestry to four brothers, William, John, James and Alexander Hanlin, who were children of Alexander and Nancy (Stewart) Hanlin, and natives of County Tyrone, Ireland. The father dying in County Tyrone, the family, consisting of the widow, the four sons and three daughters (Elizabeth, Nancy and Jane), came to America in 1792. Their first location was in Lancaster county, Penn., where the sons engaged in various kinds of employment, in fact, energy and health was their sole capital. One daughter, Nancy, was married in eastern Pennsylvania, and there passed her days. Between 1795 and 1800 the other members of the family came further west, locating on the waters of Buffalo creek, in Washington county, on the "Lawton Farm." The brothers continued to work in partnership until the beginning of the present century, when James purchased land near Paris, Hanover township, this county, and followed the river, making trips to New Orleans. He was married to Miss Miller. William, John and Alexander jointly purchased of one Charles Campbell a large tract of land near Harmon's Creek, in Hanover township, this county, to which they moved. William was affianced to Anna, daughter of John Fulton, of Hanover township, and his wedding day was set, but he died before the marriage was consummated.

John Hanlin was born in 1771, in County Tyrone, Ireland, and in 1823 married Nancy Hanlin, a distant relative, and a native of Ireland. Her parents came to America, locating in Steubenville, Ohio, leaving their infant daughter with an aunt in Ireland, with whom she crossed the ocean when but two years of age. To the union of John and Nancy (Hanlin) Hanlin the following children were born: A. M., Margery (unmarried, living with her brothers in Hanover township), William, John (a farmer of Hanover township), James (deceased), and Eliza (unmarried, living with her brothers). After his marriage John Hanlin located on that portion of the original tract which the three brothers had purchased together, where he resided the remainder of his life. He died in 1846. He was a respected citizen, kind-hearted and generous. In 1878 his widow passed away at the advanced age of nearly eighty-six years. She was buried beside her husband in St. John's Episcopal cemetery, in Brooke county, W. Va. They were both members of that church.

William Hanlin was born August 5, 1829, in Hanover township, this county, and passed his boyhood on the farm of his father, where his first knowledge of farming was obtained. He remained at home until the Civil war began, then enlisted at Paris, in Company K, One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment, P. V. I.; the first active engagement was at Chancellorsville, after which he followed the fortunes of his regiment until the afternoon of the second day at Gettysburg, when he was shot in the left leg, while fighting at a point about 200 yards northwest of Devil's Den. He was put in an ambulance by his captain and taken to the field hospital, thence removed to the general hospital at York, Penn. His wound kept him from duty until the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged May 20, 1865, and returning to his native county, resumed work on the farm. On November 2, 1865, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Wilson, who was born in 1839, a daughter of Henry Wilson, of Hanover township. They have one son, Horace W., who is living at home. The farm, which has been the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hanlin since their marriage, adjoins the old place which he and his brother purchased in 1856. He carries on general farming and stock raising. No person needs to go hungry or in want when in the neighborhood of the Hanlins, whose traits of generosity are characteristic of their name. In politics William Hanlin is a most enthusiastic Republican "from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot." He is a member of the Episcopal Church, his wife being identified with the Presbyterian denomination.

DAVID M. FULTON, a respected citizen of Hanover township, is descended from natives of the Emerald Isle. His grandfather, John Fulton, was the first member of this family to come to America, and was a distant relative of the numerous other emigrants of the same name who came from Ireland and settled in Hanover township, this county, about the same date. John Fulton was born about 1756, in County Derry, and in 1786 was married to Jane Hunter. In 1788 this young couple came to America, making their first location on a farm in Franklin county, Penn., where he labored at various employments. About 1798 they concluded to go farther west, and crossing the mountains made a temporary location in Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn. They brought their household effects, farming utensils, and family, in a wagon drawn by three horses, their two cows being driven along behind. In 1801 they settled on the farm where David M. is now living. Mr. Fulton became a prosperous and successful farmer. He died in 1832, followed by his widow in 1840, who was laid by his side in Paris cemetery. Their children were as follows: James, born in 1787, in Ireland; Annie, who never married, and lived to the age of ninety years; Margaret, who never married, and lived to be seventy-five years of age; Jane, died unmarried, and lived to be eighty-five years of age; and Mary, who married Joseph Bell, of Columbiana county, Ohio.

David M. Fulton, whose name opens this sketch, was born February 12, 1827, on the same farm in Hanover township which he now owns, where he was reared to manhood. He was educated in the country schools of the neighborhood, and in 1867 was married to Martha Aten, a native of Hanover township, this county. She lived but a short time after her marriage, and for his second wife he married Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph and Margaret (McGonnigle) Caldwell, of Hanover township. Mr. Fulton has always resided on the old homestead, and has always been a successful tiller of the soil. In politics he was formerly a Whig, then joined the Republican forces, with which he has ever since been identified, and both he and his wife are members of the Paris United Presbyterian Church. They have two sons, James H. and Andrew C., both working on the home farm.

JAMES H. LUSK was born in 1862 in Allegheny county, Penn. His father, James M. Lusk, was born in 1817 in Allegheny county, Penn., and received his education in the home schools. In 1841 he was married to Miss Hannah Snodgrass, a native of this county, and their children were Eliza A. (wife of E. H. Sumney), William B. (who entered the army when yet a boy, serving to the close), Martha J. (Mrs. A. J. Adams), Hugh K., Wilson A., Nancy B. (deceased), George (deceased), James H. (subject) and Frank, (deceased). Mr. Lusk began life on a farm given him by his father, containing eighty-three acres of well cultivated land. He died in 1889.

James H. Lusk grew to manhood on the home place, and in 1885 was married to Clara, daughter of Isaac Sumney, of this county. Her father has always been a farmer, and is now living at the age of seventy-nine years. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Lusk continued to reside on the old farm, which he has owned since the death of his father. They have three children, namely: Edgar C., Clyde A. and Ethel B. Mr. Lusk is an advocate of Democratic principles; he has held numerous local offices. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

THOMAS M. BARCLAY, a prominent citizen of Carroll township, is a son of James Barclay, who was an old resident of Washington county. The latter died when his youngest son was but six years of age; he had a family of eight children, three of whom are yet living, namely: John, a resident of Forward township, Allegheny county; William, living near Coal Bluff, and Thomas M.

Thomas M. Barclay was born October 13, 1830, on the home place in Union township, Washington Co., Penn., and was trained to hard work from earliest boyhood, as his father left no property for the family. At the age of thirteen years he began to work on a farm for a Mr. Gaston, with whom he remained six years, then learned the trades of carpenter and builder, which he has since continued to follow in Washington county. In 1855 he was united in marriage with Margaret J., daughter of John McVey, a native of Nottingham township, Washington Co., Penn. The young couple resided on the McVey farm for five years after their marriage, then moved to Shireoaks, this county, where they lived twenty years, during which time he was weighmaster for a coal company. In 1882 he erected and took possession of the handsome residence which they now occupy; he is employed as master mechanic by Blythe & Co. Politically he affiliates with the Republican party, and in religion is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Monongahela. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Barclay, namely: Edward, married to Lizzie Bradshaw, living on the home place; Joseph; Minnie, deceased; Emma, Mrs. Powell; and one deceased in infancy.

LEVI R. CAMPBELL, a representative citizen and popular shoe merchant of Monongahela, was born January 14, 1816, in Allegheny county, Penn. He is a grandson of Levi Campbell, who was born February 13, 1798, in Chester county, Penn., and was there reared to manhood. He learned the shoemaker's trade, and was married to Martha Carson, also a native of Chester county, Penn. She bore him the following children: David C.; Sarah, wife of Joseph Young; Joseph; John; George; James; Amzie F., and Martha. Mr. Campbell followed his trade for several years after his marriage, and then, in company with the Irving and Kennedy families, moved to Carroll township, Washington county. In 1827 Mr. Campbell came to Monongahela, and opened a shoe store which he conducted until 1870, and then moved to a permanent home in New Castle, Penn. He was a member of the Episcopal Church, and in political opinion was actively identified with the Democratic party.

David C. Campbell was born April 3, 1821, in Chester county, Penn., where he remained until six years of age, when the family settled in Monongahela. He was there reared and educated, then learned and followed the shoemaker's trade for some time, and in 1851 moved to New Castle, Penn. He was there married to Nancy, daughter of Seth Rigby, a resident of New Castle, and she bore him the following children: George W., Levi R., John, Amzie F., Edward C., James C., Ritta J., Martha A. and Sarah. For his second wife Mr. Campbell was married to Mary Ann Bush, and their children were William, Charles M., David C. and Flora. Mr. Campbell was a staunch advocate of the principles embodied in the Democratic party, and in religion he and his wife were members of the United Presbyterian Church.

Levi R. Campbell passed his youth in Monongahela and New Castle, receiving a public-school education. At the age of fifteen years he entered the shoe shop owned by his father, with whom he remained three or four years. He passed one year in Monongahela, then began to work for John M. Suttman, and afterward entered the store of Isaac Yohe, finally opening his present shoe store in Monongahela. In 1870 he married Sarah A., daughter of Messig Haywood, a resident of Monongahela, and she has borne him two children: Fannie, wife of T. M. Boggs, and Charles. Mr. Campbell has been an active business man for twenty-one years, and in politics has taken an active interest in the Democratic party; has served several terms as a member of the council. He and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

J. J. ANDREWS. Many of the best and most intellectual citizens of Washington county trace their lineage to the warm-hearted and brilliant sons of Erin, of whom J. J. Andrews is a worthy representative.

James Andrews was born in Ireland, where he was married, and in 1799 concluded to seek a home for himself and family in the United States, whither so many of his friends had recently immigrated. After landing in America, the Andrews family proceeded to Pennsylvania, and made their first permanent location near Bavington, in Smith township, Washington county. Although a poor man, James Andrews possessed an energetic character and habits of industry as capital stock, which proved very instrumental in the accumulation of a competency. He first located on a piece of land as a tenant, but was soon able to purchase land, and in later years removed to a farm in the northern part of Smith township, where the remainder of his days were passed. This place has ever since been known as the "Old Andrews farm." James Andrews and his wife passed away on the old farm, after a long and useful life. In politics he was a Democrat. He was among the prominent cattle dealers of those days, and drove cattle over the mountains to the markets of the eastern cities, eventually succeeding in securing a goodly amount of this world's goods. The children of this family were seven in number.

John Andrews was born in 1799, in mid-ocean, while his parents were coming to America. He was reared on the farm in Washington county, Penn., attending to the usual duties of the pioneer youth of the day, and receiving his education at the log-cabin schools with their primitive furnishings and puncheon floors. The pupils sat with their backs to the teacher and the seats were placed around the room; his attendance was limited to a few months in the winter season. He was married to Mary, daughter of James Christy, a native of Ireland, and their children were born as follows: Elizabeth J., living in Burgettstown, Penn., widow of David Leech; Jeremiah C., who followed agricultural pursuits on the home farm (now deceased); Mary, deceased wife of Jackson Potts, of Florence, Penn.; Nancy A., Mrs. John Stroud, of Hanover township, this county, and J. J. (whose sketch follows). John and Mary Andrews located on the old homestead in Smith township, this county, where their lives were passed. He was a successful and respected business man. In politics he was an enthusiastic Democrat, and held various offices in the township with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. Both Mr. and Mrs. Andrews were zealous members of the Burgettstown U. P. Church. He died in 1867, and both are buried in the Burgettstown cemetery.

J. J. Andrews was born September 10, 1849, in Smith township, Washington Co., Penn. He was reared to manhood on the home farm, and attended the common schools. Soon after his father's death he made a trip through the West, but not being satisfied with the country, returned to his native county, and in 1870 was married to Rebecca Cleland, youngest daughter of John and Rebecca (Hindman) Cleland. The children of J. J. and Rebecca Andrews are as follows: John C. and Susie. After his marriage Mr. Andrews was a tenant for some time, but afterward bought a good farm in Hanover township, this county, which he owns, but is residing on an adjoining place, devoting his attention to general farming and stock raising. "Johnny," as he is familiarly known, is very popular among his friends, a good neighbor and progressive citizen, ever ready to encourage any enterprise which will benefit himself or neighbors. In politics he has always voted with the Democratic party.

GEORGE BOYD. Among the venerable citizens of Hanover township, whose heads are crowned with the silver of many well-spent years, is found this well-known gentleman. The fair "Isle of Erin" was the home of his ancestors, and in that country his grandfather, John Boyd, first saw the light of day. The latter was born about 1747, in County Antrim, where he learned the tailor's trade, and was married to Martha Mahan. The young people soon thereafter sailed to America, and with true ardor John Boyd entered heart and soul into the American struggle for Independence. He enlisted in North Carolina, serving seven years under Gen. Greene and Capt. Smith, was employed as a scout much of the time, and received several wounds. When the war was ended he came to Washington county, Penn., locating between Cross Creek village and West Middletown, and there followed his trade. In 1793 he moved to Hanover township, Beaver Co., Penn., and in 1817 located near Harlem Springs, Carroll Co., Ohio, where he remained until about 1840, then returning to Beaver county, Penn., died soon afterward, and was buried in the King's Creek cemetery. He left the following children: James, born May 28, 1781; John, born July 20, 1782; Mary (Mrs. David Moody, of Carroll county, Ohio), born February 26, 1781; Agnes (wife of James Sharp, of Columbiana county, Ohio), born October 15, 1785; Sarah (Mrs. James Moore, of Beaver county, Penn.), born July 16, 1787; Margaret (wife of Robert Campbell, of Columbiana county, Ohio), born July 8, 1789; Robert, born December 28, 1791; Thomas, born October 15, 1793; Martha, born in November, 1795 (killed by lightning); Rachel (Mrs. John Anderson, of Iowa), born in September, 1797; and David, born in June, 1799. In politics the father was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Robert Boyd was born December 28, 1791, on the home farm between Cross Creek village and West Middletown. In 1816 he was married to Catherine McCausland, who was born March 7, 1793, daughter of George and Catherine (Kidd) McCausland. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Boyd first located on a farm in Hanover township, Beaver Co., Penn., and in 1834 moved to the home place in Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn. He was a successful agriculturist, and in politics was a Democrat. He died in 1878, having been preceded by his wife in 1875, and their children were John, born April 15, 1817 (who lived in Hanover township, this county); Martha (widow of John Smith, of Jefferson township), born October 21, 1818; Catherine (wife of Joseph McCready, of Columbiana county, Ohio), born December 3, 1820; Margaret (widow of William McCready), born August 17, 1822; George, born March 7, 1824; Robert, born February 28, 1826; Francis, born March 21, 1828 (killed in West Virginia by a falling limb of a tree); Presley (a farmer of Columbiana county, Ohio), born March 9, 1830; and Mary, born February 23, 1832.

George Boyd was born on the home farm in Hanover township, Beaver Co., Penn., and passed his youth in attending the schools of the period. He spent several years with a sister in Jefferson township, this county. In 1880 he was united in marriage with Jane, daughter of Peter Lance, a farmer, who was married to Jane Nicholson, and had children as follows: Eleanor, Emeline, Addison, Peminda, Jane, Sarah, Theresa, William and Matteson. The father died August 24, 1850, the mother on March 27, 1857, and they are buried in Hopewell Presbyterian Church cemetery, of which church they were members and he was a trustee. In politics he was a Republican. Mr. and Mrs. Boyd have for several years been residents of Hanover township, Washington county, where he is engaged in farming. Politically he is a Democrat. Mrs. Boyd is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Paris, this county.

STEPHEN POST. Within the confines of Washington county, few are the men who in their chosen vocation have made so marked a success as the gentleman whose name appears at the opening of this sketch. Many a man mistakes his life work, yet by earnest application makes a partial success. Of Mr. Post it may be said that he has chosen well. A farmer in the full significance of the word. From a poor, obscure boy, earning only one hundred dollars a year, by his own hard efforts, he has fought his way upward. Such men are a credit to any community and it is a pleasure to give the following brief sketch of him and his family.

Stephen Post was born August 23, 1824, on the farm now occupied by A. N. Hathaway. His father, Samuel Post, also a native of Washington county, was married to Nellie Day, who bore him the following named children: Frank, Stephen and Martha (Mrs. Jas. Hilton, deceased many years ago). The father was the first to lay down life's sorrows, passing to the grave in 1827; the mother departed for the Better Land March 28, 1853, and they were buried at Bethel C. P. Church near Van Buren. Samuel Post in politics was an active adherent of the Democratic party; in religious faith he was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Stephen Post, our subject, in 1865 came to his present home in Franklin township. His farm consists of 220 acres, all well improved and equipped with excellent buildings, every one of which was erected by himself. He is possessed of inventive genius. He has now a grinding buhr mill of his own invention, and with it he grinds most of the corn for the neighborhood. He was for a number of years a thresher, but now his sons have taken his place in that industry. Mr. Post has been thrice married: first time to Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Weir, and the results of this union were two children: Clarinda, who died April 10, 1853, and Elizabeth, who died April 29, 1852; the mother of these children dying April 8, 1853, Mr. Post took for his second wife, Anna, daughter of

Stephen Post

Thomas Ringland, and by her there were three children: Hamilton, Joseph Weir and Annie; Joseph Weir died April 18, 1866, and Annie died March 4, 1860. After the decease of this wife, which occurred January 20, 1860, Mr. Post married Sarah Tucker, daughter of John Tucker, of Franklin township, and she has borne him three children: John, Mary and Frank. Our subject is a lifelong Democrat, and a firm advocate of every measure tending to the advancement of his township and county. He has always given liberally of his means to the church, and has for many years been an elder in the Presbyterian Church at Prosperity.

CASPER SIGHTS, a well-known citizen of Donegal township, is the only male representative of the family in Washington county, Penn. The pioneer ancestor of that name was David Sights, who was born in Germany and came to America in the latter part of the eighteenth century, locating in Washington, Penn., where he was married to a lady of Welsh parentage, her parents having emigrated from Wales. Their children were as follows: John, William, Casper, Frazier, David and Jane, all now deceased. Of this family, John and William moved West and died there; Casper followed the business of a stone mason and contractor, and built all the bridges on the National pike between Claysville and West Alexander (he afterward went to Guernsey county, Ohio, and remained there until his death); Frazier also died in that county, and Jane married and went to Missouri, where she died. The father of this family kept a tavern for several years at Coon Island, Washington Co., Penn., where the stages then stopped on their regular route over the once famous road. He remained there several years, and then moved to Guernsey county, Ohio, where he followed farming. He died August 20, 1811, and his wife June 22, 1855.

David Sights (father of subject) was born November 14, 1803, in Washington, Washington Co., Penn., and when a boy was brought with his parents to Coon Island, this county, where in boyhood he worked for different farmers, and attended the district school in the winters. On July 18, 1826, he was united in marriage with Martha McMillen, who was born November 12, 1803, a daughter of David McMillen. Their children were as follows: David F., born March 31, 1827 (deceased in New Comers-town, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio), was a harness maker; Elizabeth J., born March 8, 1829 (widow of E. B. Jolley, of near West Middletown, Penn.); Christianne, born March 31, 1831 (Mrs. J. L. McGill, of Donegal township); Casper (subject of our present sketch); John, born October 21, 1835, deceased; Susanna, born January 29, 1839, died unmarried; and Martha Ann, born June 27, 1841, now living with her brother Casper. After his marriage Mr. Sights settled three miles northwest of Claysville, Donegal township, on a part of the "William Derringer" tract. Some years afterward he purchased of Joseph Campsey an adjoining tract of land, where he erected a comfortable dwelling, and passed the remainder of his life. Politically he was a Democrat, and stood high in the esteem of his neighbors. He died July 6, 1861, and his wife died September 26, 1868.

Casper Sights was born March 28, 1833, in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., and lived on the home farm until the death of his father, receiving a common-school education. When his father died he took charge of the farm which he now owns. On October 15, 1890, he was married to Catherine Ann, daughter of William Robertson, of Guernsey county, Ohio. They have had no children. In political life Mr. Sights is an active worker in the Democratic party, and has been frequently elected to township offices by his constituents. He is a member of the U. P. Church at West Alexander.

J. ADD. CLARK. Among the prominent business men of Canonsburg, J. Add. Clark is one of the leading grocers. He is a son of James Clark, who was born February 14, 1811, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., and received his education at the home schools of the neighborhood. In 1853 he was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of William Dickson, a son of George Dickson, who emigrated from Ireland many years ago, and purchased a farm of 100 acres in Allegheny county, Penn., where he died. His son, William, was born in 1790, and grew to manhood on the home place. In early life he was united in marriage with Margaret Glenn, who bore him children as follows: George A. (a surveyor, of Pittsburgh, Penn.), James A. (a practicing physician, of Canonsburg, Penn.), Mary (widow of James Clark, of Canonsburg), William (a resident of Robinson township) and three deceased in infancy. When but seventeen years of age the father united with the Old Seceder Church, during the last twenty years of his life was a member of the U. P. Church, and was a ruling elder in both churches for fifty-five years; in business he was a prominent and successful agriculturist. He died March 19, 1872.

James and Mary (Dickson) Clark continued to reside on the home place until 1866, when they removed to Canonsburg, Penn., where he died in December, 1885, leaving the following children: William D., Jeanette (since deceased), Marguerite S. (Mrs. C. M. Grier), Anna M. (wife of Rev. D. C. Stewart) and J. Add. Mr. Clark was a farmer and a staunch supporter of the Republican party, and held various local offices. He was first a member of the U. P. Church at North Buffalo, then united with the one at Chartiers, of which he was trustee for many years.

J. Add. Clark was born on the home place in Buffalo township, this county, where his boyhood was passed. In 1891 he opened a grocery store in Canonsburg, and now carries a full line of goods. He is a Republican, and in religion was formerly a member of the United Presbyterian Church, having since united with the Greenside Avenue Church.

EVEN E. PHILLIPS is one of those energetic, industrious and cultured citizens who are naturally fitted to become leaders in any community where their lot is cast.

The family are pioneers of Washington county, and the grandfather, David Phillips, was born in 1742, in Pembrokeshire, South Wales, and in early manhood set sail for the "land of the free and the home of the brave." Although a preacher of the Gospel, he believed in defending the rights of his adopted country, and served three years as captain in the Revolutionary war. He then settled on a tract of 400 acres of land, partly in Washington county, Penn., devoting the remainder of his life to farming and ministerial work. When the war of 1812 began he was drafted into service, but paid the line rather than to again participate in the horrors of war. He accepted no political honors, but was a very prominent citizen. He died in 1829.

David Phillips, son of David, was born April 7, 1780, in Chester county, Penn., and when yet a boy moved to Allegheny county. In 1805 he was married to Ann Richardson, born in 1785, daughter of Thomas Richardson. Seven children were born to this marriage, namely: Thomas, Lucinda, Emily, Mary Ann, Sarah, Amanda and Even E. Of these children the only two now living are Mary Ann and Even E. The father always followed agricultural pursuits, owning 150 acres of land on the boundary line of Washington and Allegheny counties. He died in 1856, and the mother passed away in 1870.

Even E. Phillips was born in 1816 in Allegheny county, Penn., where the greater part of his early education was received. On February 18, 1817, he was married to a Miss Weller, a native of Allegheny county, Penn., who has borne him children as follows: Jacob, Isabelle, Ann, Irene, Orlando, William, and two deceased. The eldest son is a physician in Venetia; Orlando owns the home farm, where he is residing with his father; and William is a mail agent on the Cleveland & Pittsburgh Railroad.

Mr. Phillips owns sixty-eight acres of fine land, underlaid with a heavy vein of coal. He has sold the coal for $5,400. Politically he is a staunch adherent of Republican principles, and has served faithfully as inspector of elections, and in various other ways. In religious faith he is connected with the Baptist denomination.

ROBERT HAGGARTY is a son of Samuel Haggarty, who was born in County Down, Ireland, and was brought to America by his parents when but four years old. He grew to manhood on a farm in Fayette county, Penn., which was located one mile from Coal Centre, Washington county, and there attended the log-cabin schools of the period. In early manhood he was married to Elizabeth Blayney, a member of a prominent pioneer family, and she bore him the following named children: Mrs. Louisa Russell, of Fayette county, Penn.; William, living in Monongahela; Samuel, deceased at the age of nine years; Johnson, who died in Ohio at the age of twenty-two years; Reuben, who went to Missouri with $1,500, and died seventeen years later, leaving a property of $50,000, and Robert. The father died in 1857 at the age of sixty-one years. He was a prominent member of the Democratic party.

Robert Haggarty was born March 17, 1835, on the old homestead in Fayette county, Penn., and there attended the common schools. At the age of seventeen years he began to learn the stone-cutting and mason trade, receiving for the first year's pay $3 per month while learning. The second year he received $1 per month, and the third year he was paid 75 cents per day, after which he began business for himself. He was united in marriage with Elmira Ammon, a native of Carroll township, and at that time had but $5 with which to begin his wedded life. He now owns fifty acres of land in Carroll township, and twenty-five acres in Fallowfield township, but has given most of his time to his trade. In political opinion he votes with the Democratic party, and has served in Carroll township as president of the school board. He and his wife are the parents of five children, who were born as follows: Clarence Linton; Mrs. Margaret H. Coulter, of Carroll township; Harry Elwood, a stone mason of Monongahela; Violet Elmira, and Robert D.

JAMES H. FERGUSON, a representative farmer of South Strabane township, is a son of Harvey W. Ferguson, whose father was a native of County Down, Ireland. The latter came to America when a young man, and made a permanent home in Allegheny county, Penn., where he married and the following children were born to him: Mary, Elizabeth, Harriet, David, James, Harvey W., Robert and Hugh. Mr. Ferguson was an active member of the Federalist and Whig parties, and in religion was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Perrysville.

Harvey W. Ferguson was born in 1820, on the home farm in Allegheny county, Penn., and received his education at the home schools. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Grisella, a daughter of Robert McElhany, a native of Scotland, whose family consisted of three daughters; he was an active member of the Whig party, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church. The young couple settled on the McElhany farm, where they remained four years, thence removing to the home farm. In politics Mr. Ferguson is an active worker in the Republican party, and has been a school director many years. He and his family are members of the Presbyterian Church at Sharpsburgh, Allegheny Co., Penn., in which congregation he has been an elder twenty years.

James H. Ferguson was born in Allegheny county, Penn., on the home farm still occupied by his father, and passed his earlier youth at home, attending the common schools. He afterward entered Newell's Institute, Pittsburgh, and remained there two years. On December 24, 1875, he was united in marriage with Ollie Newton, daughter of J. T. McDonald, of Allegheny county, Penn., and five children have been born to them: Frank (deceased), Alice, Maggie, Travis and Hannah. After his marriage Mr. Ferguson remained in Allegheny county until 1879, when he came to his present farm, consisting of 118 acres of good land, and upon which he has made many improvements. His home is thirty-two feet square, and the barn is 60 by 40. He is engaged in farming and stock raising, and has recently embarked in the dairy business. In political opinion Mr. Ferguson is a Republican, and an active worker in that party. The family are members of the First Presbyterian Church at Washington.

GEORGE E. LOCKHART, ex-sheriff of Washington county, is a native of the Keystone State, born in Beaver county in 1848. His father, George K. Lockhart, a native of Lawrence county, Penn., was married in Allegheny county to Margaret Ann Savage, who bore him three children: William A., a resident of McDonald, Washington county; George E., and Agnes J., deceased wife of L. G. McElhinney, of Cecil township. The father died in 1854 of small-pox, at the age of thirty-four years, and his widow was afterward married to John Allen, by whom she had one child, Annie E., wife of J. A. Evans, an attorney at law of Pittsburgh.

George E. Lockhart was reared by his grandfather, William Savage, on a farm near McDonald, in this county, his education being obtained at the public schools of the locality. Here he remained until he was fourteen years of age. In 1864 he enlisted in company A, One Hundred and Forty-seventh P. V. I., and participated in the fortunes of that regiment; was with Sherman at Atlanta, and on the march to the sea, his regiment being the first to enter the city of Savannah, and was present at the battle of Resaca, May 15, 1864. He was never wounded, but soon after being ordered to the front was seized with typhoid fever and was sent to hospital at Nashville, Tenn., whither his mother went from Pennsylvania to visit him. On his recovery he returned to his regiment and served to the close of the war, being mustered out of the service at Alexandria June 5, 1865, and discharged July 21, same year. He then proceeded to the home of his mother in Allegheny county, and commenced working in the mines as director of shipping. In 1885 he was appointed deputy sheriff under Sheriff Hemphill, serving to the close of the term, and then, in 1888, was elected sheriff on the Republican ticket, for a three years' term, receiving a majority of 2,459 votes in the county. During this incumbency, the colored murderer, West, was executed, the first person hanged in Washington county since 1867. Mr. Lockhart is a member of Stockweather Post No. 60, G. A. R., and of the Jr. O. U. A. M.

SAMUEL ASHBROOK, a leading dentist in the borough of Washington, is a native of the county, born September 2, 1864, in Buffalo township, where he received a liberal education at the district schools. His great-grandfather, Simon Ashbrook, was a native of Lancaster county, Penn., where he was married to a native of the same county, and the children born to them were Jacob, John, Margaret, Mary, Nancy, Solomon, Simon, Abraham, Absolom and William. In 17—Simon Ashbrook came to Washington county, making a settlement in Buffalo township, where he and his wife died.

Absolom Ashbrook, son of this old pioneer, received his education in Buffalo township, and was there married to Elizabeth, daughter of John Brad-dock, of Franklin township. They continued to reside on the home farm until 1872, when they came to Washington borough, where they now reside. Their children were as follows: Mrs. Robert Lytle, Simon F., John and William (both deceased), Abraham L., Solomon (deceased) and Sarah (Mrs. W. P. Hastings). Mr. Ashbrook in politics was a Democrat, and was a warm supporter of the Presbyterian Church at East Buffalo.

Simon F. Ashbrook, father of the subject of these lines, was born February 28, 1836, in Buffalo township, this county, and received his education at the common schools of the neighborhood of his birth-place. Like his forefathers he has been engaged all his life in farming and stock raising, and has been successful in his dealings. On November 3, 1859, he was married to Mary, daughter of Jacob Weirich, and children as follows have been born to them: Edward, Susan (deceased), Samuel, Benton, Lizzie (Mrs. John Flack) and Maude. Mr. Ashbrook and family are members of the Presbyterian Church at East Buffalo, and in politics he is independent.

Samuel Ashbrook, whose name opens this sketch, at the age of twenty years entered, as a student, the dental office of W. L. McCleary, where he remained one year; in 1885 he commenced a course of study at the Baltimore Dental College, where, in 1887, he graduated with honors. Returning to Washington, Dr. Ashbrook commenced the practice of his profession with A. L. Ashbrook, with whom he remained a short time, and then again entered the office of his preceptor. In July, 1891, he purchased Mr. McCleary's interest, and has since been conducting the business alone. In August, 1890, the Doctor was married to Margaret Connors, of Toronto, Ontario, Canada, and one child, Edmund, has been born to them. Our subject and his estimable wife are members of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington, and in his political associations he is a Democrat.

EBERMAN. In the year 1732 Johannes Eberman and his son, Johannes, left their ancestral home in Ebermanstadt, Germany, bound for America with the purpose in view of making it their home, and with the determination to assist in its conquest. The family owned large estates in the center of which was the town above named. As was the custom, they had their genealogical tree tracing the family back through many generations and through centuries of time. Early in its history for services rendered, the family, by royal grant, was given a coat of arms, and the motto thereon—"Ad finem fidelis"—has been a source of inspiration throughout successive generations.

With the pride of birth and station and the sturdy courage of the pioneer these two reached London and embarked for the land of their choice. The records in Philadelphia show that Sept. 19, 1832, the good ship "Johnson," of London, landed at that port, and in the passenger list are the names of Johannes Eberman and son, Johannes, a lad under sixteen years of age. These were the first of the name to land on American soil, and the elder was the great-great-great-grandfather of John S. Eberman, a personal sketch of whom follows. They remained at Philadelphia but a short time, and then removed to Lancaster, same State, where they at once became identified with public affairs. On Dec. 22, 1743, the son married Juliana Schweich, and their son John, on April 23, 1772, married Elizabeth Frank.

John's interest in municipal affairs led him to present to the town of Lancaster a large clock which was placed in the town hall. When the courthouse was built the clock was put therein and for more than 100 years has been repaired and wound by the Eberman family, and at present continues to be the timepiece of the city. In "Pennsylvania Archives" it is related that Christopher Eberman did gallant service in the Continental line of the Second Pennsylvania Regiment during our struggle for independence. In the Moravian Church records of Lancaster is the complete genealogy of the family from 1732 to the present.

About the year 1815 Jacob, son of Gottlieb, son of Johannes, removed from Lancaster to Westmoreland county, and settled upon a large tract of land in that county. He was married to Jane Anderson, a native of Ireland, who bore him the following children: William, Rebecca, George M., W. A., Elizabeth and Samuel. Mr. Eberman was a Democrat in political opinion, and in religion supported the M. E. Church. He followed building and carpentry in Pittsburgh for several years, then moved to Elizabeth, Allegheny county, in 1829, where he died.

GEORGE M. EBERMAN was born April 29, 1821, and reared on the home farm in Westmoreland county, Penn., and attended the subscription schools of the vicinity. At the age of fourteen years he began clerking in a store where he remained until 1854, when he embarked in a general mercantile business in California, Penn. In 1859 he opened a ship-building yard in company with William McFall, and they conducted that business until 1879, when they dissolved partnership, and he commenced in his present general store in California, the firm now being known as Hart & Co. Politically Mr. Eberman has been a zealous worker in the Whig and Republican parties, and has served as a member of the council, school director and in several other offices. He has always been deeply interested in the educational work of his locality, and for the past twenty-five years has been a trustee of the Southwestern State Normal School, at California, of which he was the first treasurer. He and his wife are members of the M. E. Church, and he has been a trustee of same for several years. In early manhood Mr. Eberman was married to Ellen, daughter of Peter Wilson, of Elizabeth, Allegheny Co., Penn., and the names of the children born to them are as follows: Sidney, Albert, Mary, Elizabeth, Rebecca, Anna, George, John S., Charles, Wilson and Cora.

JOHN S. EBERMAN, son of George M. and Ellen Eberman, was born March 6, 1859, in California, Washington Co., Penn. He received a public-school education, and then attended the Southwestern State Normal School, at California, from which he graduated in 1878. After graduating he entered the employ of J. W. Smith, a druggist of California, remaining there until 1882, and then formed a partnership with Miss Jennie Smith in the drug business. In 1888 he purchased her interest, and has since continued the establishment, carrying on a full line of drugs and sundries, and by good management has secured a large and profitable custom. On October 23, 1886, he was married to Mary G., daughter of John Guffey. Mr. Eberman is identified with the Republican party, has served in various local offices, and in 1882 he was appointed postmaster at California, holding that position until the election of Cleveland as President, when he resigned. He has served as director of the First National Bank of California since that institution was first incorporated, and has been treasurer of the Southwestern State Normal School for the past seven years. In religious connection he is a zealous member of the M. E. Church. He has in his possession a book which has been in the family for 118 years, and a number of deeds and articles almost as ancient. He is in correspondence with a branch of the family in Stuttgart, Germany, who own the leading banking house there, and who have sent him the very interesting early history of the family.

ROBERT CARR BYERS, M. D., was born in Cumberland county, Penn., April 20, 1820, a son of Isaac and Mary (Carr) Byers. Abraham Byers, his grandfather, was also a native of Cumberland county, born near Carlisle, where he was reared and educated. He became an extensive teamster or wagoner, his route being for the most part between Baltimore and Philadelphia, and points farther west, he having as many as five teams on the road. This vocation he followed for several years and then went West, after which nothing was heard of him. He had married, in Chester county, Penn., Margaret Breneman, who bore him two children: Isaac and Samuel.

Isaac Byers, father of Robert C., was educated in the subscription schools of his native county (Chester, Penn.), and when yet a youth proceeded to Philadelphia, where he learned the trade of shoemaker. Soon after completing his apprenticeship he moved to Cumberland county, same State, and there followed his trade some years, at the end of which time he came to Washington county, and took up his residence near Canonsburg. Here he carried on another trade, that of carpenter and builder, up to 1849, in which year he moved to Portsmouth, Ohio, where he died in 1865. In 1811

he married Mary Carr, a resident of Cumberland county, and the following named eight children were born to them: Hiram, Elizabeth, Sarah (Mrs. James Munn), Mary (Mrs. David Woodring), Robert C., Isaac, Fannie and Hannah (Mrs. Masters). Mr. Byers was a Democrat in his political sympathies, and in religion he was a member of the M. E. Church, although the faith of his forefathers was Presbyterian.

Robert C. Byers was a boy when his parents came to Washington county (in 1823), and it may be said of him that he is self-educated, as his school experiences were very limited. At the age of ten years he commenced to work on a farm, and when he was about twelve years old entered the employ of his brother, Hiram, in Monongahela (then called Williamsport), to learn the tailor trade, becoming a journeyman at the end of two years. His first venture in business for himself was, in 1839, made in Bentleyville, Washington Co., Penn., where he carried on tailoring six years. In 1845 he moved to Perryopolis, Fayette county, where he remained three years. While there he studied medicine under Dr. Estep, thence, in 1848, went to Fayette City, same county (then called Cookstown), and embarked in the drug business, in which he has since continued with eminent success, moving to Belle Vernon, Fayette county, in 1860, thence, in 1873, to Monongahela, this county, where he now resides. On September 17, 1839, Dr. Byers married Emily F., daughter of Micajah Churchman, a native of Delaware, who was twice married, first time to Eliza Sinclair, of New York, who bore him the following named children: Sinclair, William, Emily F. and Caroline. Mr. Churchman's second wife was Mrs. Sarah May, widow of Rev. May, an Episcopal minister, and by her marriage with Mr. Churchman she had three children: Francis M., Edward and Henrietta. Mr. Churchman was a Whig and a strong Abolitionist; in religious faith he was a member of the Society of Friends. He was an enterprising and well-to-do farmer and stock raiser. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Byers were: Albert S.; Mary J., married to Isaac Bailey, now deceased (they had no children; she resides in Monongahela); Emma E., married to John Furnier (they reside near Allenport, Washington county, and they have seven children, viz.: Oliver, Bertha, Robert, Clyde, Thurman, Lilly and Garnet); Robert Eugene Byers, a leading druggist of Monongahela, was married to Miss Josephine Camp; William C. is a graduate physician of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and is a member of the medical firm of Copeland, Hall and Byers, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia (he married Miss Mary Clark, daughter of Capt. Wm. Clark, and resides in Pittsburgh. They had two children: Mazey, and Birdie, who died at the age of ten months); Edward I. Byers (deceased), who was a druggist, and was married to Miss Sarah Nevada Clark, and had two children: Emma and Robert W.; Theodore M. Byers, a dry-goods merchant of Monongahela, married to Miss Agnes J. Cline, of Nebraska; and Carrie L., who died at the age of three years.

The paternal ancestor of Dr. Robert C. Byers was German, while his maternal ancestor was Welsh. His grandmother, Mary Bruce, was born in Scotland, whence she came with her brothers, Robert and William Bruce, to Cumberland county, Penn. The brothers were soldiers in the war of 1812, and volunteered under Gen. Scott; both were captured and taken to England, and William died in a prison; Robert returned to Cumberland county, where he died soon after from the effects of his confinement in prison. Both these brothers died without issue. Dr. Byers is a member of the M. E. Church; in politics he was a Whig and Republican, but is now a Greenbacker. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. His wife, Emily F., had a birthright by her parents among the Society of Friends; there being no Society of Friends where she has resided since her marriage, she has united with the M. E. Church. Dr. Byers ranks among the leading men of the town, and he and his wife enjoy the confidence and respect of all who know them.

DANIEL SNYDER represents one of the earliest and most prosperous families of Washington county, his ancestors having come to the State over one hundred years ago.

They were probably natives of the eastern portion of the State, although the exact place is not known. The grandfather of our subject was the first of the family to settle in Washington county, and he made his home in Nottingham township, where his son, Peter, the father of our subject, was born and reared.

Peter Snyder was born February 23, 1823, and when a young man learned the trade of shoemaking which, in connection with farming, he followed for years, but his later life was spent in agricultural pursuits. In 1847 he married Julia A. Crabb, who was born May 9, 1830, in Fallowfield township. Her family were also early settlers of the county. Her grandfather, Henry Crabb, a shoemaker by trade, died in Fallowfield township. His son, Philip Crabb, the father of Mrs. Snyder, was twice married; his first wife died without children, and for a second wife he married Elizabeth House, who bore him children as follows: Henry, Philip, Elizabeth, Julia Ann, Lucy, Charlotte and Caroline.

The father of these children died in 1846, aged eighty-four years. The mother died some years later. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Snyder settled on the fifty-acre tract of land where our subject now makes his home, and here their children were born as follows: Mary J., the wife of Abram Stecher; Alexander, married to Flora Allman; Daniel, of whom mention is made further on; John G., who was a farmer of Fallowfield township, and died June 30, 1891; Henry M., of Carroll township, who married Cynthia Bentley; Lucretia, married to Samuel Beazell; George B., a school teacher, of Washington county, still living with his mother; Frank P., a stone mason, who also resides at his mother's home; and James S., also on the home farm. Of Peter Snyder it may be said that, although he began life with no financial assistance, by hard work and good business management he accumulated a very considerable property, having purchased 110 acres of fine land in addition to the fifty acres on which his home was first made after his marriage; on this large tract he passed the rest of his days and his widow now makes it her home. Mr. Snyder served his township in almost every capacity and was one of the most popular men in the community. He died November 23, 1882, at the age of fifty-eight years.

Daniel Snyder, the subject proper of this sketch, was born May 9, 1851, on the farm where he now resides. On June 16, 1892, he was married to Miss Alice Jacobs, a native of Allegheny county, Penn., and daughter of Isaac Jacobs, a well-known agriculturist of Washington county, but formerly of Allegheny county. Mr. Snyder, while living on the old farm, has charge of the entire farm, nearly 164 acres, and carries on a general farming and stock business, making a specialty of sheep. He is a Democrat in his political preferences, and has filled various local offices. He is a well-known man and a worthy son of honored parents.

EMMOR M. G. CRAWFORD is a native of the county, born one mile from the borough of Beallsville, June 3, 1857, a son of Mordecai and Catherine (Kreider) Crawford, the former a native of Cumberland, Md., the latter of Rankintown, Washington county, Penn. Christopher Kreider, the maternal grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was a native of Germany, and many years ago came to America, settling in Indiana, near Lake Michigan, where he died. His son, Christopher, married in Indiana, and in course of time came to Rankintown (now called West Washington), Penn., and here kept hotel for several years, working also at his trade, that of blacksmith. Returning to Indiana, he and his wife passed the remainder of their days in Cass county, the husband dying first, the wife many years afterward at the age of eighty-eight years. Their children were: Mary, Catherine, Nancy, Christopher, John, Philip, Jacob, William, and two that died when young. Of these, William, Catherine and Nancy are living: William in Logansport, Ind.; Nancy, in Cass county, Ind., and Catherine (Mrs. Crawford).

William Crawford, grandfather of subject, died in Cumberland, Md. Mordecai Crawford came to Washington county, Penn., when but a small child, and here learned wagon making with his uncle, Samuel J. Rogers, at Beallsville, a trade he followed some twenty-six years. Afterward he carried on farming operations for nine years, and then removed to Indiana. In 1862 he returned to Washington county, where he has since resided, and with his wife, who is now aged seventy-nine years, while he is nearing his ninetieth mile stone on life's journey, is making his home in Beallsville. They are the parents of eleven children, seven of whom are now living, viz.: Samuel R., in West Pike Run township; John A., in Cass county, Ind.; Margaret Emma, married to Frank D. Nicholl, of Somerset township; Monzo, in South Strabane township; Charles K., in Somerset township; E. M. G., the subject of these lines, and Josephine, wife of Ira Chamberlain, in Fayette county, Penn.

E. M. G. Crawford received a liberal education at the common schools of his district, and until twenty-six years of age lived on the paternal homestead, assisting in the manifold duties of the farm. He then learned the photographic art in Washington, working for S. G. Rodgers five and one-half years, and afterward was employed for six months by F. S. Hawkins as finisher. In 1890 he opened a gallery in Brownsville, Fayette county, Penn., which he carried on till 1891, when he returned to Washington and commenced business for his own account. Mr. Crawford has made a good start, and being well-known, exceedingly popular and a good workman, devoted to his business, keeping up to the times in improvements in his line, has a bright future before him.

On August 28, 1884, Mr. Crawford was married to Miss Annie R., daughter of W. C. La Masters, of Washington, Penn., and by this union three children have been born: Walter M. (deceased), and Leola R. and Essie May, at home.

AR. RENSHAW, proprietor of the leading livery stable in Washington, was born in 1854, in Armstrong county, Penn., as son of W. H. Renshaw, a native of Philadelphia, where he followed the occupation of a river pilot for many years, but is now a farmer in Armstrong county. He married Miss Louisa Rogers (now deceased), of "old country" parentage, and nine children were born to them, all of whom live in Armstrong county except the subject of these lines.

A. R. Renshaw was reared in his native county, at the common schools of which he received a liberal education. Early in life he learned the trade of a carpenter, which he followed for several years. On February 15, 1890, he came to Washington county, and bought out the livery stable which he has since successfully conducted. On January 1, 1890, he was united in marriage with Annie B. Kerr, of Armstrong county, Penn. Our subject's home is on East Wheeling street.

EDWARD THOMAS was born in 1809, in this county, a son of Joseph Thomas, who came to Washington county at an early period, but years afterward moved to Ohio, and died in that State. Edward grew to manhood on the home place, and in 1834 was united in marriage with Eliza Beck, whose grandfather (Isaiah Beck) was born in Philadelphia, and married in his native city, afterward moving to Washington county, where he died. Edward and Eliza Thomas first settled near Canonsburg, Penn., then moved upon the farm now occupied by their son Edmund, and reared the following children: Martha Jane (Mrs. McClellan, of Tuscarawas county, Ohio), Nancy (living in Ohio), Lydia (wife of James Johnson, of Ohio), Sarah (deceased several years ago), Isaiah (living in Chartiers township), William (living in East Finley township, this county), Mary (married to Andrew Gamble), Maggie (living in Ohio), Anna (deceased in youth), Edmund, Emma (deceased) and Caroline (Mrs. Baker Lewis, of Tuscarawas county, Ohio). The father of these children died in 1885, at the home of his son Edmund. He was an active politician, first as a Democrat and then as a Republican. Mrs. Thomas is yet living in Tuscarawas, Ohio.

ISAIAH THOMAS was born in Canonsburg, Chartiers township, and there received his early education. In 1871 he was united in marriage with Miss Mattie Agnew, daughter of Thomas and Sarah (Dougherty) Agnew, natives of this county; the father died some years ago, and the mother is now living with her daughter Mattie. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas have two sons: George N. and Albert R. After his marriage Isaiah Thomas settled on the farm where he is now living. He owns eighty-eight acres of the home farm, also fourteen acres in Canton township, and has erected a good residence and farm buildings on the place, a good gas well being an other valuable feature of his farm. Mr. Thomas is an active Republican, and has held several township offices. He and his wife are both members of the United Presbyterian Church.

EDMUND THOMAS was born November 14, 1856, in Chartiers township, Washington county. He passed his youth in Chartiers township, there receiving his elementary education in the district schools. After leaving school he began farming on the old homestead, which he now owns, and which consists of 106 acres of fertile and well-cultivated soil. He has two good gas wells on the place, and is a prosperous farmer, devoting considerable attention to stock raising. Politically he is a Republican, actively interested in the success of his party, as well as in all worthy public enterprises.

JAMES M. MELONEY, a well-known and prosperous business man of Midway, is a bright example of the results which can be obtained by those who possess energy and patience, coupled with a willing heart and physical strength. He is descended from a pioneer family of Irish extraction.

Samuel Meloney, the grandfather of the family at present under consideration, was born in eastern Pennsylvania, where he was married and had two children, Alexander and Rachel. After the death of his first wife, Samuel Meloney was united in marriage with Nancy Berry, who bore him the following family of children: William, James, Samuel, John, Mary, Kate, Margaret, Nancy, Rose, Ann, Susan and Robert. At the time of the settlement in western Pennsylvania, the land was wild, wolves and other animals yet roaming the forests; and like that of other early settlers, the life of Samuel Meloney was filled with toil, privation and danger. Politically he was actively interested in the success of the Democratic party, and in religion was a member of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church. He died on the home farm.

Alexander Meloney was born in the latter part of the eighteenth century, on the pioneer farm in Allegheny county, Penn., where his entire life was passed. He was early inducted into the mysteries of agriculture, assisting with the home work. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Jane, daughter of David McAdams, who bore him two sons, James M. and John (deceased). Alexander Meloney was a hard-working man, and was actively engaged in the growth and prosperity of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church of Robinson township, of which he was a member. He was buried in the Valley Church cemetery.

James M. Meloney, whose name commences these lines, was born July 25, 1825, in Finley township, Allegheny county, Penn., and was trained to farm work from early boyhood. He followed agricultural life for several years, and on June 17, 1849, selected, as his life companion, Isabella, daughter of Samuel Eckleson, a native of Ireland, who came with his parents to America. He was afterward married in this country to Anna McCague, and reared the following family of children: Thomas, John, Isabella, Martha, Euphemia, Samuel and Mary A. The father settled in Allegheny county, Penn., where his life was passed. He was a Whig and Republican in politics, and in religion a member of the United Presbyterian Church.

In 1870 Mr. Meloney discontinued agricultural work, and opened an undertaking establishment upon his farm. The business soon increased to such proportions that he decided to remove to town and devote his entire attention to it. Accordingly in 1880 the family moved to Midway, this county, where he carried on a very profitable business until 1891, when he sold out and retired from active life. For many years Mr. Meloney has been a zealous member of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church, having held nearly all the church offices, and is now filling the various duties of elder, trustee, collector, and treasurer of the Sabbath-school. Politically he is an ardent worker in the ranks of the Democratic party.

JOHAN HUGHES, retired farmer, is a native of Washington county, Penn., having been born in Amwell township, May 15, 1821.

His grandfather, John Hughes, a native of Ireland, came to the United States when a young man, and participated in the Revolutionary war in the capacity of captain. He married Miss Sarah Wiley, who bore him seven children: Thomas, James, Barnabas, Samuel, John, Annie and Isabella. The parents of this family both died in Washington county, and are buried in the Van-Kirk graveyard in Amwell township.

Barnabas Hughes, third son of Capt. John Hughes, was born in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., where he was reared to agricultural pursuits, attending during a few weeks in winter time the schools of the district. He married Annie Van-Kirk, of his native township, and they had seven children born to them, viz.: James, William, Thomas, John (our subject), Sarah (Mrs. Moninger), Mary (Mrs. J. C. Chambers) and Margaret (Mrs. Ross, formerly of Indiana), all now deceased except John. The parents died in Amwell township, the mother at the age of sixty-six years, and the father some years later at the age of eighty-six. They were members of the Christian Church, and in politics Mr. Hughes was for some time a Jacksonian Democrat, but of later years voted the Republican ticket.

John Hughes, the subject of this sketch, spent his early life on the farm, attending during the winter months the elementary schools of his district, after which he entered Washington College, from which he graduated in 1843, taking a classical course. He then returned to the farm and renewed his life vocation. He taught school for some time. In 1855 he removed from Amwell township, having bought the Nichol farm in Franklin township, which in 1886 he disposed of, and then moved into the borough of Washington, where he now resides.

James Meloney

In 1845 Mr. Hughes was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Samuel Nichol, of Franklin township, and they had three children born to them: Franklin and Samuel, both of whom died while young, and Mary, living with her parents. The family are members of the Christian Church, in which for forty years Mr. Hughes has been an elder. Politically he was first a Republican, but now votes the straight Prohibition ticket.

JAMES M. DAWSON. The family of which this gentleman is a prominent member has for many years been closely identified with the interests and progress of Union township, the grandfather (James) having settled here in an early day. The latter was born in Ireland, and on arriving in America came to Pennsylvania. He located on a farm near Pigeon Creek church, in Washington county, where the following children were born to him: John, Mary, Thomas, Matthew, James, Sarah, Jane, Margaret, Elizabeth, Catherine, and William.

William Dawson, youngest child of James Dawson, the pioneer, was born October 4, 1800, in the old cabin on Pigeon creek, Washington county, Penn., and his youth was passed amid the hardships and dangers inseparable from the life of a frontiersman. In 1835 he married Martha Kennedy, a native of Mingo, Washington county. After their marriage the young people resided on Pigeon creek until 1847, when they settled on a tract of seventy-five acres in Union township, same county. William Dawson passed away September 1, 1887, having been preceded by his wife, who died June 30, 1882, leaving three children, viz.: Mary J., James M. and Martha A., all of whom are living on the home place.

MANUEL STOODY is a native of Washington county, having been born in 1824 on the north fork of Pigeon creek, where his school days were passed. His father, Jacob Stoody, was born of German ancestry in 1798, in Somerset township, this county, and passed his youth on the home farm. When he was a young man, a family moved into the neighborhood from Maryland. Young Stoody soon made the acquaintance of Andrew Long, the new-comer, for his pretty daughter Barbara was a most desirable addition to the social circle. Jacob Stoody and Barbara Long soon became warm friends, and this intimacy finally culminated in their marriage. Mrs. Stoody was born in 1801 and died in 1865, leaving the following children: Margaret, wife of Joshua Craven, this county; Rosanna, married to John Guthrie, a farmer of this county; John; Manuel; Mary, wife of James Morrison, of Nottingham township, this county; Elizabeth, married to Jacob Yohe, of Carroll township, this county; Sarah, wife of Mark Yohe, cousin of Jacob Yohe; Henry, and Jacob. The father died January 13, 1831.

Manuel Stoody grew to manhood on the home farm, and in 1846 was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of John Jones, a native of Fallowfield township. The following children were born to them: Jacob A., Rachel Ann, Melissa J., William M. (deceased; he was a graduate of the Southwestern State Normal School, at California, Penn., and became a prominent teacher in the county), Louella L. (deceased; she also graduated at the Southwestern State Normal School, and afterward at the National School of Elocution and Oratory, at Philadelphia), and John H., a Methodist minister, a graduate of the University of Rochester, N. Y. The mother was called to her long home September 9, 1889. Mr. Stoody learned and until recently followed the carpenter trade, and is now farming on his place, which contains seventy acres of land, situated about six miles south of Monongahela, and four miles west of Charleroi.

THOMAS M. PATTERSON represents a pioneer family of Washington county, Penn. His grandfather, James Patterson, was born in County Down, Ireland, and received his early education in his native land. At the age of fourteen years he came with his parents to Washington county, Penn., and they settled in Canton township, on the farm now owned by John McClay, erecting their cabin home in the wild woods of the new country. At the age of twenty-six years James Patterson was married to Mary Miller, a native of Chartiers township, and after marriage the young couple settled on the farm in Hopewell township, now owned by Lemon Patterson (a grandson). Politically, James Patterson was first a Federalist, then a Whig, and next an active worker with the Abolitionists. He was among the earliest members of the Seceder Church at North Buffalo, his parents being also members of that denomination; he was a member of and elder in same for fifty years, holding that office at the time of the coalition of the Seceder and Union Churches, and was always very active in church work. He was also successful in business matters, having made his own way in the world. He died in 1868, in his ninety-second year, and was buried by the side of his wife in North Buffalo cemetery. They were the parents of the following children: Alexander, Thomas, Margaret (Mrs. Samuel Leper), Elizabeth (wife of James Richmond), Jane (married to James Armstrong), James, David, Mary (Mrs. Taggart), John and Martha.

John Patterson, son of James and Mary (Miller) Patterson, was born on the home farm in Hopewell township, this county, receiving his education in a school which was held in the upper story of a log spring house. He was married to Jane, daughter of Thomas McClellan, and they continued to reside on the old place until his death. John Patterson was originally an active Whig and Abolitionist, afterward becoming an ardent Republican; he was much interested in school matters, and served as school director for years. He was formerly a member of the Seceder Church, but later in life united with the U. P. Church at North Buffalo, contributing liberally to the support of each. Mrs. Patterson is yet living, and makes her home with her son, Lemon. The remains of Mr. Patterson were interred in the cemetery at North Buffalo.

Thomas M. Patterson, son of John and Jane (McClellan) Patterson, was born April 1, 1853, in Hopewell township, this county, where his early life was passed in attending the public schools, and in working on the farm. When but fourteen years of age he began business for himself, but remained at home some time after reaching maturity. On January 3, 1878, he was united in marriage with Lizzie, daughter of William Proudfit, of Smith township, this county. For three years after their marriage they remained on a farm in Hopewell township, then moved to another one in the same township, upon which they also lived three years, afterward settling in Burgettstown, Penn., where they have since resided. The children of Thomas M. and Lizzie (Proudfit) Patterson are John, Willie, Kate, Jennie and Thomas M. In 1891 Mr. Patterson was nominated by the Republican party for State representative, and was not only elected, but ran ahead of his ticket; he is now filling that position. He is a member of the U. P. Church of Burgettstown, in which he takes an active interest.

WILLIAM J. MUNCE, one of the prosperous agriculturists of the county, whose residence has been on East Bean street, Washington, since 1889, is a native of Washington county, having been born in South Strabane township in 1818.

His father, Robert Munce, a native of County Down, Ireland, came to America in 1803, bringing with him his wife, whose maiden name was Mary Quaile. Her father, William Quaile, came to this country and county some years later, and died in North Strabane township at an advanced age. Robert Munce bought a farm in South Strabane township, where, when our subject was but a lad, he died at the age of fifty-four years; his wife survived him several years, dying at the age of seventy-two. They were the parents of the following children: Thomas, William J., Robert (in North Strabane township), Sarah, Mary, Margaret, Jane (widow of Robert Caroes), and Catherine (wife of John McLain, in Texas), all now deceased except William J., Robert, Jane and Catherine.

William J. Munce was brought up on the old home farm, which is situated three miles northeast of Washington, receiving his education at the schools of the neighborhood. After his parents' death he married Elizabeth Miller, daughter of Hugh Miller, who came from Ireland in 1854, and died in Washington, this county, as did also his wife. To Mr. and Mrs. Munce nine children were born: Robert, Miller and Samuel (all on farms), Russell, James, Edward, Mary, and William and David (both of whom died when young). One of Mr. Munce's three farms lies in the oil belt, and comprises 630 acres in one body. Politically, our subject is a Republican, but is not now active in his party.

WILLIAM DeGARMO, who for fourscore years was a resident of Washington county, was a grandson of Paul DeGarmo, a Frenchman, who immigrated to America and died in Washington county, Penn.

Jacob DeGarmo, father of subject, was a native of the Keystone State, and was united in marriage with Hannah Ames, who was born in 1790, a daughter of Joshua Ames, a shoemaker by trade. She became the mother of fourteen children, viz.: Elizabeth, William, Sarah, Hannah, John, Mary, Martin Smith, Absalom, Jacob Johnson, Jabez Gifford, Maria (wife of William Bell), Hiram, Jerome and an infant daughter, twelve of whom lived to maturity. Jacob J., Jabez G. and Maria are in West Virginia. She died in 1882. One son, Hiram, entered the "Ringgold Battalion," and served three years under Capt. Gibson.

William DeGarmo, the subject proper of this sketch, was born December 11, 1810, in Pennsylvania, and was two years of age when his parents moved to Washington county, where he was reared and educated. On April 15, 1830, he was married to Elizabeth Case, a native of this county, daughter of Stephen Case, who died when she was a child, and their children were Julia A., wife of Isaac Hartman (she died July 3, 1864, leaving one child, six weeks old, named Lizzie, whose home was afterward made with her grandparents; her father married, for his second wife, Adeline Dague, who bore him two children: Charles Lindsey and Anna May; the father died about the year 1872); Hannah, Mrs. Thomas Lytle, of Nottingham township; Elizabeth, married to M. Hartley, of Amwell township; Lucinda, wife of Adam Fergus, of Somerset township; and Maria, who all her lifetime remained at home with her parents, caring for them in their declining years, and now that they are gone, her niece and herself remain at the old home which has been left to her by her father. On September 6, 1892, Mrs. DeGarmo passed from earth at the age of eighty-three years, and six months later, Feb. 28, 1893, her husband, at the same advanced age, followed her over the "dark river." They had been married nearly sixty-three years. Mr. DeGarmo was a Democrat and had filled several local offices. They commenced life in a very humble way, and all their possessions were accumulated by hard work and judicious economy. Mr. DeGarmo in addition to his farming pursuits made many sleds out of the roots of trees, and this industry he followed in connection with agriculture till his eyesight began to fail him. He was generally in the enjoyment of good health, was of medium size and at the time of his death his hair and beard were as white as the driven snow. The old homestead contains sixty acres of prime land.

THEODORE M. BYERS, a leading dry-goods merchant of Monongahela, is a native of the Keystone State, born November 15, 1852, in Allenport, Washington county, as son of Robert C. and Emily F. (Churchman) Byers.

Our subject received a liberal education at the common schools of his native town, and early in life commenced gaining an insight into the mercantile business in his father's drug store, where he remained several years, completely mastering that line of trade. On the death of his brother Edward L., he took his drug store, which had but recently been stocked, intending to close out the business; but after a time concluded to continue it. By energy and close attention to business he succeeded beyond his most sanguine expectations. In 1880 he embarked in his present enterprise, the dry-goods business in which he is successfully engaged.

On August 8, 1883, Mr. Byers was married to Agnes J., daughter of James Cline, of Nebraska. Mr. Byers is an active Republican in his political predilections, and in religion is a member of the M. E. Church, in which he has served as steward, and of the Sabbath-school of which he has been superintendent eleven years. Socially he is a member of Lodge No. 337, F. & A. M., Monongahela, of the Royal Arch, Chapter 219, and of St. Omer Commandery No. 7 K. T. Mr. Byers is enterprising and progressive, genial in his manner and popular among his many friends with whom he has surrounded himself.

SAMUEL DUNN (deceased) was born in 1817, in County Down, Ireland, where he received his education, and learned and followed the trade of a weaver. In 1841 he was united in marriage with Miss Grace Campbell, who was born in 1819, in County Down, Ireland, a daughter of William and Grace (Smith) Campbell, the former of whom was a merchant there.

In 1850 Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Dunn, casting their eyes to the Western World, embarked at Belfast, Ireland, on the ocean steamer "Enterprise," and a few weeks later landed at New York. With but little capital to invest, the young people succeeded in making their way successfully, although strangers in a strange land, and finally located at McDonald, in Washington county, Penn. Samuel Dunn remained there as a tenant for some time, when, having saved a considerable amount from his hard-earned savings, he bought some land at Centre (now known as Midway), in Smith township, and followed teaming, hauling coal, etc. With the assistance of his faithful wife, who was both economical and industrious, he made a fair income, and was able to save some money from his daily profits. On April 30, 1880, he was laid to rest. Mrs. Dunn is now living a retired life, in the enjoyment of the respect and good wishes of the entire community. She is a consistent member of the United Presbyterian Church, as was also her deceased husband.

JM. MOORE, M. D., a popular physician of Midway, Penn., is the eldest son of J. S. Moore, of Cecil township, this county. Dr. J. M. Moore was born March 26, 1861, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and received his early education in the common schools of the day. He then entered Canonsburg Academy, where he remained three years, meanwhile paying his way by employment outside of school hours. The young student soon decided to follow the life of a physician, and thus far he and the patients who have been under his care may congratulate themselves that such was his choice. Every man is undoubtedly adapted to some particular vocation, and that Dr. Moore has taken the vocation best suited to his talents is demonstrated by the laurels he has already won as a healer of bodily infirmities. He commenced his medical studies under the direction of Dr. J. H. Christy, of Paris, from whom he obtained a thorough and practical knowledge of the medical science. In 1883 he entered Cleveland Medical College, graduating February 25, 1885. He then began his professional career at Florence, a small town in Hanover township, this county, where he remained six years, thence moving to his present home in Midway, this county, many of his former patients yet coming from Florence to him. Dr. Moore has a large and lucrative practice, and enjoys the confidence of all who know him.

On September 23, 1886, he was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of Robert McCready, of Hanover township, this county, and one daughter has been born to them, Ola Winifred.

In church relationship the Doctor is a zealous worker in and devoted member of the United Presbyterian Church. Politically he was formerly a Republican, but since the temperance question arose has been an advocate of Prohibition.

ROBERT McCREADY is a representative of an old and well-known family. His grandfather, Alexander McCready, was born about 1760, in Ireland, where he married Sarah ———, who was born in 1758. He learned and followed the shoemaker's trade. In 1786 he sailed for America, and six months after his arrival, after making the necessary arrangements, he sent for his wife. While Mrs. McCready was on the ocean her eldest daughter were born. Soon after the family was united in this country they came to Washington county, Penn., locating in Burgettstown, where Alexander worked at his trade and other employment. He assisted in digging the race for the old mill which used to stand southeast of Burgettstown, known as "McFarland's Mill," and for doing his work received seventy-five acres of land in Smith township. He removed to this farm, and passed the remaining days of his life in agricultural pursuits. He was a Whig in politics. He died February 24, 1850, his wife on May 25, 1847, and they were buried in the U. P. cemetery of Burgettstown, Penn. They left the following children: Ann (Mrs. John Maxwell), Alexander, John, William, Robert, Rebecca (wife of John Custard), and Mary (Mrs. White), all now deceased.

Robert McCready was born in 1801, near Burgettstown, Penn., where he attended the rate schools of that period, and learning the shoemaker's trade, followed it in Burgettstown. In early life he was married to Mary Reed, who was born in Allegheny county, Penn., in 1797. The young couple lived a short time in Burgettstown, thence moving to Pittsburgh, Penn., where he worked at his trade, and later conducted a hotel on Smithfield street, opposite the present site of the "Monongahela House." In 1840 he left Pittsburgh and returned to Burgettstown. In 1842 he removed to Hanlin Station, Washington county, and there passed the remainder of his life. In politics he was a lifelong Democrat. He died in 1872, his wife having crossed the river October 15, 1859, and both were buried in the U. P. cemetery at Paris. Their children were as follows: Sarah Jane (Mrs. Lewis Saxton, of Pittsburgh); Alexander (who died in Brooke county, W. Va.); Robert (our subject); Margaret Ann (Mrs. William Beall, of Hanover township); and Mary E. (married to James Gibson).

Robert McCready was born December 10, 1833, in Pittsburgh, Penn. When but a small boy his parents removed to Hanlin Station, Washington county, where he was educated; he learned the trade of a shoemaker. On March 24, 1859, he was married to Elizabeth Gibson, who was born November 16, 1836, daughter of Robert and Jane (Cunningham) Gibson, of Hanover township, a representative of one of the oldest families in the vicinity. The following children have been born to Robert and Elizabeth McCready: Mary (wife of Dr. J. M. Moore, of Midway, Penn.); Jennie V. (Mrs. John McConnell, of Hanover township); Luella (at home); Robert D. (a clerk at McDonald, Penn.); James A. and George G. (both living with their parents). Mr. and Mrs. McCready began wedded life on the place near Hanlin Station, where he worked at his trade, then went to Brooke county, W. Va., thence coming to Jefferson township, this county. He erected a home on a small piece of land which he had purchased in Jefferson township, residing there till 1872, then settled on his present piece of excellent farming land, called the "old Gibson homestead," in Hanover township. He has ever since resided on this tract, being engaged in general farming, small-fruit growing, stock raising and the dairy business, prospering in each department. He votes with the Democratic party, and in religion both he and his wife are members of the U. P. Church.

GREER McILVAIN. The McIlvain family were originally natives of New Jersey, where the grandfather (also named Greer McIlvain) was born and reared to manhood. Over a century has rolled away since he, with his brother George, first came to Washington county, Penn., and locating on a farm in Somerset township, died there at an advanced age.

Greer McIlvain, son of the pioneer, Greer, was born October 14, 1793, on the farm in Somerset township, Washington county, Penn. He attended the subscription schools and passed his entire life in that township. There he married Jane, daughter of Robert C. Campbell. The latter was of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and took part in the Revolutionary war. In early life he was married to a Miss Paxton, and they were early settlers of this county. The father died in 1840, at the age of ninety-eight years, followed by his wife in her 105th year. To Mr. and Mrs. McIlvain were born Eliza, widow of John Kerr, of Butler county, Penn., and mother of Rev. G. M. Kerr; Martha, now living with her relatives in Illinois, formerly resided with her father until his death; Mrs. Margaret Clark, a widow, living in Illinois; Mrs. Jane Greenlee, also a resident of Illinois; Mary Ann, deceased in 1855; R. C., a prominent agriculturist of Somerset township; and Greer. The father was a staunch supporter of the Republican party, having taken an active interest in all public matters. In religion he was a member and elder of the Presbyterian Church, with which his wife and daughters were also identified. He died in June, 1889, at the age of ninety-six years.

Greer McIlvain, son of Greer and Jane, was born October 13, 1825, on the home farm in Somerset township. He attended some time at the subscription and public schools, and assisted his father with the duties of the farm for several years after attaining his majority. He was married November 14, 1850, to Elizabeth, daughter of F. H. Williams, a native of Fallowfield township, and a member of an old family. In 1861 Mr. McIlvain came to his present home in Carroll township, which is a beautiful farm of 150 acres, bounded on the east by the Monongahela river. He yet superintends the care of the place, and has been a very enterprising citizen. He is a Republican, and was in the Revenue service nine years during the administrations of Grant, Hayes, Garfield and Arthur. Mr. and Mrs. McIlvain are members of the Presbyterian Church. Their children are Francis William, living in Charleroi, Washington county; Mary Virginia, at home; James Edgar, a lumberman of Pittsburgh; Charles G., a rising attorney of Pittsburgh and Monongahela; Ida Jane and Rose Ella, living on the home place.

JOSEPH H. LITTLE, M. D. In the year 1066 William the Conqueror, with his horde of Normans, effected a landing in England, and at the battle of Hastings asserted his claim to the throne of England. Of the many thousands of descendants to-day of the Norman heroes the only family in Ireland who can claim direct lineage are the Littles, of whom the subject of this sketch is a member.

Moses Little, his grandfather, was born in County Down, Ireland, whence, when a young man, he emigrated to this country, settling in Washington county, Penn., where he purchased land in Strabane (now South Strabane) township. At that time Virginia still claimed jurisdiction over this section of the country, and the land was only partly improved. Wild animals were numerous, and neighbors had long distances to go through the dense forest to visit each other. Moses Little's first home on his settlement was made of logs, but that has long since given place to modern improvements, and all that is now left of the surroundings of those primitive days is the ever-living spring of water which flowed near the door of the old log house. Here, in Washington county, Mr. Little married Margaret Locke, who had come from Ireland in the same ship he did. They were the parents of four children, viz.: John, who died in Franklin, Venango Co., Penn.; David, who died in South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn.; Moses, father of Dr. Little, and Mary, deceased wife of Zach. Reynolds (their son, Squire D. L. Reynolds, is now a resident of South Strabane township).

Moses Little, the third son of Moses and Margaret (Locke) Little, was born in 1800, on a farm in what is now South Strabane township, and was there reared to agricultural pursuits. In 1823 he was united in marriage with Miss Nancy, daughter of Joseph Harris, of Amwell township, this county, and the children born to them were Em-line (still living); Margaret, widow of Samuel W. Melvin (deceased), and the mother of two children—Alice and Anna; John H., a farmer in South Strabane township; Leroy Woods, who practiced law in Washington, Penn., and died in 1873, leaving a widow but no children; Dr. Joseph H. and Moses, living in Washington. The father died of heart disease November 11, 1875, on the farm now owned by his son Moses. He began life quite a poor boy, having been disinherited by his father for some imaginary trivial offense, but he made a success. At one time he was coroner of the county, and he was an elder in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. The mother died in 1879 at the age of eighty-four years.

Joseph H. Little was born in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn. (on the line of South Strabane township), May 6, 1835, and grew to manhood on the farm, sharing in the many duties incident to agricultural life. His primary education was received at the common schools of the neighborhood, and later he attended select schools, after which he entered Washington College, where he took a classical course. On June 21, 1855, on completion of the college course, he received the degree of A. B.; in June, 1858, the degree of A. M. from the same institution; in March, 1859, M. D. from the University of Pennsylvania, and February 22, 1861, Ad Eundem degree of M. D. from Columbia University, Washington, D. C. During his vacations he taught school, whereby he acquired means to enable him to prosecute his studies and aid him through his course. Having completed his studies, our subject was then appointed principal of Blairsville Academy, in Indiana county, Penn., which incumbency he filled one year, and then received the appointment of principal of the academy at West Alexander, this county. While at Blairsville he commenced the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. J. W. Answalt, of that place, afterward continuing same under Dr. John Wishart & Son, of Washington, this county. He began the practice of his profession in Allegheny county, Penn., residing one year at Library, that State, and then proceeded to Washington, D. C., to fill the position of resident physician at a hospital, receiving the appointment under President Buchanan. Here he remained until March, 1861, when he again came to West Alexander, and commenced practice. He had planned to go to North Carolina, but the breaking out of the Rebellion caused him to change his plans. In West Alexander he remained some thirteen years, or until 1874, in which year, owing to his father's failing health, he came into the borough of Washington, where he has since remained, successfully practicing his chosen profession. The Doctor has been a busy man, his ride extending far and wide in the county, and even beyond, no weather ever being too cold or stormy, and no night at any time too dark or disagreeable to prevent him from speeding on his mission of humanity. His practice is a general one, and he has been eminently successful in all branches. His library is replete with modern works, for the Doctor, busy as he is, finds time to drink of the Pierian spring, and he keeps well abreast with the times.

On March 26, 1862, Dr. Little was married to Margaret Ann, daughter of Harvey Wadsworth, of Allegheny county, of English descent. By this union there is one son, George B., now a druggist at Greensburgh, Westmoreland Co., Penn. Politically Dr. Little is a Democrat, and in 1870 he ran for the State Legislature, but the District being Republican he was defeated. Socially he is a member of the Masonic Fraternity, and of the Second Presbyterian Church at Washington. The Doctor is possessed of a remarkably rugged constitution, and is endowed with robust health. He would frequently be engaged in harvest work during the day, overseeing the hands, and then at night be riding over the country, visiting his numerous patients. The residence of Dr. Joseph H. Little is No. 215 South Main street, in the borough of Washington.

DR. A. LEGRAND RUNION, a successful and popular physician of Canonsburg, Penn., is a representative of an old and prominent pioneer family of Pennsylvania. His ancestors were among the number of persecuted French Huguenots, whose wrongs have been so graphically pictured in the immortal lines of Longfellow's "Evangeline." During the Huguenot troubles in Europe, the family went to Bavaria, and in the latter part of the eighteenth century one Richard Runion, leaving his native land, came to America, locating in New Jersey. Prior to his immigration he had married a young countrywoman, Margaret Jønsenie, who bore him children as follows: Charles, Richard (a soldier in the war of 1812, and buried at Meadville), Jonathan, Rachel (buried at Bedford, Penn.), and Sarah (buried at Carlisle, Penn.). The father was a plasterer by trade; in church relation he was a Seceder.

Charles Runion, son of Richard and Margaret Runion, was born in New Jersey, and passed his boyhood on the home place. He learned the plasterer's trade, and followed that vocation throughout life. He married Martha Moorehead, a native Chambersburg, Penn., and their children were: Richard, William C. (a resident of Carrollton, Ohio), Charles S., Jonathan, Wallace, Margaret (widow of George F. Kennedy, who was a captain in the war of the Rebellion, and died from the effects of wounds received in the battle of the Wilderness), Mary, Martha (wife of Isaac Harsh), and Rebecca (married to Hugh McCart). Of this family Richard, William C., Jonathan and Margaret are yet living. Mr. and Mrs. Runion moved to West Middletown, Penn., some years after their marriage, remaining there three years, then went to Carrollton, Ohio, where he died.

Richard Runion was born May 15, 1819, in Chambersburg, Penn., where his boyhood was passed. He then learned the saddler's trade in Carrollton, Ohio, following that business nine years, and afterward entered a general store, retiring from business in 1869. When a young man he was united in marriage with Dorothy Prosser, a resident of Carrollton, Ohio, and five children were born to their marriage, namely: A. LeGrand, Etta (wife of George A. Carus), Viola, Florence and Martha. Mr. Runion has been a Whig and Republican, having served as a member of the council and trustee of Canonsburg. His wife died March 2, 1892.

Dr. A. LeGrand Runion was born September 16, 1850, in Carrollton, Carroll Co., Ohio. He remained at home until eighteen years of age, then worked eleven months in a printing office at Salem, Columbiana Co., Ohio, afterward entering the Free Press office in Carrollton, same State. In November, 1872, he entered the employ of T. M. Potts, Canonsburg, Washington Co., Penn., with whom he remained until the autumn of 1874. On June 2, 1874, he selected as a helpmeet Nancy E., daughter of Howe Dunlap. After their marriage the young couple resided one year in Martin's Ferry, Belmont Co., Ohio, and he then took a course at the Pittsburgh School of Pharmacy. After leaving this, Dr. Runion followed the drug business for four months in Sharon, Mercer Co., Penn., then opened a drug store in Canonsburg, this county. He resided here two years, studying medicine, and teaching chemistry and physiology in Jefferson Academy. At the end of that time he took a three months' course of study in the Homœopathic Medical College, followed by two years at the Western Pennsylvania Medical College, receiving his degree in March, 1888. During his course at the Medical College he was the assistant of the resident physician of the Allegheny County General Hospital, and after graduation located in Canonsburg, where he has achieved a well earned reputation as a skillful and intelligent physician, having a large and lucrative practice. Dr. Runion has made a special study of pathology, bacteriology and microscopy. Politically he is a Republican, and in church connection a zealous member of the Chartiers U. P. Society.

GLINTON TEEPLE was born March 28, 1841, in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn. He is a grandson of Isaac Teeple, who was born August 1, 1760, in the State of New Jersey.

At the age of seventeen years Isaac Teeple came to Washington county, Penn., locating at Columbia, in "Horseshoe Bottom" (so called by the Indians), Carroll township. On November 22, 1788, he married Catherine Castner, who was born January 24, 1772, a member of one of the earliest families. The young pair began wedded life on a new farm in Carroll township, where he erected a log cabin and conducted one of the first distilleries in that locality, a business he followed throughout life in connection with farming. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics voted with the Democratic party. The names and dates of birth of the children of this couple are as follows: Jeremiah, October 26, 1790; Christopher and Peter, August 6, 1792; Mary, September 1, 1794; Joseph, December 13, 1797; Elijah, January 7, 1799; Elizabeth, February 27, 1801; Isaac, February 11, 1803; Michael, May 9, 1805; Katie, March 29, 1807; Christina, April 12, 1809; Susanna, October 29, 1811; and Teresa, April 4, 1814. The father died September 17, 1828, followed by Mrs. Teeple January 9, 1849, and both were buried in the cemetery at Monongahela City.

Michael Teeple, father of subject, was born on the old homestead in Carroll township, and attended the subscription schools of the neighborhood until thirteen years of age. In early manhood he married Eliza J., daughter of Jesse Montra, of Monongahela City, and they had four children, viz.: Jesse, Clinton, Thomas B., and Catherine B., wife of R. B. Fry. During his earlier life Mr. Teeple conducted a distillery, but after the death of his parents he devoted his entire attention to farming and stock raising. He was a very industrious, enterprising man, and was ever interested in public questions, especially those pertaining to religious or educational progress. In politics he was an active supporter of the Democratic party, and was equally zealous in upholding the Presbyterian Church, with which he was identified. He died November 6, 1874, followed by his wife March 4, 1883, and both are buried in the cemetery at Monongahela City.

Clinton Teeple passed his early youth at home, receiving a common-school education. In 1862 he enlisted in Company E, Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry. After his term of service had expired he re-enlisted and remained until the close of the war, having participated in all the battles of his regiment. He entered as a private, and was first promoted to the rank of orderly sergeant, in which position he remained eighteen months, then became second lieutenant. He was at the battle of Winchester during Sheridan's famous ride, had two horses shot from under him, and was under fire fifty-two times. He was mustered out June 9, 1865, and returned home to Washington county, Penn. On February 15, 1867, Mr. Teeple married Margaret A., daughter of William Wickerham, and they first located on a farm in East Bethlehem township, this county, then lived on another farm for six months, after which they came to the home place. In 1875 they went to Lucas county, Iowa, but returned to the old place two years later, where they have since resided. Mr. Teeple is a Democrat, but votes independently; is a member of the G. A. R., Post 60; also of the F. & A. M. Mr. and Mrs. Teeple have three children, viz.: Nannie B., wife of Charles O. Weaver; C. C. W., and Gertrude M.

SAMUEL B. LINDLEY, one of the successful business men of Claysville, is a grandson of Philip Lindley, who was a native of the State of New Jersey, which had been the home of the family for many generations. Philip Lindley was married four times, and had six children. He learned the trade of a gunsmith, which he followed the greater part of his life. When the country was wild and inhabited only by Indians he came to Washington county, Penn., and amid the forests of Morris township selected a small tract of land, to which he afterward added, and on which he erected a cabin home. He was a soldier in the Revolution, and served under Washington till the close of the war. While in one battle he was struck by a bullet, which inflicted a painful, but not a dangerous wound, and as they dare not probe for it, the leaden missile remained with him, a relic of those days of hardship and danger. Mr. Lindley was an earnest, energetic citizen, and in politics he was a Democrat.

Lewis Lindley was born in the pioneer home in Morris township, Washington county, and received a limited education in the subscription schools. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Bethany, daughter of Bethuel Day, and the following children were born to their union: Lucretia (Mrs. Daniel McAllister), Caleb, Stephen, Blachly, Lucinda (Mrs. Isaac Condit), Samuel B., Hannah (Mrs. Andrew Squier), Cordelia (Mrs. Leonard Baker), Parmelia (Mrs. Colin Andrew), and Elias D. Mr. Lewis Lindley was interested in all public movements, and in politics was a Democrat. He died in the year 1860, and was soon followed by his faithful wife.

Samuel B. Lindley was born in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., and received a good education in the common schools. In 1841 he came to Claysville, Donegal township, and served an apprenticeship of two and a half years with Daniel Kirk, a harness and saddle maker. He afterward remained a year or two in the employ of Mr. Kirk, doing the work of a journeyman. He then went to West Finley township, this county, where he remained two years, thence to Greene county, same State, and lived there two years. He then engaged in the milling business at Lone Pine, Washington county, and three years later purchased a farm in West Finley township, residing upon it twelve years. Finally he settled in his present home in Claysville. In early life he married Isabella—who bore him two children: Lewis and Lucretia (Mrs. Russell). For his second wife he was united in marriage with Margaret Laird, and she also had two children: Eliza (Mrs. Theodore Bell) and John K. His third wife was Mary Alexander, and to their union were born children as follows: Alexander, Mary Margaret (Mrs. Dr. McDough), Montville, Elias D., Luther D., Laura L. and Mary. For his fourth wife he married Mrs. Mary Hendershot, and they have two daughters: Bessie and Cordelia C.

On August 8, 1862, Mr. Lindley enlisted in Company K, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and served throughout the war in the army of the Potomac. Before the war he was a Democrat, but since that time has voted the Republican ticket.

SAMUEL TAGGART. Among the well-known and influential husbandmen of Chartiers township our subject is prominently identified, occupying a leading position among the agricultural and business men. He is descended from an old and well-known pioneer family of Washington county.

James Taggart, the earliest ancestor of whom we have an authentic record, was born in Ireland and immigrated to America, locating first in Philadelphia, where he was married to Margaret Ferguson, and in 1784 moved to Washington county, settling on a farm in Canton township. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, being the first trustee elected in Washington county, and the organization is yet in existence, having passed its centennial. He and his wife both died in Canton township many years ago.

James Taggart was born on the home farm in Canton township, and selected a life companion in the person of Martha Fergus, who bore him children as follows: Margaret (wife of Dr. McCall, of Cambridge, Ohio), Thomas (deceased in 1836), James (living in Canton township), Samuel, Sarah (wife of John McClay, Canton township), Rebecca, William, John and Mary. Of these children James and Samuel are the only ones now living. William, John and Mary died of scarlet fever. Mr. and Mrs. Taggart settled on a farm in Canton township. He was an early member of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics was an ardent Democrat, being actively interested in county matters. James Taggart died in this county August 29, 1863, his wife having preceded him many years.

Samuel Taggart, the subject proper of this sketch, was born May 5, 1826, on the home place in Canton township, this county, and received his early education in the township schools. In 1849 he married Jemima Hannah Kyle, a native of Harrison county, Ohio, and daughter of William Kyle. Mr. Kyle was born in Ireland, and came to America when but a boy, settling in Harrison county, Ohio, where he married a native of Mercer county, Penn., and where he followed farming and died about 1863. His wife had passed away some years before. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Taggart settled in Chartiers township, on 160 acres of land, which contained a good gas well. He has put down another well since purchasing the farm, besides making various other improvements. Mrs. Taggart died in 1862, leaving one daughter, Jennie (wife of Osear Wilson, of Canton township), and in 1866 Mr. Taggart married Elizabeth Allison, a daughter of John and Ann (Paxton) Allison, the former a native of Washington county, the latter of Mercer county, Penn.; they settled in this county at an early day. Of this union two children were born, both of whom died in infancy, and the mother followed them in 1869. In 1887 Mr. Taggart married Mary E. Seaman, daughter of Alexander and Margaret (Daggs) Seaman, natives of this county. The father died in 1886, the mother a short time before. Mr. Taggart is an active worker in the Republican party, and has held various offices, such as member of the school board, supervisor, and other offices of trust and responsibility.

JACOB MILLER.

Heaven is not reached by a single bound;
We build the ladder by which we rise,
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies
And we mount to its summit round by round.

Never were words more true than is the poetic declaration just quoted; true in regard to the heavenly life, and equally applicable to our struggles for earthly success. Holland possessed a wonderful knowledge of human nature, as is evinced in every line of his writing, which never fails to find an answering chord in the heart of the reader. The really successful business men are those who have mounted "round by round" to the summit of their lives, pausing not to moan over the hardships by the way, but ever climbing higher "act to the living present, heart within and God o'erhead." Of such material is the gentleman whose name opens this biography.

His father, Charles Miller, was born and reared in Germany, receiving an education in the schools of his native land. When nineteen years of age, Charles Miller bade farewell to the Fatherland, and turned his face to the shores of America. After his arrival he first located in Pennsylvania, and was married in Lancaster county to Elizabeth Getlmocher, a lady of German descent, and they reared a family of sixteen children. He was a weaver by trade, following that vocation until 1827, when he came to Washington county and opened a tavern. He was a prosperous man, and in politics a member of the Democratic party. He died in 1846.

Jacob Miller was born November 22, 1819, near Baltimore, Md., and passed his youth at home, receiving a country-school education. In 1835 he came to Washington county and commenced the tanners' trade with N. F. Brobst, remaining four and one-half years. On July 1, 1840, he was united in marriage with Sarah, daughter of Simon Wolf, and to this union were born eleven children, two of whom are deceased. Mr. Miller began life on a salary of $5.00 per week, and at the time of his marriage had $40.00 with which to meet his new responsibilities. In 1844 he opened a tin and stove store on Main street, being also engaged in roofing. He retired from business in 1887, having accumulated an independent competence. He was one of the incorporators of the Gas Company, and also of the Natural Gas Company of Washington, and has ever been interested in all public enterprises. In politics he is an Independent Democrat, and in religious faith a member of the M. E. Church.

ROBERT McMILLAN is a son of Robert McMillan, whose parents were natives of Ireland, and came to America many years ago. Robert McMillan, the father, was born in 1751, in York county, Penn., where he learned the trade of cloth-dressing. He moved to Beaver county, Penn., and there followed his trade for several years, finally settling on a farm in Washington county, Penn. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Thompson, who was born in 1751, near Canonsburg, Washington county. They were the parents of three children, of whom Robert was the eldest. The father died in 1833; his wife had preceded him in 1814.

Robert McMillan was born in 1808, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., and in 1837 was united in marriage with Elizabeth Bennett, who was born in 1812, in Fayette county, Penn. She died in 1865, leaving the following children: Leander, who served for three years in the Civil war, in the Twenty-sixth Illinois Regiment (he took part in the battle of Shiloh, was in Sherman's march to the sea, and in various other engagements; he was shot in the shoulder, and died of disease contracted in the service); Harvey, who also served three years in the Twenty-sixth Illinois Regiment (he was sick for two years, being confined to hospital for some months; he is now residing in Pittsburgh); Mary, wife of Jacob Gibson; Amanda, deceased wife of Smith Carson; Robert, living with his father on the home farm; Jane, living at home; Cynthia, also at home; and John, who owns a large drug store in Washington. Mr. McMillan owns 164 acres of a well-cultivated stock farm, six miles from Monongahela, and though over eighty-five years have passed over him, he is yet able to superintend the farm work, being remarkably active for a man of his age. The men of this family have all been active supporters of the Democratic party, and in religion all are members of the Methodist Church.

THE WILSON FAMILY, of whom this biographical sketch treats, are very prominently identified with the early leading citizens of Washington county. They come of Scotch-Irish ancestry. Robert and Thomas were the only ones of the family to come to this country, and they were from County Antrim, Ireland. Thomas married, but left no family. Robert married a Welsh lady, Martha Ewing by name, who was an orphan and came from east of the mountains. When the Wilsons came to this country is not known, as the records are lost, but it was not later than some time in the seventies of last century. They were married in this country, and settled in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn. In religion they were Seceders (now United Presbyterian). In the early times it was customary for the neighbors to help each other at log-rollings; in harvest time at reaping grain, which was done with sickles, and in mowing grass, which was done with scythes; and it was considered something to be the best reaper or mower in the neighborhood, also the best scutcher of flax, which was a common employment, as the early settlers made their own linen and also their own woollen goods. In those days the young ladies, instead of playing the piano, had to play on the spinning-wheel, and to be a good spinner she must spin her dozen cuts of yarn per day. The ladies also helped scutch flax; also weave linen, tow-cloth and flannel, all their every-day wear being made at home.

Robert Wilson, while returning from a reaping party at one of his neighbors, it then getting late, had to go through a large tract of woods, when he found he was being followed by a panther. He was carrying two sickles, and he kept jingling them together and facing the animal; as it moved around him, he still kept his eyes on it, and jingled his sickles, when at last it gave it up and moved off, greatly to Mr. Wilson's relief. Wild animals and wild turkeys were quite common then. Robert and Martha E. Wilson had seven children born to them, viz.: James, Isabell, Jane, William, Annie, Thomas and Mary. James married Jane Gilmore, by whom he had ten children. Robert, the eldest married, had no children. Elizabeth married John Murray, the owner of what is now known as the "Morganza farm;" died and left no family. Nancy, Bell and Eleanor, all deceased, no family. Martha married the Rev. David Collins, and had one son, now living in Allegheny, a lawyer by profession. William L., a U. P. minister of the Gospel, married and left one child - Mrs. Yourd, of Mansfield, Penn. James married three times, and left two daughters and one son by his first wife, and two daughters by his second. Thomas, a U. P. minister, now living (it is believed) in Portland, Oregon, married and has several children. Mary A. is now living with her niece, Mrs. Yourd, of Mansfield. James, Sr., inherited the old homestead in Cecil township, to which he added others. James, Jr., and Robert were both farmers, in politics Republicans, in religion United Presbyterians.

Thomas Wilson, youngest son of Robert and Martha Wilson, was educated at Washington and Jefferson College and was a Seceder minister of the Gospel. He was pastor of Carrollton Church, Carrollton, Ohio. In 1841 he married Jane Brown, of Smith township, Washington Co., Penn., and they had four children: James B., Robert D., Martha J. and Thomas E. The sons all responded to the call of their country during the Rebellion. Thomas E. died of measles while in Alabama, and was interred there. Robert married and has two children: William and Naunie; lives in Jefferson county, Ohio. James married and has two children: Carrie and Eva Mary; lives in Harrison county, Ohio. Martha J. married and lives in Jefferson county, Ohio; no children. Their father, Thomas, inherited his uncle's estate in Cecil township, Washington county, which he sold.

William E. Wilson, second son of Robert and Martha E. Wilson, was reared to farm life, and devoted his time to agricultural pursuits. He was married to Margaret, daughter of John Park, a son of Samuel and Margaret Park, natives of the North of Ireland, who came to America in the same vessel and were married in America; they were six months on the ocean, the passage being a very stormy and perilous one. The ancestral records were lost, and we have no knowledge of their ancestry. Samuel Park dealt considerably in horses; he returned three times to Ireland, and imported horses from that country. They settled in Donegal township, Lancaster Co., Penn., where they resided until the close of the Revolutionary war. There were born to them three sons and two daughters: John, James, Isabell, Mary and Hugh. In the autumn of 1777 Samuel Park came over the mountains into what is now Washington county, and bought of Matthew Rogers, of Yohogania county, Colony of Virginia, in consideration of £450 in hand paid, a parcel of land on Chartiers waters, and containing 566 acres, the bill of sale being dated December 7, 1777. He then returned to Lancaster county. His sons, John and James, were sent in advance to clear the land, build a cabin and plant a crop. Their sister Isabell came as housekeeper. The preparations being made, the rest of the family moved out.

John Wilson was born December 18, 1758, married Sarah McDowell in June, 1787, and from them has sprung the Park family, one of whose history we are endeavoring to sketch. Sarah McDowell was the daughter of Hon. John McDowell and Agnes Bradford, his wife, and was born October 24, 1769. Mr. McDowell was born September 23, 1736, in the North of Ireland, near Belfast. Nothing is known of his ancestry except that they came from Scotland, and that his father was a judge and a man of prominence. But to return to John, the father of Sarah: When a young man he came to this country and lived awhile in or near Elizabethtown, N. J., where he met and married Agnes Bradford, and they afterward lived for some years at Peach Bottom, York Co., Penn. In company with the Bradfords, Scotts and Allisons of that region, they removed to Washington county about the year 1773. Mr. McDowell obtained a tract of land containing 410 acres, and erected a log cabin which has been rendered memorable as being the place where Rev. John McMillan, D. D., preached his first sermon in this western country, as learned from the Doctor's diary (this was on the fourth Sabbath or 22d day of August, 1775). This log cabin was afterward superseded by a two-story log cabin with a mammoth fireplace, which was long considered the finest dwelling in that vicinity. Mr. McDowell was one of the first elders in Chartiers church; one of the first commissioners of Washington county; one of the Council of Censors for the State, and was appointed one of the Associate Judges of the Court of Common Pleas for Washington county, by the Governor, Thomas McKean. We now return to Sarah, his daughter, who married John Park in June, 1787; they settled on a farm there owned by him, called "Experiment," where they lived seven years. His father having died, he then bought the homestead called "Deer Park," where they spent the remainder of their days. John Park, though quite young at the outbreak of the Revolutionary war, did not withhold his services from his country. During that struggle he acted as a scout for some time, and rendered valuable service, but was in no severe engagement. He preceded his parents in their removal to Washington county. He is said to have recrossed the mountains over a dozen times, and brought back salt and other necessities, which commodities were carried on pack horses, and journeys were slow and wearisome, and they were occasions of much fatigue, exposure and self-denial. During his early history he had frequent calls from the Indians, but these were generally of a friendly character. He was an active member of the church, and for years served as a trustee. One of them relates that she never knew him to stay at home from church, even on stormy days. Sarah Park, his wife, was of vigorous mind and extraordinary industry; she was in every sense a helpmeet to her husband. This incident will illustrate her nerve: A wolf caught a lamb in the meadow below the house, and she saw it in the act, and seizing a stick started in pursuit of it. By the time the wolf reached the fence, she was close upon it, and in attempting to cross, the lamb was dropped, and she recovered it alive, though severely wounded. Like her husband, she was a devoted Christian. They often walked five miles to church when the roads were bad, or the horses had been worked hard in the busy season. One of the family remembers that she walked more than she wanted to, and says "when mother thought they ought to go, there was no alternative." The first cabin was built over one hundred years ago. It was constructed of roughly hewn logs, puncheon floor, and had but one room. This sufficed until enough land was cleared to afford sustenance. Then a two-story edifice was built, which was considered superior to the average house of the neighborhood, as it had glass windows and a floor of boards. This was burned down about the 1st of August, 1836, with a part of the contents. The furniture in early times was plain, but durable; the chairs were split-bottomed, straight-backed and unpainted; carpets were at first unknown, and afterwards were home-made; the cooking was done at an open fireplace, with its crane and andirons, the baking being done either in the Dutch oven or in an outside oven; the dishes were decorated with colored figures much like some of the present time; pewter dishes, spoons and plates, and also wooden ones, were used. The writer of this sketch saw quite a quantity of George Washington's household goods, and among other things were some plates such as are common at the present day—white, with a blue edge; some were pewter and some were wooden; also a pewter coffee-pot. A secretary, bequeathed by Judge McDowell to John Park, and considered in his day a fine piece of furniture, is now in possession of one of the descendants, and also the family clock, extending from the floor to near the ceiling. The clothing of the early settlers was chiefly of home manufacture, being made of flax or wool. Mrs. Park was considered an expert—she could spin her sixteen cuts per day, and could weave her ten yards of cloth per day—six yards being an ordinary day's work for women. This home manufacture formed the ordinary wear for both male and female, except on special occasions, when the latter would wear calico, costing at that time about $1 per yard. Bonnets were mostly of straw, and were worn two or three years without change. The men in early times wore knee-breeches to church, and on special occasions; at home they wore linsey pants and woolen wamuses. Shoes for wearing abroad were made of thick cloth with leather soles, and in winter shoes were made of strong leather sewed with flaxen thread well waxed. The school-house was about a mile from home, and was constructed of logs; the room was separated into two parts, the larger being laid with puncheon floor and occupied by the school, while the smaller part was used as a stable to keep the master's horse in during school hours. The seats were small logs split and shaved, and were without backs; the windows were made by cutting out a portion of a log and covering the aperture with greased paper to admit the light. The term only lasted three or four months.

The Park family attended the Chartiers church, the pastor being Rev. John McMillan, D. D. He usually gave them two long sermons, with a half hour between as intermission. He paid little regard to dress, and often appeared in the pulpit in knee-breeches made of buckskin (the fronts of them so japanned with grease that they glistened), and without either coat, vest or suspenders; but his heart was in his work, and he gave them the Gospel truth in an impressive manner. The writer of this heard the Rev. John Lee say that when Doctor McMillan and another minister (whose name the writer forgets) were on their way from east of the mountains to Washington county, their provisions ran out with the exception of a little parched corn and bear's grease; that after they had eaten this a few times, and their stomachs turned against it, they prayed that as they were engaged in the Lord's work He would provide them with what they needed. They were asked if the Lord gave them anything else to eat. "No," said they, "but He gave us stomachs to eat what we had." They traveled for days without coming to any habitation, and at night lay down without anything over them except the blue sky and stars. Carriages were unknown then, and the traveling was by horseback principally, with a pair of saddle-bags to carry what they wanted to take with them. The produce was hauled in wagons to Pittsburgh, and there sold. Wheat varied in price from 50 cents to $1 per bushel; corn and oats from 12 cents to 30. The river was crossed sometimes in skiffs, but chiefly in flat-boats propelled by poles. Teams were afterward taken across in horse-boats. When in market butter was sold sometimes as low as 5 cents per pound, and at other times as high as 50; eggs as low as 6¼ cents per dozen, and as high as 30. The social gatherings were chiefly weddings, singings, huskings, quiltings and log-rollings. The weddings generally occupied two days; on the first the groom was attended by a company of his friends to the home of the bride, their way being often obstructed by trees being felled across the way by mischievous neighbors, or other obstructions placed in the way. What part the Park family took in these amusements the writer does not know.

But to return to the family: John and Sarah Park had ten children born to them, viz.: Agnes, John, Samuel, William, Margaret, James, Isabell, Sarah, McDowell and Rebecca. Of these, Margaret married, May 30, 1822, William E. Wilson, son of Robert and Martha E. Wilson, and for seven years they lived on the old homestead farm of the Wilsons. On April 10, 1829, they settled on a farm called "Plenty," near Burgettstown, Washington Co., Penn., which they had purchased a short time before. He was a successful farmer and wool grower. In 1837 he was elected elder in the Seceder Church of Burgettstown, a position he held until the union with the Associate Reformed Church in 1858. He stood aloof from this union, and remained a Seceder. He died October 2, 1870, when almost eighty years of age, being followed in 1881 by his widow in her eighty-fifth year. They had eight children: Sarah A., Samuel P., Martha E., Nancy (deceased), Isabell V., John P., Rebecca (wife of Thomas Malone), and William L. (deceased).

SAMUEL P. WILSON spent his early years at home on the farm, and then engaged in the mercantile business, continuing until 1871. He was post-master at Burgettstown from 1865 until 1871, and for several years he was treasurer of the Union Agricultural Association. In the fall of 1871 he purchased a farm near Gordonsville, Va., and in March following he moved his family thither. He was married to Margaret Campbell, of Smith township, Penn. Mrs. Wilson died July 21, 1887. In November, 1887, he sold out at Gordonsville and moved his family to Chinook, Mont., and stayed there until 1890, when he returned to Burgettstown, where he at present resides. They had four children, viz.: Robert C., Maggie A., William E. and Jennie E. Martha E. Wilson is the widow of Alexander Russell (deceased), formerly of Burgettstown. John P. Wilson's biographical record will be found at page 284, this volume.

WILLIAM L. WILSON, son of William E. and Margaret P. Wilson, was born on the home place in Smith township, where his youth was passed. He attended the public schools, receiving a thorough training in the common branches. Though he selected agriculture as his life work, yet he believed education to be essential to any department of life. In 1888 or 1889 he bought the residence of the Rev. J. T. Frederick, in Burgettstown, and the following spring moved to town. He was unmarried, his two sisters, Sarah and Isabell, living with him. On the evening of the 25th of October, 1892, while returning from the farm to his home in town, he had to cross the railroad track. A freight train was just moving off the crossing, and at that moment he stepped on to cross over, when he was struck by the limited express and instantly killed. He could not see the express for the freight train. In religious matters he was a United Presbyterian. In politics he was a Republican, cast his first vote for the Republicans, and so continued.

JOHN H. CHARLTON, proprietor of the widely known and popular meat market in the borough of Washington, is a grandson of Robert Charlton, who came from Germany to Washington county in 1813, and died at Cook's Place, Chartiers township, in 1828, his wife (who accompanied him from the Fatherland) dying some time later. They had children as follows: Samuel, Joseph (now in Iowa), John, Daniel, Jacob and Robert.

Samuel Charlton, son of Robert, was born in Germany, and came with his parents to this country and county. By occupation he was a wagoner on the National pike between Washington, Penn., and Baltimore, Md. He was twice married, first time to Miss Shipe, who died leaving two children: Robert (now deceased) and Frank (in Mannington, W. Va.). His second marriage was with Mrs. Elizabeth Marie (nee Hervey), a lady of Irish parentage, and they had a family of five children, as follows: John H., our subject; Mary, wife of Fred Hood, of Washington; Susan, also in that borough; Rebecca, deceased wife of Henry Llewellyn (she died in 1874), and Samuel M., in Washington. The parents, soon after marriage, came to live in the borough of Washington, where the father died about the year 1858, at the age of fifty-four years, the mother in 1876, at the age of sixty-five.

John H. Charlton, of whom this sketch more particularly relates, was born in this county, in 1842, and his boyhood was passed alternately in attending the schools of the neighborhood of his birthplace and laboring on the farm till coming into the borough of Washington. Here he carried on a butchering business till 1876, when he moved to Ohio and there conducted a similar line of trade until 1880, in which year he returned to Washington, and opened out his present meat market, in which he has met with unqualified success.

In October, 1872, Mr. Charlton was united in marriage with Miss Armella A. Levering, of Knox county, Ohio, and four children were born to them, viz.: Mary L., wife of Charles L. Stone; and Addie H., Ethel B. and Clayton B., all at home with their parents. Mr. and Mrs. Charlton are members of the Second Presbyterian Church of Washington. In politics he is a Republican, and at one time served as assessor. He was but a lad of sixteen when his father died, and, being the eldest of five children, had for years to give all his earnings toward the support of the family.

BENJAMIN F. BENTLEY, a leading and influential citizen of Monongahela, is a native of the county, born in Carroll township in December, 1821. His grandfather, Sheshbazzar Bentley, was born in Chester county, Penn., where he learned the trade of millwright, which he followed in both that and Washington counties. In Chester county he was married, and had one child, Hannah. Afterward he came with his little family to Washington county, a wagon being their mode of conveyance, in which they brought all their chattels. They crossed into the county through the river at what is now Monongahela, and for the first night camped out near where the present fair grounds are located. They then proceeded up Pigeon creek until they arrived at a point where Mr. Bentley established a mill site and built the first mill on the creek. On an adjoining hill he put up for himself and family a log cabin, in which they lived some years, and then erected a hewed log house, where he passed the remainder of his pioneer life. He also at this place founded, in 1813, the village of Bentleyville, in Somerset township. His children, born in this county were House, George and Sheshbazzar. Mr. Bentley was a Democrat in politics, and in religious faith a member of the Society of Friends.

House Bentley attended in his early boyhood the subscription schools of the neighborhood of the place of his birth, Bentleyville, until he was old enough to work, when he entered his father's mill to learn the trade. While a resident of Bentleyville he married Fannie, daughter of William Wallace, of Somerset township, and the children born to them were Hannah (Mrs. John Kennedy), Elizabeth, Sheshbazzar, William, Martha, Margaret, Benjamin F. and Amanda (Mrs. Joshua Stevens). After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Bentley moved to Carroll township, where he built a mill on Mingo creek, which he carried on many years. In 1824 he moved to a farm near Monongahela river, and there passed the remainder of his busy life, dying in 1852, a member of the M. E. Church. Politically he was a Whig, actively and enthusiastically patriotic, and was considerably interested in militia matters, having at one time been a general.

Benjamin F. Bentley was reared in Carroll township, in the primitive subscription schools of which he received a fair education for those early days. The schoolhouse was made of logs, the floor and seats being rough puncheons, and the windows of greased paper in lieu of glass. He lived on the farm four or five years after marriage, and then came to Monongahela, where he has since made his home. He built his present comfortable and commodious residence in 1873. In 1849 Mr. Bentley was married to Mary, daughter of Daniel Van Voorhis. They have no children. They are members of the Baptist Church, in which he has served as deacon, and in his political affiliations he is a Republican. Mr. Bentley represents a family prominent and influential in the affairs of Washington county.

BLACK. Samuel Black, the first of this family in Washington county, of whom there is any record, was born in 1775, in County Down, Ireland, where the family were all farmers.

In 1791 he came to America, landing in New York, whence in 1793 he proceeded to Washington county, Penn., and here embarked in trading, opening a general store in Williamsport (now Monongahela), the first in the place, which he conducted a few years. This store was known as the "Old Red House," and stock was brought from the East on pack horses, and traded for farm products which Mr. Black would take to New Orleans, down the river on flat boats, there sell for cash, proceed to New York, purchase a new stock of merchandise, and bring same back to Williamsport. He purchased of Joseph Parkison a lot near First street, on which he erected a house and store combined; also bought large tracts of land in Washington county, and at the time of his death was one of the largest landholders in the county. In 1821 Mr. Black built the first mill at Dry Run (a "tramp mill"), the power for which was supplied by oxen, and he operated a sawmill on Pigeon creek. He also erected the glass factory at Dry Run, besides the dwelling houses surrounding same. In short, he was a thoroughly representative self-made man, a progressive and useful citizen. His death occurred in 1846.

In 1793 Mr. Black married Mary ———, who bore him the following named children: Elizabeth (Mrs. William Bentley), Maria (wife of Dr. Samuel King), Mary, Samuel, Marcus, Cyrus, Caroline (Mrs. Robert Smith), Jane (Mrs. Wm. S. Mallingar), Ross

Wilson S., Mary (Mrs. George A. Clark), and Hester A. (Mrs. John McNeal). In his political preferences Mr. Black was a Federalist, and in his church connection was a leading Presbyterian, and one of the first trustees of his church.

CHARLES W. ADAMS, for sixteen years a well-known harness maker in the borough of Washington, and since 1890 a prominent real-estate dealer and insurance broker, is a Virginian by birth, having first seen the light on May 10, 1810.

His father, Charles Adams, also a native of Virginia, a miller by trade, married Charlotte, a daughter of James Yates, also of that State, and they had three children, our subject being the only survivor, the other two having died when young. The father departed this life in 1843, aged forty-three years, and the widowed mother continued to reside in Virginia until her son, Charles W., was about eleven years old. She passed from earth in 1868, in Marion county, W. Va., at the age of sixty-three years.

Charles W. Adams received a limited education at the public schools of the neighborhood of his home, but being fatherless had to commence work very early in life. When eleven years old he entered upon a three years' apprenticeship to the harness business in Taylor county, Va., and before finishing, attended school for a time, but in this essential his opportunities were of necessity much circumscribed. His mother was not exempt from toil either, for, having lost the greater part of her means through becoming security for others, she had to seek employment in order to support herself and son during his boyhood days. After finishing his trade, Mr. Adams moved to Marion county, same State, where, as already related, his mother died. In 1863 he was married to Sarah Weddle, whose parents were of Wheeling, W. Va., and three children came to this union: Alice and Louisa, now living in Washington, and one that died in infancy. In 1882, while residing in Washington, the mother was called to her long home, at the early age of thirty-five years. In 1867 Mr. Adams moved with his family to Wheeling, W. Va., where he carried on a harness business for his own account until 1874, in which year he came to Washington, Penn., and embarked in the harness trade, which he carried on with satisfactory success until 1890, when he sold out and engaged in his present real-estate and insurance business.

Under the President's call, in 1863, for "more men" to suppress the Rebellion, Mr. Adams enlisted in Company E, Sixth West Virginia Cavalry, and served in Virginia and West Virginia to the close of the struggle. He participated in many engagements, but was never wounded, though he had a narrow escape from capture on November 28, 1864, when he was obliged to swim the Potomac to save falling into the hands of the enemy. Along with him was a personal friend, James A. Taggart, who was a better swimmer; Mr. Adams struck a stiff current and thought he would drown before getting out of it, so called to his comrade, who was swimming ahead of him, for help. Taggart responded by turning back, with true patriotic friendship, but by dint of much struggling our subject succeeded in reaching the shore, where, thoroughly exhausted, he laid down among some weeds, while the enemy passed by fortunately without seeing him. His wife was with him up to the time of his plunge into the river, and she fell into the hands of the Confederates, who, after searching her trunk, released her without further molestation. Poor Taggart died of "spotted fever" while in the service. At the close of the war Mr. Adams was sent to the plains of Nebraska and Colorado, on Indian service, and in this as in his war experiences, he escaped injury of any kind. In 1866 he returned to West Virginia, and in 1867 settled down to his trade in Wheeling, as above narrated. In 1881 Mr. Adams married, for his second wife, Alice Weddle, sister to his first, and by this union two children were born, viz.: Charlotte, in 1885, and Charles W., in 1891. Our subject is a member of the G. A. R., W. Templeton Post, of Washington, also of the I. O. O. F. He and his wife are members of the First M. E. Church.

CAPTAIN ROBERT PHILLIPS is a son of William Phillips, who was born and reared in Pennsylvania, and was united in marriage with a widow lady, Mrs. Elizabeth (Matthews) Paden. She was the mother of four children by her first marriage, namely: Samuel, Mary, Margaret, and Martha. After the death of Mr. Paden she became the wife of William Phillips, and bore him the following children: John, Rezin, David, Jane (wife of Abraham Van Voorhis), Nancy (married to William Wickerham), and Robert. The father, who was a miller by trade, died in Fayette county, Penn., when Robert was eight months old. After the death of her husband Mrs. Phillips was married to William Jones, of Monongahela.

Captain Robert Phillips was born March 31, 1817, near Broadford, Fayette county, Penn. When about ten years of age he came to Monongahela, and there received a public-school education. At the age of fifteen years he began life for himself, working on a farm for several years, then went on the Monongahela, Ohio, and Mississippi rivers. He was promoted from a deck-hand to the position of mate, and in 1866 became captain of a vessel, having run on both freight and passenger service. On March 26, 1839, he married Olivia, daughter of Benjamin Parkison. She died July 10, 1886, and on January 5, 1888, he was united in marriage with Anna, daughter of John Longwell. Mr. Phillips has won success by earnest, unremitting efforts, and though the struggle was a hard one, many amusing incidents occurred to brighten his early life. In politics he affiliates with the Democratic party, and in religion he is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

MARTIN M. SLATER (deceased) was a native of Donegal township, this county, born August 4, 1815, on his father's farm. He was of Irish ancestry, his grandfather, William, having been born in County Down, Ireland, where he was educated, and married to Elizabeth Bell, a resident of the same county. He immigrated to America soon after the Revolutionary war, and took a farm of 160 acres, lying near West Alexander, in this county. Soon afterward he purchased a farm south of West Alexander, where he made a permanent home. He had five children, namely: Betsy, Margaret, Jane, David and James. Politically Mr. Slater was a Republican, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church.

James Slater was born in 1787, in Donegal township, and was there married to Catherine, daughter of Manning Martin. Mr. Martin was born in County Down, Ireland, and came to America in early manhood. He was united in marriage with Jane Thomas, of Wilmington, Del., and she bore him children as follows: Martha, Hannah, Catherine, Margaret, Jane, Leah, Mary A., Rachel, Sarah and John T. Mr. Martin came to Washington county and settled in Donegal township, where he remained until his death. In religious faith he was a Presbyterian. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. James Slater settled on the old home farm in Donegal township, and reared the following family of children: William, Martin M., David, Eliza (Mrs. Joseph Miller), Mary A. (Mrs. John McKahan), John (deceased), Caroline (Mrs. G. W. Anderson), Melissa (Mrs. Thomas Show), Rachel (Mrs. Roland Craig), and James E. Wheeling. Mr. Slater was a successful and enterprising business man. In politics he was an active member of the Whig party. He died June 27, 1857, his widow on August 21, 1872.

Martin M. Slater was reared and educated on the old homestead. On April 3, 1845, he was married to Margaret, daughter of Robert Nixon, a resident of Donegal township, and native of County Antrim, Ireland. To this union were born six children: Mary C. (deceased), Martin (deceased), Leah, Sarah (deceased), Luther T. and C. K. Mr. Slater passed the first years of his married life in West Alexander, and engaged in the butcher business. He then served four years as a constable and was repeatedly re-elected. He carried on a wagon trade from Cumberland to Wheeling; then farmed one year on the Noble farm, and spent the next year in Ohio, after which he proceeded to Brooke county, where he remained eight years. In politics he was originally a Whig, voted for W. H. Harrison in 1836 and 1840, and in later years he was a member of the Republican party. He died April 30, 1892.

C. K. Slater, a son of Martin M. Slater, was married on July 8, 1880, to Lillie, daughter of Jackson Mitchell, of Waynesburgh, Penn., and they have two children: Vera and Fred M. Mr. Slater is a Republican in politics.

JS. MOORE is a prominent representative of one of the old families of Cecil township. He is a son of John Moore, whose parents were born in Ireland, and coming to America about the time of the Revolution, settled in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn. Their son, John, was a native of Chartiers township, this county, where he was reared. He married Margaret Mytee, a native of the same township, and they had nine children, namely: Samuel (who died in March, 1884, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county), Ellen (wife of David McCalmont, of Mt. Pleasant township), J. S., Mary (Mrs. John McCalmont, of Mt. Pleasant township), Margaret (widow of John L. Gormley, of Dickinson county, Kans.), Eliza (Mrs. Thomas McCallister, of Smith township), John (who died in the West), David (living in Missouri) and Rebecca (living in Allegheny county, Penn.). The family afterward moved to Mt. Pleasant township. Both parents were members of the U. P. Church at Hickory, this county, in which the father was for years a ruling elder, and in politics he was an ardent Whig. While attending the raising of a church in Hickory in 1834 he was accidentally killed. Mrs. Moore died in 1882.

J. S. Moore was born in 1820, in Chartiers township, this county, and in early boyhood came with the family to Mt. Pleasant township, where he received his education in the subscription schools. In 1860 he was united in marriage with Margaret McBurney, a native of Robinson township, daughter of James and Jane (Acheson) McBurney. Mr. and Mrs. Moore resided in Mt. Pleasant township until 1873, when he bought and moved upon seventy-six acres of land in Cecil township, where they are now living. Six children have been born to them, as follows: James C. McBurney, a physician and surgeon of Midway, this county (married to Mary McCready); Jessie, living at home; John T., residing with his parents; Jennie C., a teacher of this county; Joseph S. and Mary E., living at home. Mr. and Mrs. Moore are members of the Chartiers United Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg, Penn. In politics he votes the Republican ticket, and is an enthusiastic supporter of Prohibition.

ROBERT CAMPBELL McILVAIN was born November 8, 1827, in Somerset township, this county, a son of Greer Melvain, whose father was also named Greer. The grandfather was born in Lancaster county, Penn., of English descent, and was there married to Elizabeth Morrow, a native of the same county. The young couple came to Washington county in an early day, accompanied by a brother, George Melvain. On May 20, 1788, Greer secured 407 acres of land in Somerset township, which was surveyed to him February 11, 1789, and afterward divided with his brother. Greer and Elizabeth Melvain were members of the Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek. Their children were Greer, John, Guyan, George, William, Andrew, Margaret, Mary, Ruth, Catherine, Elizabeth, Esther, Ann and Eleanor.

Greer Melvain was born October 11, 1793, on the home farm in Somerset township, and on November 20, 1817, was united in marriage with Jane Campbell, who bore him the following children: Eliza (widow of John Kerr, living in Butler county, Penn.); Martha (unmarried); Margaret (widow of Robert Clark, of McLean county, Ill.); Greer and Jane (twins) (the latter being the widow of John Greenlee, of McLean county, Ill.); Robert C., and Mary (deceased). Mr. Melvain followed farming, took an active interest in all progressive enterprises, and was elected to several township offices by the Republican voters of his district. He died June 6, 1889, his wife on September 18, 1871. Both were active members of the Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church, in which Mr. Melvain was an elder from 1849 until his death.

Robert C. Melvain, son of Greer and Jane Melvain, remained on the home farm during his boyhood, and after attending the common schools spent two terms at an academy in Monongahela City, Penn. On December 5, 1861, he married Sarah L. Sloan, who was born January 14, 1833, a daughter of James and Sarah Sloan, natives of this county. Rev. James Sloan was born September 16, 1807, in this county, and was married to Sarah Lindsey, who bore him one child: Sarah L. (Mrs. Melvain); James G., a physician of Monongahela City, and Martha A. (deceased), were children by his second wife, Margaret Gordon. Mr. Sloan was a Presbyterian minister, and preached about nineteen years at the Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church, 399 members being added to the original number during his ministry. He organized the first Presbyterian Church erected at Frankfort Springs, Beaver county, Penn., where he preached eight years. He was trustee of Jefferson College, Washington county, twenty years. Mr. Sloan died March 11, 1871, his wife having crossed the dark river in 1833.

To Robert C. and Sarah L. Melvain six children have been born as follows: Ella F. (wife of Rev. J. C. Meehlin, a missionary in Persia); William L. (a farmer of Somerset township, this county); Margaret I. (deceased); James G. (deceased); Gertrude E. and Elmer S. (residing on the home place). Mr. and Mrs. Melvain reside on the well-cultivated farm consisting of 312 acres, which was his birthplace. They have been members of the Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church for some time; he has served as a member of the Session and treasurer for fourteen years, still filling both offices. He votes with the Republican party, and is interested in all public issues of the day.

JOHN L. SHANNON is a son of Charles D. Shannon, who was born June 4, 1802, on a farm in Beaver county, Penn., and there inducted into the mysteries of agricultural pursuits, which he continued to follow all his life. When a young man he was married to Jeanette Crawford, who was born May 7, 1810, and they were the parents of seven children, namely: Rebecca J., married to George Mancha; G. W., married to a Miss Mitchell; S. C., now residing in Kansas; Mary L., wife of Enoch Colvin; Irene S., wife of Henry M. Crab, residing at Lock No. 4; V. D., married to Rebecca A. Wilson, and John L. The father died in 1885, and at that time was filling the office of justice of the peace; he had previously served as county commissioner and in other positions.

John L. Shannon was born in 1850 in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., and attended the common schools. On September 15, 1880, he married Alice V., daughter of Matthew McKeranahan, of Allegheny county, Penn. She has borne him the following children: Wilbur V., William A., Jessie Mable, Arthur Scott, Alice Lenora and Nora, all living at home. Mr. and Mrs. Shannon reside on a farm which his father owned, and where he is now conducting a fruit and dairy business. The place is located one mile and a half from Charleroi and four miles from Monongahela. In religion he is a member of the Christian Church, with which his wife is also identified. His widowed mother is living with him on the home farm. Mr. Shannon is now serving his township as school director.

ROBERT FINLEY PATTERSON. Among the old, prominent families of Washington county, the Patterson family ranks high. Robert Patterson, the grandfather of Robert Finley, was a native of York county, Penn., and moved to Washington county about 1792, settling in East Finley township. A son, Robert, also a native of York county, Penn., born February 4, 1785, came to Washington county with his father, where he married, in 1806, Nancy Tilton, a native of East Finley township, born January 1, 1790. They reared a family of ten children, of whom Robert Finley is the youngest. William, born January 24, 1808, married Elizabeth Cooper, and resided in Athens county, Ohio, where he died; John, born November, 1810, married Octava Farlan, of Athens county, Ohio, where he died; Catharine, born February 19, 1812, married Royal Bingham, of Athens county, Ohio, where she died; Rhoda, born February 7, 1814, married R. S. Andrews, of Morris township, where she died, March 15, 1840; Eunice, born March 11, 1816, married Daniel Day, of Morris township (she died January 6, 1856); Asenath, born March 4, 1818, married Zenas Axtal, of Morris township, Greene county, Penn., where she now resides; Lettice, born September 29, 1820, married L. Bane, of Amwell township, where she died July 13, 1843; Ann, born December 23, 1821, married Stephen Parcel, of Morris township, and died May 18, 1854; Josiah, born July 24, 1827, married Emma Jane Browne, of Westmoreland county, Penn., and now resides in Franklin township, Washington county, and Robert. The father died June 16, 1863, and the mother January 27, 1865.

Robert Finley Patterson was born March 2, 1830, and November 15, 1852, married Lydia Clemens, a daughter of William Clemens, of Morris township. Mrs. Patterson was born February 17, 1831, her parents being natives of Virginia. To this union the following children were born: Josiah M. was born November 27, 1853. He married Annie Craft, daughter of David Craft, Sr., of said township. He is now engaged in the practice of law at Washington, Penn. Clara Ann, born May 3, 1856, wife of John Reed, a real estate agent of Claysville, Penn.; John Bryant, born December 6, 1858, who manages his father's farm; and Cora Asenath, born March 16, 1872, at home.

Mr. Patterson has succeeded well as a farmer, and is known as one of the successful business men of Morris township. A portion of the farm now owned by him belonged formerly to his father, and consequently has been in the Patterson name for more than three-quarters of a century. Both he and his wife are members of Pleasant Grove Baptist Church.

THE CAMERON FAMILY are among the oldest and most prominent residents of South Strabane township. John Cameron was born in Scotland, and in early youth removed to County Armagh, Ireland, where he was united in marriage with Esther Twinem, a native of Ireland, and soon after his marriage emigrated to America, making his home in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Cameron were born the following children: John, James C., Esther, Margaret and William. Mr. Cameron was a prominent citizen, and in politics voted with the Democratic party. In religion he was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

William, son of John and Esther Cameron, was born in the year 1808, on the home farm in Somerset township, this county, and there received his early education. On September 28, 1837, he was married to Martha, daughter of George Mitchell, residing in South Strabane township, Washington county. Mr. Mitchell was a native of Ireland, and in early manhood came to America, settling in Washington county, Penn., where he was married to a Miss Alexander. They reared the following children: Martha (Mrs. William Cameron), born August 9, 1804; Mary (Mrs. John McMillan), born November 10, 1810; Eleanor, born in the year 1812, died February 29, 1832; Thomas, born August 13, 1815, and Catherine (Mrs. Joseph Horner), born August 20, 1817. Mr. Mitchell was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the First Presbyterian Church at Washington. He died at the residence of Mr. William Cameron, May 8, 1817.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Cameron settled on the place which is now occupied by their sons, and to the original tract of twenty-one acres they added over 200 acres, formerly owned by George Mitchell. This farm was uncultivated, and he made his own improvements upon it. The children of this couple were as follows: John, Ellen (Mrs. John G. Paxton), Margaret, Mary J., George M. and Martha A. (Mrs. J. C. Pease). Mr. Cameron was an enterprising man and took an active interest in the progress of the Democratic party; he was also interested in educational matters, having frequently served as a school director in the township. In religion he was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Washington. He passed away October 15, 1873, having been preceded by his wife August 16, 1860.

JOHN CAMERON, son of William and Martha (Mitchell) Cameron, was born August 12, 1838, on the home farm in South Strabane township, Washington county, and received a common school education. In early life he commenced farming, and has since followed that vocation. He is actively interested in all questions pertaining to the welfare of the community, and is a firm supporter of the Democratic party.

GEORGE M. CAMERON, second son of William and Martha (Mitchell) Cameron, was born April 22, 1849, and passed his early youth on the home farm, receiving his education in the schools of South Strabane township. On May 23, 1872, he was united in marriage with Mary E., daughter of Col. James M. and Maria Potter Byers, residents of Washington, Washington county, and the following children were born to their union: William B., Ada E., Mary E., James M., George and John A. Mr. and Mrs. George M. Cameron have always lived on the home place, and are adherents of the Presbyterian Church. In 1886 Mr. Cameron and his brother built the handsome residence now occupied by them, which is furnished with all modern conveniences. He is a Democrat, and a valued member of that party. He has always been especially interested in the schools of the township, having been a school director several years.

JOHN V. LACOCK, a successful and esteemed citizen of Franklin township, is a son of Ira and grandson of Samuel Lacock. Samuel Lacock was born in New Jersey, and in an early day came with his wife and family to Washington county, Penn., locating in Amwell township. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Lacock were as follows: Ira, John R., Eliza (Mrs. Chrispin) and Mary (Mrs. Thomas Service). Mr. Lacock was an active worker in the Whig party.

Ira Lacock was born December 13, 1794, in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his boyhood at home, attending the rate schools and afterward teaching school. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Anna, daughter of Isaac Bane, of Amwell township, Washington county, and she bore him children as follows: William, Samuel (deceased), Isaac, John V., Elizabeth (Mrs. William Mounts) and Ira J. After his marriage Mr. Lacock settled in Amwell township, this county, where he resided two years, thence moving to Morris township, this county, and in 1857 settling in Washington borough, where he died December 13, 1876. In politics he was an active supporter of the Jacksonian Democrats.

John V. Lacock was born September 5, 1822, in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., and received his education at the subscription schools of the county. In December, 1848, he was united in marriage with Sarah J., daughter of William McClenathan. Mr. McClenathan was born August 10, 1765, in Ireland, and, emigrating to America at an early age, settled in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn. He was married to Mary Coulson, who was born September 10, 1780, and they reared the following children: Isabella (Mrs. John Tucker), born July 9, 1801 (died March 5, 1873); Samuel, born January 15, 1803 (died February 12, 1873); William, born January 16, 1805 (died October 15, 1835); John, born February 16, 1807 (died November 10, 1878); James, born June 25, 1809 (died July 9, 1876); Blair, born November 26, 1811 (died August 18, 1870); Allen, born June 16, 1814; Thomas, born October 17, 1816; Simmons, born April 9, 1819; Mary (Mrs. Nathaniel Bane), born October 22, 1822, and Sarah J., born June 10, 1825 (died December 14, 1889). Mr. McClenathan was a Democrat.

After his marriage Mr. Lacock settled in Franklin township, afterward moving to Washington borough, where he remained three years, then came to the home place, and thence to his present farm at Point Lookout of fifty acres. Mr. Lacock has five children, viz.: George S. (married to Mary Slusher; their children are Biddle and Birdie), Dr. S. A., William R., Ira L. and Marion (deceased). In politics Mr. Lacock is an active Democrat, and in religion belongs to the Disciple Church at Washington. Over six feet high, he is a fine specimen of the native American.

THOMAS J. NICHOL, one of the progressive and well-to-do agriculturists of South Strabane township, was born May 3, 1828, in Canton (now Franklin) township. His grandfather, Thomas Nichol, came to this county from County Antrim, Ireland, and took out a warrant, February 14, 1785, for a tract of land now owned by John Hughes, whose wife is a granddaughter of Thomas Nichol. This tract of land was surveyed on May 13, 1785, and was named in the survey "Crystal," containing 281 acres, adjoining lands of James Workman, James Huston and others. While yet a young man he was married to a young lady who had come from Scotland. After marriage they took up their residence in Washington borough for some time and then removed to the farm in Canton township, which he had entered; there they passed the rest of their days. They were consistent members of the Presbyterian Church. Two children were born to this honored pioneer couple: Samuel and Elizabeth (Mrs. Alexander Reynolds).

Samuel Nichol, the only son of Thomas Nichol, was born in Washington borough, this county, where his boyhood and youth were passed, and where he received his education. He was married to Rebecca Bane, daughter of David Bane, of Amwell township, and their children were: James, Franklin, Mary, Hannah, Elizabeth (Mrs. John Hughes), and Thomas J. After marriage the young couple settled in Franklin township, and there remained until the death of the husband, which occurred November 19, 1870; his wife departed this life in February, 1854. They were members of the Disciple Church, in which he was an elder many years; he was a Whig, and took an active part in politics.

Thomas J. Nichol, whose name opens this sketch, passed his early life at the place of his nativity, and received his education at the schools of the district. While a young man he took a trip West, being absent for some time, and then returned to his native township. In January, 1859, he was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of ex-Judge James C. Chambers, of Amwell township, this county. After marriage the young couple carried on farming in Amwell township eight years, and then moved to Franklin township, where they remained one year, thence coming to South Strabane township, to their present home. The names of the children born to them are: Annie, Lizzie, Jennie, John, Lotta, Clark and Sadie. Mr. and Mrs. Nichol are members of the Disciple Church at Washington, and in politics he has always been a staunch Republican.

AUGUST E. MOLLENAUER, a successful farmer and dairyman of North Strabane township, is a son of Ernest Mollenauer, born in 1828, whose parents were natives of Germany, and came to Allegheny county, Penn., in the year 1848. Ernest Mollenauer was married to Wilhelmina Huth, born in 1832, married in the year 1850, and settled on the old homestead, where thirteen children were born to them, of whom are now living: August E., Charles, Henry P., Louisa (wife of A. T. Linn), Harriet E. (wife of Jacob Keitzer), Samuel H., Frederick H. and Mary J. (Mrs. Scott Higbee). Mr. and Mrs. Mollenauer are members of the German Lutheran Church.

August E. Mollenauer was born February 26, 1856, in Allegheny county, Penn., and was reared and educated on the home farm. On February 26, 1880, he was united in marriage with Mary E. Froebe (who was born May 1, 1858), daughter of Valentine and Elizabeth (Gutbub) Froebe. Mr. and Mrs. Froebe were both natives of Germany, and came separately without their parents to America when young. The two families settled in Allegheny county, Penn., and on attaining the age of maturity, Valentine Froebe was married to Elizabeth Gutbub, who bore him seven children, five sons and two daughters, three of whom are living: Elizabeth (Mrs. Mollenauer), Philip and George W. Mr. Froebe died in the year 1881, and his widow is yet living. She is a member of the Lutheran Church, as was her deceased husband.

August and Mary (Froebe) Mollenauer have had born to them six children—three boys and three girls: Anna E., born January 12, 1881; Sarah W., born February 23, 1883; Samuel, born September 28, 1886; Eva M., born December 31, 1888; Edward C., born December 29, 1890; and George (deceased). Mr. Mollenauer owns 147 acres of land, and he has been engaged in the dairy business for the past eleven years, having twenty cows, and in 1891 shipped 6,650 gallons of milk to Pittsburgh, Penn. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church. Politically Mr. Mollenauer is a Republican.

NOAH E. GILMORE was born September 11, 1825, in Pitt township, Allegheny Co., Penn. He is a son of William, whose father (also named William Gilmore) was a native of Ireland. The last mentioned ancestor immigrated to America many years ago, and locating on a farm in Susquehanna county, Penn., successfully engaged in the farming business. In 1799 he came to Pittsburgh, Penn., and purchased the Oaklaud farm, which was the scene of the famous duel between Bates and Stewart, that conflict having been witnessed by his son, William Gilmore, and his brother James. The father resided on this farm for several years, having transported coal to Pittsburgh by horses and mules, and finally moved to Columbiana county, Ohio, where he died. He was married to a Miss Sample, who belonged to a famous pioneer family of Allegheny county, and four sons were born to their union: John, William, James and Hugh, and two daughters. The father was a Federalist in politics.

William Gilmore, son of the above mentioned pioneer, was born about the year 1789, in Susquehanna county, Penn., afterward coming with his parents to Allegheny county. His school days were necessarily limited, as his aid was needed by his parents, who were in moderate circumstances. He passed his youth in farm work and mining coal, and in 1812 was united in marriage with Susanna Fisher, a native of Susquehanna county, Penn., and daughter of Henry Fisher, who purchased and moved upon a farm in Ohio, where he died. After his marriage William Gilmore continued to mine coal, and when the old "Oakland" farm was sold he purchased the place, finally succeeding in paying off the heavy indebtedness. He then moved to Ohio, but finally returned to Pittsburgh, Penn., where he died in 1852, leaving to his heirs a property of $20,000. At one time he was very wealthy, but lost a large amount through unfortunate circumstances. In politics he was a Whig, and filled important offices in Allegheny county for over twenty years; in religious faith he was a valued member of the Presbyterian Church. His children were born as follows: John, William (deceased in Ohio, in 1891), Margaret, Mary Ann, Fisher H., Noah F. and Eliza, of whom Noah F. is the only one yet living.

Noah F. Gilmore remained on the home place during his early manhood, and in 1851 he married Harriet McCortney, who was a native of Chartiers township, Allegheny Co., Penn. She died in March, 1861, leaving one daughter, Mary A., wife of George Gilmore, a merchant of Allegheny county. In 1871 Noah F. Gilmore married, for his second wife, Sarah, daughter of John Young, a native of Pittsburgh, and a steamboat engineer. To this union children have been born as follows: Laura B., Margaret J., S. Blanche, Susanna M., William N., Clarence S., Charles B. and Grant K. Prior to 1887 Mr. Gilmore was actively engaged in mining operations, and sold out at that time; he is now retired from active business, but conducts the ferry which is located on his property. He was originally a Whig, and was present when the Republican party was organized at the corner of Fourth and Wood streets, Pittsburgh, Penn. Although he has from that time been a zealous Republican, Mr. Gilmore has invariably refused to accept official honors.

SILAS HALEY, probably the oldest, and one of the most prominent, merchants in the Monongahela Valley, is a son of Sedgwick Haley, whose father was born in Ireland, and came to America many years ago, when he married a Miss Jeans. Of the children born to this union the following are named: Daniel, James, John, Richard, Enoch and Sedgwick. The father of this family was a Democrat in political opinions, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church. He died in Holmes county, Ohio.

Sedgwick Haley was born and reared in Holmes county, Ohio, and attended the schools of the neighborhood, passing his youth on the home place. A few years after attaining his majority he chose as his wife, Rebecca Dailey, a native of Washington county, Penn., and the young couple resided in Middletown, Ohio, for five years after their marriage. They then removed to a farm in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, where the remainder of their lives was passed. He was identified with the Whig party, and served ten years as justice of the peace; he was equally zealous in religious matters, as an active member of the M. E. Church. He died in his forty-fourth year, leaving to mourn his loss a widow and nine children: Jefferson, Simeon, Sarah, John, Silas, Mary and Sedgwick (twins), Rebecca and Charles.

Silas Haley was born July 30, 1832, in Holmes county, Ohio. He learned the tailor's trade, and at the age of eighteen years came to Monongahela City, where he followed that vocation until 1851, when he opened a clothing establishment which he has since conducted. On March 10, 1853, he was united in marriage with Mary C., daughter of Levi Priggs, a native of Huntingdon county, Penn., and three children have blessed this union, namely: Rebecca, wife of W. C. Robison; C. E. and William A. Mr. Haley was originally a Whig, and is now a Republican; he has served as a member of the council. In religious faith he is an earnest, active member of the M. E. Church.

GEORGE W. POGUE, prominently identified with the representative citizens and successful farmers of Hanover township, is descended from an old Irish family. His grandfather, John Pogue, who was the first of the name to locate in Washington county, Penn., was born in Ireland, August 11, 1742, and, after landing in America, located on a farm in Jefferson township, Washington Co., Penn., near Cross Creek. Like all the early settlers, he labored under many disadvantages, and had to make several trips across the mountains for salt. On one occasion, while returning from a trip over the mountains with a load of salt, he reached Pittsburgh on Saturday night, and would not proceed with his load on the Sabbath; and while remaining there, he was completely disgusted with the desecration of the sacred day. On the following morning he was offered several acres of valuable land in the heart of the city for his load of salt, but decidedly refused the proposition, as he did not care for land where the Sabbath was not observed. He and his wife were leading members of the Seceder Church, and lived to old age, on the place where they first settled, and were laid to rest in a private burying ground on the home farm; he died December 21, 1837; they were the parents of seven children as follows: William, James (a school teacher), Samuel, George, Sarah (Mrs. John Curry), Robert and David.

George Pogue was born January 16, 1789, and when old enough assisted in clearing up the forest of the pioneer farm, attending, in the meantime, the rude subscription schools of the time. When a young man he was married to Nancy, daughter of David Davis, a native of Washington county, on Cross creek. After his marriage Mr. Pogue located for a short time on a farm adjoining the old place, and in 1836 went to Belmont county, Ohio, settling on a place near St. Clairsville. He died in 1882, his wife in 1881. Mr. and Mrs. Pogue were active members of the M. E. Church; in politics he was a Democrat prior to Jackson's administration, when he joined the Whig party, finally becoming a Republican. The children of this family were as follows: David, Robert, George W., Rebecca E., Ruth and John F., of whom only three are living: George W., Ruth (Mrs. Hugh Rogers, of Belmont county, Ohio), and Rebecca E. (wife of Griffith Lemon, living in Belmont county, Ohio).

George W. Pogue was born July 4, 1827, in Jefferson township, Washington Co., Penn., and when nine years of age came with his parents to Belmont county, Ohio. On May 17, 1859, he was married to Pauline Robinson, who was born in 1839, a daughter of Rev. James Robinson, a Methodist Protestant minister, of Muskingum county, Ohio. After his marriage George W. Pogue purchased 240 acres of excellent land in the Rock River country, Whiteside Co., Ill., remaining there but a short time, and then made a trade with an uncle (his father's brother) who was living in Jefferson township, Washington Co., Penn. By this bargain he received a farm of 100 acres, to which he removed in 1860, and when his uncle Robert died, George W. Pogue settled up the affairs of the estate. In 1863 he came to his present farm (situated on the Pittsburgh and Steubenville pike, three miles west of Florence), to which he has added an adjoining tract. Mr. Pogue has been extensively engaged in the wool and live stock business, having been successful in both, and has accumulated a good property by his own efforts. In politics he was originally a Whig, now a Republican, and is well posted on the issues of his party; in principle he is a Prohibitionist. In 1851 he made the good confession in the Methodist Protestant Church of Eldersville, Penn., in which he has served as steward and in other offices. His wife is a member of the same church. They have two daughters: Mary (Mrs. C. F. Gardner, of Hanover township) and Ella (wife of George S. Hanlin, also of Hanover township). At the time of the first settlement of the Pogue family, Indians were numerous, and many times he and his family were compelled to spend their nights in the grain fields. The horses wore bells, and as they could detect the presence of the Indians first, the settlers depended on them for warning.

Rev. James Robinson, father of Mrs. George W. Pogue, was born in Geneva, Fayette Co., Penn., June 27, 1812. His father, James Robinson, a farmer, was a native of Ireland, and came to America when a young man. He was married twice, the second time to Sarah Clelland, who bore him the following children: James, John and Sarah Ann. Mr. Robinson was a Covenanter. He died in West Virginia, at Barracksville. Rev. James Robinson was educated at Meadville, Penn., and was licensed to preach in 1837 in the M. P. Church, this first charge being in the Zanesville circuit, Ohio Conference. He came to the Pittsburgh Conference, and spent the remainder of his life in same. He was married to Susan, daughter of John Johnson, of Muskingum county, Ohio, and the children of this marriage were Pauline, John W., Virginia (Mrs. Thomas Stevenson), Mary E., James F., William and Marshall, all now deceased save Mrs. Pogue. Politically Mr. Robinson was a Whig and Republican.

MS. KREPPS, a prosperous blacksmith and wagon maker, was born December 13, 1817, in Fayette City, Fayette Co., Penn., the youngest in the family of children born to Lewis and Elizabeth (Biland) Krepps.

Lewis Krepps was born of German ancestry, in 1809 in Harper's Ferry, Va., where his boyhood and early youth were passed. In 1828 he and his brother Christian walked from Harpers Ferry to Brownsville, Penn., and there he worked at his trade, that of blacksmith. He was married in Brownsville to Miss Elizabeth Biland, of West Pike Run township, Washington county. Afterward they settled in Fayette City, Fayette Co., Penn. They became the parents of seven children, as follows: John W., living at Grand Rapids, Mich.; Jeremiah A., deceased in 1860; Lewis Thornton, living in Richland county, Ill.; Sarah, wife of Eli Croop, of Ravenna, Ohio; Enos Clark, who died in 1882, at St. Louis, Mo.; Mary C. and M. S. (twins), the former of whom married J. W. Burton, and they are now living in North Dakota. The mother of this family died in Fayette City, in 1865, and in 1867 the father married a second time. In 1869 he purchased a farm in Westmoreland county, Penn., moved thereon, and there died in 1881, in his seventy fourth year.

M. S. Krepps received his education in the public schools, and learned the trade of blacksmith in his native town. In 1870 he moved to Allen township, Washington county, where he continued his trade, and in connection carried on agriculture. On July 2, 1872, he was married to Josephine, daughter of John Fry, the ceremony taking place in California, Penn., and the young couple at once took up their home on a farm in Allen township, comprising sixty-eight acres of good land. The children born to this union were John F., born December 4, 1878; Joe E., born November 3, 1881; Frank G., born December 6, 1883, and died of diphtheria July 17, 1892. In politics Mr. Krepps is actively interested in the Republican party, and he and his wife are members of the Disciple Church.

REZIN C. TUCKER, a well-known farmer and progressive citizen of Hanover township, is descended from one of the pioneers of the county.

Prior to 1770 there came from Maryland one John Tucker, who, after the Government survey, took up 400 acres of what is known as the "Grace tract" in Hanover township, having made improvements on a tomahawk claim, several years in advance of the Government survey. He was a large man and as straight as an Indian, a despiser of the lazy man and the rascal, and was an honest Quaker. Before coming here his first wife died, leaving two sons, Rev. Samuel, who was killed by Indians while en route to Kentucky, and John, who moved to Ohio. He married his second wife shortly before leaving Maryland, and she, with the two sons, accompanied him to this county. There were two daughters born to this second marriage, who became Mrs. Ralston and Mrs. Sadler, respectively. Jonathan, the eldest son of the second marriage, was born in Fort Vance during an Indian raid in 1771. Thomas, the fourth child, moved to Ohio; David was the youngest. John Tucker was the founder of Tucker's Church, which was built in 1823, and which is yet known by that name. He was among the earliest residents of this county, from whom the majority of the families of this name in Hanover township are descended. Many were the trials and struggles endured by this old pioneer, of which, did space permit, we would gladly give a detailed description. He lived to the ripe old age of one hundred years, and was buried in the Tucker's Church cemetery, where his wife was also interred.

David Tucker, youngest son of John, was reared on the old homestead where his father had first located. When a young man he was married to Christie Ann Hill, who bore him the following children: Ellen, Rezin, Mary Ann, David, Philip Rowland, Nancy and Samuel, all of whom lived to adult age, some moving to Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Iowa, while a few remained in their native county. The father was a Democrat, and in religious faith his wife was a Baptist. He died in 1819, and was buried in a private cemetery on the home place. His widow was married to John Clark, and had two children by her second marriage, viz.: Matthew (who went to Texas) and Harriet (deceased in youth). The mother died in Ohio, where she lived with her elder sons.

David Tucker, son of David and Christie Ann Tucker, was born in 1812, and received but a common-school education, his father dying when he was but a boy of seven years. He then went to live with his uncle, Nathan Hill, near Eldersville, Jefferson township, this county, of whom he learned the tanner's trade. In 1829 he left the tanning business, and going to Pittsburgh worked for some time in an iron mill. When his brother, who had been living on the home place, left there for the West, he came from Pittsburgh and took charge of the farm. In 1837 he was married to Sarah S. Watt, who was born in 1813, in Hanover township, daughter of John Watt. The children born to this union were as follows: Rezin C., Angeline E. (deceased in youth), Mary Ellen (unmarried, is yet living on the home farm), Harriet L. (Mrs. R. W. Crisswell of Hanover township), David S. (married, of Florence), John W. (deceased), Sarah S. (wife of George S. Graham, M. D., a leading physician of Florence) and Lemuel J. (professor in a college at Defiance, Ohio). Of these children John W. enlisted in Company K, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., and was killed near Todds Tavern at the battle of the Wilderness. Owing to an order previously issued by the commander in chief, the body was never secured, and was buried in the field. The parents always lived in this township. David Tucker was a Democrat until the close of Jackson's administration, when he became a Whig and Republican. He was among the leading men, and a liberal contributor to the M. E. Church (Tucker's Church). He was twice married, his second wife being Rachel B. (Miller) Hall, a widow, who died in 1884, followed by her husband in October, 1890. He was a man of powerful physique, weighing over 200 pounds.

Rezin C. Tucker, son of David and Sarah S. Tucker, and the subject proper of this sketch, was born April 27, 1838, in Hanover township, this county. His first education was received in the common schools, afterward attending the Florence academy for some time. In youth he gave his name to the M. E. Church. After leaving school he learned the carpenter's trade, which he completed and followed at various places in the county. For the past few years he has been living on the home place, of which he now has charge, having been administrator of his father's estate. In politics he is a Republican, taking an interest in the success of his party. He has never married.

WILLIAM DUNBAR is an esteemed citizen of Robinson township, who is rapidly converting the products of the soil into a golden harvest, the reward of patient, industrious toil. His grandparents, James and Mary Dunbar, natives of Ireland, emigrated to America in an early day, settling in Pennsylvania, and thus becoming identified with the pioneer history of that State. Twelve children were born to them, of whom but two are now living: Mary (widow of Joseph Wallace, living in Oakdale, Allegheny Co., Penn.), and William (a farmer of Cross Creek township, this county). Mr. Dunbar followed farming and stock raising. He died in 1830, and in 1831 his wife was laid beside him.

Thomas Dunbar was born February 12, 1805, in Washington county, and in 1833 was married to Mary Scott, who was born in 1817 in the same county. The following children were born to their union: Alexander S., Mary (wife of Dallas Garrison), William (of whom a sketch is given below), Martha, James, Elizabeth, Susan, and an unnamed infant. Of these children the ones now living are Alexander, Mary and William. Thomas Dunbar cared little for political life, but was actively interested in public improvements and church affairs, to which he contributed liberally, and with his wife was a devoted member of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church. He died in 1891, having been preceded by his wife in 1852.

William Dunbar was born July 9, 1847, and was reared on the home farm. On May 19, 1881, he married Nancy Annan, born June 17, 1847, in Washington county, Penn., daughter of William (a carpenter) and Maria (Trimmer) Annan, early settlers of this county. They reared four children, viz.: Mary, Nancy (Mrs. Dunbar), and James and Emma (both deceased). Mr. and Mrs. Annan were members of the Presbyterian Church. He died in 1876; his widow (who was born in 1816) is living with her daughter, Mary, in Candor, this county. William and Nancy (Annan) Dunbar are active members of the Presbyterian Church. He owns a well-cultivated farm of 157 acres, and raises a considerable amount of stock. In politics he is a Democrat.

CL. KINDER was born February 27, 1842. His great-grandfather, George Kinder, resided on Plum Brush, and followed the Ohio and Mississippi rivers as a trader and boatman. For a time he was successful in business, but being overtaken by financial trouble, a few years later went to New Orleans, and never returned. His son George was born in East Bethlehem township, this county, and lived in that vicinity until after his marriage, when he was accidentally killed in a carding-mill, which he owned and operated. The maternal grandfather of our subject, Christian Booze, was born in Greene county, Penn. He had no educational opportunities, and followed carpentry and farming, eventually becoming a successful business man.

Valentine Kinder, the father of our subject, was born in 1805 in East Bethlehem township. He received a limited education in the common schools, but was a good penman. When a young man he went to Galena, Ill., upon a mining expedition, thence coming to St. Louis he raised a crop of corn, and then returning home taught school for a time. He then married Miss Julia Booze, at which time his entire worldly property amounted to $35. He located just below the present home of his son George, and remained there two years. He then removed to West Mill. Six years later he bought the home of his son, Louis, where he lived a number of years, and thence removed to the old Nicholls farm, near Hillsborough. At the time of his death, which occurred June 12, 1890, he left $10,000 for distribution, having previously divided $50,000 among his children.

Our subject was born on the old homestead just south of Hillsborough; where he lived with his father until he moved to the Nicholls farm in 1857, leaving the old farm in charge of his two sons, Louis and Harvy. C. L. Kinder was educated in the common schools, and though his opportunities were limited, he was an eager reader and a very well informed man. He remained at home until his enlistment, August, 1861, in the "Ringgold Cavalry," an independent company, Capt. John Keyes commanding. He was in the service three and one half years, and during two months of that time was confined in Andersonville and Florence Station prisons. He served in no general engagement, being under Gen. Keller, protecting the B. & O. R. R. On June 10, 1863, he was taken prisoner at Lester's River Gap, W. Va., and was twice slightly wounded while in the service. He was mustered out of the army March 17, 1865, and on retiring to his home resumed the occupation of farming, working his father's place on shares. In 1868 he and his brother Louis purchased the farm of over one hundred acres where Samuel Kinder now lives. Here he remained for about five years, and in the spring of 1873, together with his brother Valentine, he purchased the farm of 207 acres upon which he passed the rest of his life. Mrs. Kinder has since added ten acres to this tract. Valentine Kinder remained upon the farm one year; then purchased a portable sawmill, and soon after this was killed by falling upon the saw. He left a wife and one child. Our subject then bought out the interests of his brother's heirs in the farm, and became very successful in business, having made the greater share of his property himself. There is probably no finer place in the township than this farm. On Thursday, January 17, 1867, Mr. Kinder married Sarah Worrell, daughter of Elias and Aves Worrell of Allen township. Mrs. Kinder had the following half-brothers: Allen Worrell, deceased in July, 1867; William Worrell, deceased in June, 1873; John Worrell, deceased in July, 1873. Elias Worrell, the father, died in May, 1873. Mrs. Kinder had one full brother, Elias Irvin Worrell, and one sister, Elizabeth, wife of Eli Williams. Mr. and Mrs. Kinder had six children: Aves Ann, born October 7, 1867; Elias I., born May 22, 1868, died May 25, 1868; John Irwin, born July 2, 1871; Elizabeth Nora, born March 18, 1873, was married October 18, 1892, to Ira Friend; Julia Josephine, born April 7, 1877, and Sarah Gertrude, born August 22, 1881. C. L. Kinder died March 17, 1892. He had always been a Republican, and took an active interest in the affairs of his party. He was, as is his family, an active and devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

THOMAS G. WALLACE, one of the best and most systematic farmers of West Finley township, is a son of Charles, whose father, Robert Wallace, was born and married in County Down, Ireland. His wife was formerly Esther Walkingshaw, daughter of John Walkingshaw, a miller of County Down. After his marriage, Mr. Wallace sailed (in 1801) with their oldest son from Ireland to America, and while on the ocean, the second son, Robert, was born. The family first settled in Westmoreland county, Penn., and resided there ten or twelve years, finally making a permanent home in West Finley township, Washington county. Their other children were John, Samuel, Mary Ann, Martha and Jane. Of this family Robert is now the only living member. The mother died June 11, 1848, and the father lingered until 1856, when he, too, passed away.

Charles Wallace, the eldest son of the above family, was born January 2, 1802, in County Down, Ireland, and passed his youth in America, on the farm of his father. He learned the trade of a weaver, and followed that vocation until he settled on the farm now occupied by his son, Thomas G. He was united in marriage with Ann Griffith, daughter of Thomas Griffith, of Donegal township, Washington county, who was a native of Wales. To this union were born children as follows, the names and dates of birth being given: Margaret, October 15, 1826; Robert, January 4, 1828; Thomas G., March 19, 1829; Samuel, September 10, 1830; John, November 8, 1832; Charles, July 14, 1833; Esther, January 8, 1836; William, July 16, 1837; Mary J., February 7, 1839, and Arthur, May 15, 1842. Of these children, Esther, Samuel, John and Mary J. are deceased. Mr. Wallace was a charter member of the Haneytown Presbyterian Church. In politics he was formerly a Whig, and on the formation of the party became a Republican. On May 19, 1871, he was laid to rest, and on February 6, 1879, was followed by his wife.

Thomas G. Wallace was born in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., and came with his father to West Finley township, where he assisted in the general duties of the home farm until he was twenty-two years of age, when he began working by the month for the neighboring farmers, in which he continued three years. On March 14, 1854, he was married to Elizabeth Haggerty, of Independence township, Washington county, who bore him one daughter, Anna Mary, who died February 11, 1855, the mother having died February 5. On February 9, 1860, Mr. Wallace was married to Harriet L., daughter of Alexander Patterson, whose ancestors were of Irish birth, and to their union were born the following children: Beverage P., born January 31, 1861; Anna M., born May 4, 1862; William A., born June 18, 1863; Charles H., born September 8, 1864; Lizzie J., born October 23, 1865; James P., born January 23, 1867; Lelia A., born March 25, 1868; Samuel M., born August 25, 1869; Ida B., born November 3, 1870; Thomas H., born January 20, 1872; Nancy M., born May 13, 1873; Edward L., born February 17, 1875; John A., born November 20, 1876, and Laura E., born May 11, 1881. Of the above family, Samuel, James and Lelia are deceased. When Mr. Wallace began married life he was too poor to purchase a home, and so continued to rent until he had paid $7,000 for the use of farms. He then concluded that renting was as expensive as purchasing property, and so bought the old home farm, which by the practice of economy and good management he has nearly paid for. He is one of the few farmers who keep a strict account of the sales and expenditures of the family. During the last year Mr. Wallace has sold about $1,500 worth of stock and produce from his farm. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church of Haneytown, W. Va., to which he gives a liberal support. In politics he is a leading Republican.

LEWIS LINN, a representative agriculturist of Peters township, was born December 17, 1827, in Union township, Washington Co., Penn., and is a son of Aaron Linn.

Aaron Linn was born in 1790, in New Brunswick, N. J., and in early manhood was married to Eliza Henkison, a native of the same State. They afterward located in Union township, Washington Co., Penn., where he worked by the day. Their children were born as follows: David, William, Lewis, Hannah, Mary (1), Zephaniah, James, Mary (2), Elizabeth and Ann C. Of this family David, William, Mary, Zephaniah and James are deceased. The latter enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., and was killed at the battle of Gettysburg.

Lewis Linn, the subject proper of this sketch, passed his youth on the home place. On April 13, 1848, he was married to Margaret J., daughter of James Sheets, a shoemaker of Peters township. The young couple then lived as tenants in Peters township, also near Canonsburg, and in 1861 bought the home farm in Peters township, containing 180 acres of fine land, upon which he has made many improvements. He owns twenty five cows, and has a milk route in Pittsburgh, which is managed by his son, William, who also buys milk of the neighboring farmers. Mr. Linn votes the Democratic ticket, and has served nine years as road supervisor, but prefers to devote his principal time to personal matters. He assisted in the organization of the Presbyterian Church at Finleyville, of which he is an elder and staunch supporter.

Lewis Sirm

Nine children have been born to this union, namely: James, Aaron, Nancy, Belle, William, John A. (deceased), one deceased in infancy, Robert and Margaret. Of these four are married, viz.: James, Aaron, Nancy and Belle. Mr. Linn has had fifteen grandchildren, three of whom are deceased.

JAMES BELL. Of the many European countries that have given to America their best and bravest citizens, the fair Emerald Isle has ever been found in the foremost rank. Persecuted and oppressed by powerful nations, many of her high spirited sons and daughters have sought a land of freedom, and finding the object of their quest in America, have bled and died to maintain the honor of their adopted country.

James Bell was born February 9, 1844, near Bangor, County Down, Ireland, and grew to manhood on his father's farm. He soon evinced an inclination for mechanical work, and by indulging this natural taste, finally became quite a successful carpenter. On March 17, 1873, he was united in the bonds of matrimony with Jane Major, a native of the same county. She was born December 3, 1855, and was a daughter of David Major, a merchant of Bangor, County Down, Ireland.

Mr. and Mrs. Bell decided to begin their married life in the New World, and in June, 1873, sailed from Larne, County Antrim, on the State-line ship "Pennsylvania." After a voyage of thirteen days they landed at New York, thence proceeded to Steubenville, Ohio, where they remained a short time, then settled at Midway, Penn. Mr. Bell there found employment in outside work at the coal mines, but through working with untiring industry, his health began to fail from the unaccustomed and severe manual labor. In 1880 he opened a small grocery, being obliged to begin on a modest scale, as his finances were very limited. But undaunted by the many obstacles before him, with the spirit of energy and pluck characteristic of the sons of Erin, James Bell began at the foot of the commercial ladder. Slowly, yet steadily, he began to rise; round by round he ascended, watching and working, with his faithful wife by his side to encourage and aid in the stubborn conflict; at last success dawned and the darkest hours were over. To-day James Bell conducts the most extensive individual mercantile business at Midway. He has been compelled to enlarge his business facilities, and is enjoying the well-earned reward of those weary, toilsome years. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. James Bell: Minnie, David, William M., Bessie M. N., James A., Hugh W., John (deceased in infancy), Mattie S. and John N. In politics Mr. Bell was formerly a Republican, and in 1884 joined the Prohibition party, with which he has since been connected. He and his wife are earnest members of the U. P. Church.

WESLEY L. OWINGS, a well-to-do farmer and substantial citizen of Hanover township, is of Welsh extraction. His grandfather, Asa Owings, was born in Wales, and on his arrival in America settled near Harmon's Creek, where his life was passed in "tilling the virgin soil." Many were the hardships and trials with which this family contended before the victory was won beyond a question. Twelve children were born to Asa Owings, among whom, and second in the order of birth, was one named Ephraim.

Ephraim Owings was born January 6, 1804, in Brooke county, W. Va., in the pioneer cabin on Harmon's creek, this county. His early life was passed on the frontier. On January 12, 1826, he was married to Blanche Swearingen, who was born August 20, 1807, in Brooke county, W. Va., where her father, John Swearingen, after coming from Maryland, settled. The following children were born to Ephraim and Blanche Owings: Virginder, the widow of Henry Fullerton; Michael, married to James Mahan, and living in De Kalb county, Mo.; John S., a farmer of Hancock county, W. Va.; Asa, an agriculturist of Webster county, Mo.; Frances, deceased wife of John Suedeter; Helen, married to John N. Griffith, of Hanover township; Catherine, widow of Daniel Sturgeon, of Beaver Falls, Penn.; William E., a farmer of De Kalb county, Mo.; Wesley L., of whom further mention is made; George E., deceased in infancy; Minerva and Mary (twins), deceased in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Owings lived in Hancock and Brooke counties, W. Va., where he followed the river in connection with farming until 1864, when he purchased the Henry Bow farm, in Hanover township, this county, where his last years were spent. At length, worn out with the toil of many industrious years, he passed away, July 13, 1884, followed by his wife July 14, 1891, and they are buried in the Florence cemetery. Mrs. Owings was a member of the Baptist Church at Holliday's Cove, W. Va., in which her husband was an elder and leading member for many years. He was a zealous Democrat, a successful farmer and an excellent citizen.

Wesley L. Owings was born July 18, 1846, in Brooke county, W. Va. On the old place, where the father had passed his boyhood, the son grew to maturity. When a young man he came, with his parents, to Washington county, Penn. On February 17, 1870, he married Margaret E. Davis, who was born May 20, 1848, a daughter of William and Margaret (Bruce) Davis, of Hanover township. The children of Wesley and Margaret Owings are as follows: George D., Linnie A., Margaret E., William E., Ralph G. and Elva C., all of whom are living at home. Mr. and Mrs. Owings remain on the old place where the father first settled. Like his ancestors for generations, Wesley Owings devotes his attention to the cultivation of his farm and stock raising, in which business he has prospered. He is an enthusiastic supporter of the doctrines embraced in the Democratic party. The family share the respect and esteem of the entire community, and Mrs. Owings is a member of the U. P. Church at Frankfort Springs.

JL. BRADY was born in Washington, Washington Co., Penn., a descendant of Freeman Brady, who came to Washington, Penn., in about 1812, where he worked at his trade, that of mason. He married a Miss Means, of South Strabane township, this county, whose family reside on the place now known as the "Taylor farm," and their children were as follows: Sophia, Seaman (deceased), Andrew (deceased), John and Freeman, Samuel, James, David (deceased), Benjamin, and Martha (deceased). Mr. Brady took a very active part in local affairs, and at one time was postmaster at Washington. He was contractor for many of the abutments to the bridges, along the National pike, and built the courthouse and old jail. Although he had but a limited education, he became one of the most prominent men of the day. Politically, he was one of the old wheel horses of the Democratic party in Washington county. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church. He died in 1872, when over seventy years of age, having been preceded to the grave by his wife.

Benjamin Brady, son of Freeman, was born in Washington borough in 1836, and there passed his entire life. In 1859 he was married to Rebecca Jordan, of Washington, and three children were born to them: W. C., born March 4, 1860; J. L. (a sketch of whom follows), born September 28, 1862; and Katie H., born August 14, 1864 (married to John W. Hallam). Mr. Brady was a butcher and conducted a meat market, a business he followed all his life. He was generous to a fault, and ever ready to give a helping hand to the needy. He died in October, 1864, and his widow is still living in the borough of Washington.

J. L. Brady lived in Washington until he was five years of age, when he came to Amwell township, and made his home with his granduncle and grandaunt, Isaac and Isabella Dager, the former of whom died when J. L. was a lad of fifteen summers, since which time he has successfully managed the farm, having previously received his education in the common schools. On October 16, 1889, he was united in marriage with Ella Hildebrand, daughter of Andrew and Mary Hildebrand, of West Bethlehem township, whose other children are Marion, Eli, Alvin, Frank, Rachel and Zoe. Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Brady have one child, Glenn, born May 28, 1891. Our subject is a Democrat, and is active in the politics of his township, always voting for the best man in local politics, regardless of party distinctions.

Isaac Dager, granduncle of J. L. Brady, was born March 29, 1808, on the farm now occupied by our subject, and received a good rate school education. He was married to Isabella Means, and there was born to them one daughter, Catherine Ann, who died at the age of nine years. Mr. Dager died December 4, 1876, on the farm where his life was passed, and his widow followed him to the grave September 27, 1888.

HENRY MORRISON, son of Henry, and grandson of Henry Morrison, was born August 13, 1827, in Nottingham township, this county. The grandfather was a lieutenant in the Revolutionary war. In 1773 he came to this county and bought 466 acres of land on Mingo creek, where he died at the age of eighty-two years, leaving three sons: John, James and Henry. Henry Morrison was born October 2, 1799, in Nottingham township, and at an early day was married to Anna Stewart, who was born here October 14, 1794. Five children blessed this marriage, namely: William, born December 18, 1820, died February 26, 1843; Patience (Mrs. Hamilton), born April 30, 1823; Henry, of whom a sketch follows; John, born May 23, 1830, died January 6, 1836, and James, born May 14, 1833. The father owned 152 acres of land and passed his life in agricultural pursuits, serving the township in various capacities. He died October 7, 1884, having been preceded by the mother December 25, 1877.

Henry Morrison, whose name opens this sketch, grew to manhood on the home place in Nottingham township, and on March 30, 1848, married Margaret, daughter of Charles Hamilton, of Peters township. She was born July 16, 1829. To this union the following children have been born: Charles H., born March 12, 1849; Margaret A., born October 24, 1852; Sarah B., born November 1, 1855, died August 16, 1859; Patience L., born July 21, 1858, died August 17, 1859; Henry W., born June 12, 1860, died October 1, 1865; James S., born October 7, 1862; Willett A., born April 11, 1865; Harry M., born July 24, 1867, and Howard P., born July 11, 1871.

Mr. Morrison is a prosperous farmer, now owning seventy-eight and one-half acres of well-cultivated land, and at one time gave his entire attention to stock raising. He has been supervisor, also serving as school director for several years. In political affairs he affiliates with the Democratic party.

EA. WILLIAMS is of French descent, his grandparents, James and Sarah (Elverson) Richards, having been born in France. When but sixteen years of age James Richards served as a fifer in the French revolution, being a brave soldier; he received a wound in the leg which he carried through life. Emigrating to America, he became a farmer and active politician. They were the parents of three children, viz.: Hester, Hannah and Lucy. The parents died in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn.

Titus Williams, son of Elder Williams (known as a great minister of his day), was born in 1808, on the home place in East Pike Run township, and for several years was a boat pilot on the Monongahela river. He was married to Lucy Richards, who was born in 1809, and she bore him three children, namely: Hester A. (deceased), Eli A. and James E., a Methodist minister of Pittsburgh, Penn. The father was a representative citizen of the community, and voted with the Whig party. He died in 1842, at the age of thirty-four years, and his widow, who is now a hale and hearty woman of eighty-two years, is yet living with her son. She is a member of the M. E. Church, with which her husband was also identified.

Eli A. Williams, son of Titus and Lucy Williams, was born February 27, 1842, in Fayette county, Penn., and there learned the blacksmith's trade. He married Elizabeth Worrell, August 26, 1874, who was born in 1854, in Washington county, Penn. She is the daughter of Elias and Ayes (Smith) Worrell, both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania. The father was an agriculturist, and in politics a Republican. He died in 1872. Both parents were members of the M. E. Church; their children were Sarah, widow of C. L. Kinder; Elizabeth, wife of Eli A. Williams, and E. I. Worrell, of Allen township, living on and owning the old homestead. Eli A. and Elizabeth (Worrell) Williams are the parents of three children, namely: John A., born in 1875; Elverson L., born in 1878, and Arthur L., born in 1887. Mr. Williams is a manufacturer of coal picks and tools for several different companies, being a very expert workman, and also carrying on his farm of 106 acres. He is a prominent citizen, always interested in public enterprises, and votes with the Republican party, having filled various local offices. He is also a member of the Masonic Fraternity, and in religious faith he and his wife are members of the M. E. Church, of which he is trustee.

JOHN B. ANDREW was born in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., October 28, 1852. He is a son of Robert S. and Sarah (Cooper) Andrew, and grandson of James Andrew, who was born and married in the State of New Jersey, removing to Washington county, Penn., early in the present century. The grandfather located near Mt. Zion church, Morris township, and there reared the following family, all of whom are now deceased: Ruth, Mary, Margaret, James, John, William, Peter and Robert S. Peter was born in Morris township, August 25, 1799, died April 23, 1883. Robert S. was born in Morris township, November 6, 1812. Mr. Andrew died in 1826.

Robert S. Andrew received his early education at the subscription schools, but on the death of his father was obliged to assume the care of the farm, together with his brothers. In 1836 he married Rhoda Patterson, daughter of Thomas Patterson, of Morris township. She bore him two children (twins), who died in infancy. Mrs. Andrew died in 1837, and in 1842 Mr. Andrew was united in marriage with Sarah Cooper, daughter of Zebulon Cooper, of Butler county, Penn., to which union were born the following children: Sarah Ann and Mary Elizabeth (twins), born February 2, 1843 (Mary Elizabeth, deceased in infancy, and Sarah Ann is the wife of George W. Craft, of Morris township); James Herschel, born January 21, 1845, yet living (unmarried) with his brother, John B. Andrew; Zebulon C., born January 2, 1847, married to Jennie Booth (of Greene county, Penn.) and residing in Washington, Penn.; Margaret E., born February 15, 1850, widow of Spencer Clutter, and living in Greene county, Penn., and John B., subject of this memoir. The mother of these children died November 3, 1852, and Mr. Andrew, in 1858, wedded Hannah (Hathaway) Emerson. She was born in 1821. Their children were: Robert S., born September 10, 1859, living in Pittsburgh, Penn.; Carrie, born September 27, 1862, wife of J. F. Post, and residing in Morris township, and William H., born October 10, 1865, living in Washington. Mrs. Andrew died March 4, 1877, and in 1884 he married Sarah Anderson, of Washington, Penn. Mr. Andrew passed his entire life upon the old home farm, and always followed agriculture. He was a Democrat, and in religion was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Concord, but attended the M. E. Church at Mt. Zion. Robert S. Andrew died June 9, 1891.

John B. Andrew remained at home and assisted his father in the farm duties until he was twenty-six years of age. On November 4, 1878, he married Flora Samantha Cooper (born December 25, 1855), daughter of Nathaniel Cooper, of Mercer county, Penn., and their children are Oliver Woods, born September 5, 1879; John Elmer, born September 27, 1883, and Harry Clark, born October 17, 1887. Mr. Andrew raises some stock, and is a successful farmer. Politically, he is a Democrat but not a politician, and in religion he and his wife are members of the M. E. Church at Mt. Zion.

WILLIAM W. HUNTER. Lord Bacon aptly expressed the universal belief when he penned the lines, "Though kings, princes and great personages be few, yet there are many excellent men who deserve better than vague reports and barren elegies." History is biography of men whose deeds have left an impress on the life of a nation or a people. If such be an evident fact, the lives of those men who have risked their all for the dear old flag are especially interesting to every true patriot and most worthy of permanent record, that future generations may be benefited by their perusal.

The Hunter family were originally natives of Ireland, where the grandparents of the present generation, John and Jane (Work) Hunter, were born and reared. They were married in the old country, where John had learned the weaver's trade. In 1800 they sailed to America, first locating on a farm adjoining Buffalo village, this county. He packed salt over the mountains, then drove a team, and afterward took a contract to build a mile of the old National pike. He then bought a farm in Buffalo township, successfully following agricultural pursuits until becoming advanced in years, when he resumed his trade. Mr. and Mrs. Hunter reared the following children: Robert (removed to Belmont county, Ohio), David (moved to Iowa), Alexander (deceased in Ohio), Joshua (deceased of cholera in Wheeling, W. Va.), James (settled in Iowa), Margaret (deceased in Washington county, Penn.), William (of whom a sketch follows), Samuel (moved West) and one deceased in youth. The parents moved to Belmont county, Ohio, and passed their declining years with their son Robert. They were members of the North Buffalo United Presbyterian Church under the ministry of Rev. David French. The mother of Mr. Hunter was born in Ireland and lived to be one hundred and nine years of age.

William Hunter was born in Buffalo township, this county, soon after his parents arrived in America, receiving a meager education in the country schools. When but thirteen years of age he drove a four horse team, also assisting with various duties of the farm. In 1830 he was married to Mrs. Maria J. (Maher) Chambers, widow of Joseph G. Chambers, and daughter of John Maher, Sr., a prominent merchant, and sister of John Maher, Jr., a leading attorney. Purchasing the place now occupied by his namesake, he began to follow farming. Mr. Hunter was a quiet, un-demonstrative man, and was a radical Democrat, though never taking a very active part in politics. He and his wife were members of the Upper Buffalo Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Hunter was a woman of excellent mind and possessed an inexhaustible fund of general information. He died March 23, 1887, having been preceded to the grave by his wife, May 12, 1856. Their children are named, Joseph C., Jane, William W. and Joshua J.

William W. Hunter (whose name opens this sketch) was born March 4, 1837, in Hopewell township, this county, and attended the common schools of the vicinity until twenty years of age, when he taught school in Hopewell township four years. When the Civil war began he had arrangements made for studying law in Washington, Penn., being unable to enlist in the army, having lost his right arm in a threshing machine in 1859, but he engaged as a teamster, remaining in that work until March 12, 1863. He then returned to farm life, and December 15, 1864, was united in marriage with Lizzie T., born April 3, 1837, daughter of Caldwell Smiley. Their children are: Joseph W., John S., Clarence M., and Howard T. Joseph W. is a student at the Philadelphia Medical College. Mr. Hunter was born on the farm where he is now living. The home place contains 91½ acres, and he owns an additional tract of 112½ acres. When a young man of twenty years he began contributing to newspapers, having obtained a high reputation as a writer, and is at present a regular contributor to the Pittsburgh National Stockman, Western Agriculturist, Dakota Farmer and Breeders' Gazette. He is regarded as an entertaining public speaker. Probably no other man in private life in this county has been called upon as often to speak at religious, educational, patriotic and agricultural meetings. He devotes his principal attention to the breeding of draft horses. Mr. and Mrs. Hunter are members of the Upper Buffalo Presbyterian Church, in which he has been an elder twenty years, and superintendent of the Sabbath-school for fifteen years, where he is now a teacher. He was a commissioner from the Washington Presbytery to the Presbyterian General Assembly at Detroit, Mich., in 1891. In politics he votes the Republican ticket, but though often urged to do so, has never allowed his name to appear as a candidate for office.

Joseph C. Hunter, a brother of William W., and eldest son of William and Maria (Chambers) Hunter, was born in 1831, on the farm in Hopewell township, and was educated at the Millersburg, Lancaster Co., Penn., Normal School, graduating with the class of '58. He fitted himself for teaching, and followed that occupation until the war began. He enlisted in August, 1862, in Company C, Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry, and participated in all the engagements of his regiment until his death, in 1864, resulting from exposure. Among the battles in which he fought may be mentioned Loomy Creek, Devil's Hole, Moortield, Pancake Gap, Petersburg, Fredericksburg, Monocacy Junction, Cedar Creek, and many other engagements.

Jane Hunter (a sister of Joseph C.) was born in 1835 in Hopewell township, this county, receiving her education in the common schools and Buffalo Academy; she afterward taught two terms of school, and, in 1862, was married to Hon. J. R. Kelley, who enlisted in 1861 in an Ohio regiment, was discharged because of broken health in 1862, and returned to his home. He represented Washington county in the State Legislature of 1861, 1865 and 1866, being Speaker of the House the last year, and afterward edited the Washington Reporter. He died in 1871, leaving three children: Mary R. (wife of C. B. Jackson, Claysville, has one child, Kathleen), Annie L. (wife of James Ray, of Claysville) and John W. (married to Annie Milligan, Claysville, now of Mannington, W. Va.).

Joshua J. Hunter (a brother of Joseph C.) was born June 1, 1832, and reared in Hopewell township, this county, receiving his education in the Buffalo Academy. He followed farming until the war opened, and in August, 1861, enlisted in Company I, First Pennsylvania Cavalry, being discharged for physical disability in May, 1862. He re-enlisted in August, 1862, with his brother, in Company C, Twenty-second Cavalry, as commissary-sergeant. He died in February, 1865, in the hospital, from the effects of hardship and exposure in the service.

MRS. MARY BOON, widow of William Boon, is a daughter of James Speer, who was a son of James, and grandson of Robert Speer. The latter was a native of Adams county, Penn., and settled in Washington county at a very early date. He and his family afterward moved to New Concord, Muskingum Co., Ohio, where he died. His son, James, was born in Adams county, Penn., and came to Ohio with his parents in early childhood, passing the most of his life near New Concord. At that time the Indians were yet numerous in the country, but were usually friendly, and often visited the Speer family. During these calls the squaws invariably left their poor little "papooses" strapped to a board outside the door. Thus, amid the scenes of pioneer days, was James Speer reared to manhood. In early life he was married to Miss Catherine Latta, and settled in Washington county, Penn., where he died November 14, 1849. Their children were born as follows: Deborah, Robert, Thomas L., James, Jane and Nancy, all of whom are now deceased.

James Speer, son of James and Catherine Speer, was born in 1810, on the farm in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn., where his widow is now living. In 1839 he was united in marriage with Maria Calahan, who was born in 1814 in Peters township, this county. She is a daughter of Thomas Calahan (carpenter), a son of Joseph Calahan, a native of Ireland. Mrs. Thomas Calahan died when her daughter Maria was but five years of age, and the child passed her girlhood in the house of John Rankin, of Washington county, where she remained until her marriage.

James and Maria Speer were the parents of eight children, viz.: Mary, Kate, Eliza J. (deceased), a son deceased in infancy, Adeline (wife of George Scott, of Des Moines, Iowa), Blanche (Mrs. James Emery, of Washington county, Penn.), Anna Margaret (widow of William Paden, has one son, Lloyd H.), and an infant daughter (deceased). The father died April 29, 1878. Of these children, Mary Speer was married to William Boon, grandson of John.

John Boon, the grandfather, was born in Ireland, where he grew to manhood and married. This family came to America many years ago, and first settled in Dauphin county, Penn., where Mr. Boon was engaged in farming and distilling, most of the wheat being then distilled, as produce brought no profit. He finally moved to Canonsburg, Penn., where the parents died. Their children were born as follows: William, James, John, Mary, Jane, Margaret, Elizabeth, Joseph and Nancy. In politics Mr. Boon was a Whig, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church at Miller's Run.

William Boon, grandson of John Boon and son of William and Margaret Boon, was born July 10, 1831, in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his youth on the home farm. In 1861 he enlisted in the One Hundred and Fifty-fourth Regiment, P. V. I., serving nine months, then returning to Cecil township, this county, was married February 9, 1865, to Miss Mary Speer. To this marriage were born four children, namely: Nettie E., James L., John A. and Blaine, all of whom are living. The father followed general agriculture and devoted considerable attention to sheep raising. In politics he was a Republican. He died July 20, 1884, in his fifty-third year. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Boon has continued to reside on the old place, which has been her home for twenty-six years. It contains 100 acres of good land. Mrs. Boon is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg.

ADAM S. FERGUSON, a prominent farmer of Somerset township, is a native of the same and a son of Robert Ferguson, whose father (Robert) was born in Lancaster county, Penn., and there married to Lydia Ferguson, who was born in the same county. Eleven children were born to them, and the grandfather died at the age of eighty three years; his wife had died several years before.

Robert Ferguson was born February 29, 1801, on a farm in Washington county, receiving a common-school education. He was married to Elizabeth Smith, and they had eight children (only three of whom are living), viz.: Adam S., Sarah J. (married to Richard Huffman, a resident of Washington county, Penn.), Robert (a farmer of Somerset township), Lydia (deceased), Elizabeth (deceased) and three others who died in infancy. The father and mother are both deceased.

Adam S. Ferguson was born May 7, 1836, in Somerset township, this county, and from early childhood was trained to agricultural duties, receiving a common business education. In 1869 he married Rachel McDonough, a native of this county, who bore him one daughter, deceased in infancy, the mother following it in 1873. In 1873 Adam S. Ferguson was united in marriage with Lucinda Degarmo, who was born in 1836, daughter of William and Elizabeth Degarmo, natives of Washington county. Mr. Degarmo was a farmer, and the parent of five children, four of whom are now living: Hannah (wife of Thomas Lytle, a farmer of Fallowfield township, this county), Elizabeth (married to Matthias Hartley, a farmer of Amwell township), Maria and Lucinda (Mrs. Ferguson). The parents are yet living in Fallowfield township, aged eighty years.

Adam S. Ferguson and his wife have had two children, namely: Elizabeth G. (living at home) and Lavina (deceased). Mr. Ferguson is identified with the Democratic party. He devotes particular attention to his well cultivated farm of 186 acres. His wife is a member of the Disciple Church.

WILLIAM PROUDFIT is descended from a well known family of Washington county. David Proudfit, his grandfather, was a native of Scotland, and, coming to America, located in York county, Penn., where his son John was born January 28, 1775.

In 1802 this John Proudfit came to Washington county, Penn., locating in Hanover township. On April 9, 1809, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Lyle, a native of Cross Creek (then Hopewell) township, born March 21, 1793, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Bays) Lyle.

Some time after their marriage, John and Elizabeth (Lyle) Proudfit returned to York county, as the father of John was growing old and feeble, and needed the care of his children. The young couple remained on the home farm until the death of the father, which event occurred in 1826. John and his family then again moved to Washington county, settling one mile west of Burgettstown, where he passed the remainder of his life. The trips across the mountains were fraught with much danger and inconvenience. On one occasion Mr. and Mrs. Proudfit rode 300 miles on horseback to visit relatives in York county, the wife carrying an infant in her arms, and many hardships were endured on the journey. The following children were born to these pioneers: David, born August 13, 1810, died September 19, 1813; John L. (deceased), born September 3, 1812; James K., born April 21, 1815, died February 25, 1816; Eliza J. (Mrs. Arthur Campbell, of Smith township), born January 2, 1817, died December 21, 1892; Agnes, born June 17, 1819, died August 15, 1824; Robert F., born December 23, 1821, died in Smith township, in September, 1886; Cinderella (wife of Jacob Proudfit, a native of Ashland county, Ohio), born September 16, 1824; William, born May 10, 1828; Andrew, born March 20, 1831; and Eleanor (Mrs. Thomas Shipley, of Hanover township, this county), born August 29, 1833, now in Hanover township.

William Proudfit was born and reared in Smith township, Washington county, attending the home schools and working on the farm during his boyhood. On January 1, 1855, he was united in marriage with Catherine Riddle, who was born April 5, 1833, a daughter of Samuel Riddle, of Smith township. She has borne him the following children: Elizabeth C. (Mrs. Hon. T. M. Patterson, of Burgettstown, Penn.), Margaret S. (wife of Dr. S. L. McCullough, of Frankfort Springs, Beaver Co., Penn.), Andrew C. (a farmer of Smith township), Mary J. (Mrs. Miller Russell, of Robinson township), Samuel R. (living at home), William R. (deceased), John L. (who is a student of Washington and Jefferson College) and Kate B. (residing with her parents). Mr. and Mrs. Proudfit resided on the home farm a short time after their marriage, then moved to a pleasant place situated at the confluence of Middle Raccoon creek with the main stream, his farm comprising 221 acres. He has followed general agriculture, including stock raising, and was extensively engaged in breeding fine sheep, being now much interested in the dairy business. Mr. Proudfit is a successful man in the best sense of the term, having won a large number of warm friends. Politically, he has always been a Democrat. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church.

JAMES McCLEERY, a prosperous farmer, wool-grower and stock raiser of Hopewell township, was born October 7, 1854, in West Finley township, Washington Co., Penn. He comes of pioneer stock, his parents, Alexander and Mary (Davidson) McCleery, being natives of West Finley township, while his grandparents, James and Catherine (Ferbis) McCleery, were reared in this county.

James McCleery (the grandfather) was born in Ireland, and his parents sailed for America when he was small. They came to Donegal township, this county, where he grew to manhood and was married to Catherine Ferbis. After their marriage they removed to West Finley township, where their children were reared: John, Alexander, Joseph, Thomas, Jane and James, the latter dying in youth.

Alexander McCleery was reared on the farm, receiving such education as was afforded in his time. When he was thirty-one years of age he married Mary Davidson, and afterward purchased a farm. His wife died in 1866, leaving four children: William D., James (subject of this sketch), Nettie J. and Robert D. His second wife was Elizabeth Ackley, of Greene county, who has borne him one daughter, Mary Elizabeth. He resides in West Finley township with two of his unmarried children, Robert D. and Mary E. His eldest son, William D., is a physician at Hanoverton, Ohio. Nettie J. is married to R. J. Buchanan, and is residing in Ohio county, W. Va.

James McCleery, son of Alexander and Mary (Davidson) McCleery, received his early education in the public schools of West Finley township. He then went to Oberlin, Ohio, where he pursued a scientific course of study for nine terms. After leaving college he turned his attention to farming, remaining with his father until 1885. On January 24, 1884, he was married to Lulu V., daughter of Robert and Jane (Lucas) Sutherland. In 1885 he removed to a farm in the southwestern part of Hopewell township. He now owns 171 acres of well-improved and well-stocked land. Politically he is a Republican, but while taking a lively interest in political affairs, voices his sentiment by his ballot alone. Mr. McCleery has two children, Frank Ross and Mary Templeton.

WILLIAM T. COURSON, a public spirited and intelligent citizen of Amwell township, is a son of Benjamin Courson, who married a daughter of John Carter, of that township. The young couple lived in Franklin township several years, and then moved to the old farm in Amwell township, which he still owns, and where were born their seven children, as follows: William T., John N. (deceased), Mrs.

Nancy Van Kirk, Mrs. Margaret Lacock, Mrs. Jane Galley, Frank M. and Fannie.

William T. Courson, the eldest in the above named family, was born in Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., and when six years old was brought by his parents to Amwell township, where he has since resided. On May 21, 1876, he was united in marriage with Miss Sidney Watson, a daughter of William W. and Catherine Watson, whose children were: Mrs. Sarah Jane Shipe, Mrs. Mary Callie McFee, Robert, Henry (deceased), Mena, Lenora (deceased) and Sidney. Mr. Watson died November 30, 1891, and Mr. William T. Courson has since bought the home farm of the deceased, which property comprises sixty one acres.

William T. and Catherine (Watson) Courson have had five children, namely: Lillie, Herschel, Willie, Ray and John. Mr. Courson has been a farmer all his life, and is the owner of about 122 acres of fine land, to which he gives his principal attention. He has accumulated a comfortable competence by his own unaided efforts, and although barely forty years of age, is already enjoying the fruits of early toil. He is a "hustling" Republican, and has held several minor offices in a manner creditable to himself and satisfactory to his constituency. In religious faith he is a member of the M. E. Church.

JAMES JOHNSTON. Of the prosperous and representative farmers of Cecil township, this gentleman deserves prominent mention. His ancestors were natives of Ireland, from which country his grandparents, John and Elizabeth Johnston, emigrated to this country, settling permanently in South Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn. John Johnston passed away in 1841, and was followed by his wife two years later.

John Johnston (a son of this pioneer couple) was born in 1802, on the home place in Allegheny county, Penn. He was reared to manhood in South Fayette township, and in early life was married to Elizabeth Roy, who was born in 1803, in Ireland. She was a daughter of Thomas and Margaret Roy, who came to America many years ago, locating on a farm on Miller's run, Cecil township, this county, where the father died in 1849, his wife soon following him. Seven children were born to the union of John and Elizabeth (Roy) Johnston, namely: Rachel (who died in 1849, at the age of eighteen years), Margaret (deceased April 3, 1887, wife of Joseph Campbell, Allegheny county, Penn.), Elizabeth (deceased in childhood), Elizabeth (married to William Bowman, Allegheny county), James (subject), W. J. (residing in Peters township, this county) and Martha Jane (wife of W. P. Morgan, Canonsburg). Mr. Johnston was a conservative in politics, and in religion he and his wife were members of the U. P. Church at Robinson's Run. He died February 7, 1853, in South Fayette township, Allegheny county, and the mother passed away December 14, 1891, while residing in Canonsburg, this county.

James Johnston was born January 14, 1840, on the home farm in South Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn., receiving his education in the district schools. In 1866 he came to Cecil township, Washington county (where he has since remained), and purchased 208 acres of land, which had been patented by William Long in 1781. He was united in marriage with Susanna, daughter of Robert and Susanna Bell, early settlers of Peters township, this county. Mr. Johnston has made many improvements on his farm, and is prospering in his chosen vocation. Politically he votes with the Republican party. He is a member of the Greenside U. P. Church at Canonsburg, and his wife was connected with the Presbyterian Society at Centre. She died March 7, 1892, aged forty-four years three months seventeen days, leaving five children: John B., Mary E., Robert, Laura and James Harvey.

PHILIP ADDISON MINTON, one of the successful and enterprising farmers of Morris township, is a grandson of Philip Minton, who was born in New Jersey, of English parentage, and in 1786 moved with his brother Matthias to Washington county, Penn., locating a mile south of Sparta, in Morris township. He soon after married a Miss Clutter, of the same county, who bore him the following children: John, Thaddeus, George W., Sophronia, Harriet and Ruth, of whom George W. is the only surviving member, and he resides on the old homestead.

Thaddeus Minton was born August 15, 1805, and received but a limited education at the subscription schools. He was a natural mechanic, and worked successfully at carpentering, milling and shoemaking. He was married to Parmelia Squires, of Morris township, and their children were: Warren, engaged in the lumber and coal business, at Charleston, Ill.; Philip A., the subject of this biography; J. W., who lives in Washington, Penn., a trusted employe in a large iron mill; Rachel, wife of J. M. Dille, of Morris township; Ruth, married to E. Dille, a resident of Waynesburgh, Greene Co., Penn., and Anna L., the widow of H. Adams, living in Prosperity.

Philip Addison Minton was born in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., October 12, 1837, and was educated in the common schools. At the age of seventeen he learned the carpenter's trade, which he has followed for twenty-two years, and has won the reputation of a skilled workman. On February 28, 1861, he was united in marriage with Keziah Dille, who was born April 11, 1836, a daughter of Lewis Dille. Mr. Minton lived in Prosperity, Morris township, for two years after his marriage, then in 1863 removed to the "Old Jeduthian Sanders" farm, lying three miles northeast of Prosperity, and in 1865 came to the well-improved farm where he has since resided. They have had the following children: James O., born December 28, 1861, married to Victoria Tharp; Laura V., born July 17, 1864, died in infancy; Annie May, born December 12, 1865, wife of Stephen Tharp, and living near Ten-Mile village, Washington county; Chester W., born June 21, 1868, a dentist, practicing in Brooklyn, N. Y.; Lillie E., born April 1, 1871, died November 1, 1877; Lizzie B., born November 20, 1873, died November 9, 1877, and Herschel P., born May 24, 1879, yet living with his parents.

In 1865 a terrible conflagration destroyed all the property of Mr. Minton, and amid the confusion, a beloved child was lost before it could be rescued. Once more he began life with no property excepting one horse and a cow; but with the kind assistance of sympathetic neighbors, he began farming on a very limited scale. However, his "never-say-die" disposition soon put him "on his feet" again, and to-day he owns a good, well-stocked farm, upon which he has erected one of the finest barns in the township, built and modeled by himself. Politically he is a Democrat, and in religious conviction is an elder in the Upper Ten Mile Presbyterian Church, of which his wife is also a member.

JOHAN SWAGLER, a wealthy farmer of Peters township, is a grandson of Jacob Swagler, who emigrated from Germany to America, and coming to Washington county, Penn., bought a farm on Pigeon creek, in Somerset township. In early manhood he was wedded to a Miss Layton, who bore him several children, among whom were two sons: Jacob (who settled in Wayne county, Ohio) and Jonathan.

Jonathan Swagler, son of the pioneer Jacob, was born in 1795, on the farm in Somerset township, Washington county, where his entire life was passed. He was married to Miss Sarah Horn, of Anwell township, Washington county, and their children were as follows: Solomon, Hannah (deceased), Delilah, Elizabeth, Eliza J., John, Jacob, Mary (deceased), and Susanna. The father died in 1876, having been preceded by the mother in 1872.

John Swagler, son of John and Sarah (Horn) Swagler, was born in 1827 on the old Swagler homestead in Somerset township, this county. His youth was passed on the home place, and in 1859 he was married to Margaret, a daughter of

John Swagler

Jonathan Dague, of West Bethlehem township. After his marriage John Swagler bought and moved upon 187 acres in Peters township, which he purchased by payments. Not only has he cleared the farm from indebtedness, but has added to the original tract 130 adjoining acres. He also owns forty acres near Venetia, upon which is located the Swagler mills. In addition to managing the mill Mr. Swagler has been a successful farmer and stock dealer, having until quite recently enjoyed the reputation of raising the finest woolled sheep in Washington county. He has recently sold the coal which has been found under his land for $30,000. He is quiet and unassuming in manner, never boasting of his own success. In politics he is a Republican. To his first marriage three children were born, viz.: Sarah J., Jonathan and Emma. For his second wife he wedded, November 27, 1879, Margaret, daughter of James McCormick, of Peters township, and she has borne him one son, Charles.

WILLIAM McPEAK was born February 7, 1811, on the farm in Cecil township where he is now living. He is a son of James McPeak, whose father was a native of Maryland, and in 1802 crossed the mountains, locating permanently in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn.

James McPeak was born in 1800, in "The Glades," and when but two years of age was brought by his parents to a farm near Hickory, Penn. When a young man he was married to Jane Cochran, a native of North Strabane township, and in 1836 they settled on the farm where the remainder of their lives was passed. He was an active member of the Whig and Republican party, and held several township offices. He and his wife were formerly members of the Seceder Church at Noblestown, and afterward united with the U. P. Church at Venice. In 1851 he was elected a member of the Session, filling that position until his death, which event occurred in 1880, the mother being laid beside him in 1885. Their children were: Samuel, living in Mansfield, Penn.; William, of whom further mention is made; Sarah, wife of J. R. Dinsmore, Allegheny county, Penn.; Elizabeth, wife of D. L. McConnell, of Cecil township; David, living in Smith township; and Martha, wife of J. F. Mawhinney, of Cecil township.

William McPeak remained on the home place during his boyhood, attending school in District No. 3, Cecil township. When the Civil war opened he became a member of the State Guards and was drafted in the first nine months' draft. In 1861 he was united in marriage with Abigail, daughter of Stewart and Nancy (Alexander) Hickman, all of whom were natives of South Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn. The father died in 1874, in his native county; the mother is now residing in Cainsburg, Penn. Since their marriage Mr. and Mrs. McPeak have resided on the old homestead, which contains 106 acres in a good state of cultivation. He is an active member of the Prohibition party, and is now serving his second term as township commissioner. He and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Venice. They have two children: S. J. and W. H.

JH. GREGG is descended from a family who were among the first settlers of East Pike Run township. Many years ago three brothers, Henry, William and John Gregg, emigrated from the Emerald Isle and made a permanent settlement in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn. Henry took a patent for 319 acres of land known as the "Burning Mine," which is now owned by a Mr. Duvall. John Gregg was twice married; William, the second brother, was the grandfather of J. H. Gregg. William Gregg was married to Ruth Jackman, a native of Ireland, and they settled on the farm in East Pike Run township, where eight children were born as follows: Robert (married to Ann Robison), Andrew, Henry (married to Jane Dowler), John (married to Nancy Gregg), Mary Ann, Sarah, Lemima and Margaret (Mrs. Crow).

Andrew Gregg was born in March, 1808, in East Pike Run township, Washington county, and passed his youth on the homestead. He was married to Mary Ann Huggins, who was born in 1816, in what is now Allen township, Washington county, and of the children born to this union six are yet living, namely: Luey Ann, wife of V. C. Jones, of Fallowfield township; Ruth Ann, married to William Sphar, of Allen township; A. J., living in East Pike Run township; R. W.; Sarah Jane, wife of Thomas F. Fry, of Chase county, Kans., and J. H. The father was actively identified with the interests of the Republican party. He died in 1872, on the old farm where his widow is yet living.

J. H. Gregg was born March 16, 1853, in East Pike Run township, and is the youngest in his father's family. His youth and earlier manhood were passed in the home neighborhood where he attended school. In 1882 he came to the farm in Allen township, upon which he has erected a good house and barn. On February 8, 1888, he was united in marriage with Jennie, daughter of Stephen and Hannah (Shaw) Ward, and a native of Allen township. Her parents are early settlers of Washington county, and are now living at Wood's Run. Mr. and Mrs. Gregg are the parents of three children, viz.: Frank, Alpharetta and Joseph Riley. The home place contains eighty acres of well cultivated land, and he is a prosperous farmer. In politics he is identified with the Republican party. Mrs. Gregg is a member of the M. E. Church at Lueyville.

MRS. MARGARET BLACK, widow of John A. Black, is a native of Morris township, this county, where she still resides. She was born in 1832, on what is known as the old "Rutan farm," where she spent the days of her girlhood, and was one of a family of thirteen born to John Rutan, a prosperous farmer. They were of New Jersey descent. Margaret Rutan united with the Presbyterian Church when eighteen years of age. She was married to John A. Black in 1860.

John A. Black was born April 13, 1826, near Johnstown, and was one of a family of six children, all of whom emigrated West except himself, locating in the States of Iowa, Nebraska and Missouri. The ancestors came from Ireland, and the family has been characterized by honesty and sterling worth. Mr. Black early chose as his vocation that of a carpenter, in which he made himself proficient, and locating in Morris township, where he devoted his energy to his calling, was amply prosperous. When his country was in peril he did not hesitate in the performance of his duty, but, in 1862, left his young wife and home, and gave himself over to the "fortunes of war," enlisting in Company D, 140th Regiment, P. V. I., and served until the war closed. He was captured at Gettysburg, and consigned to Belle Isle prison, where he was for six months held a prisoner of war, enduring all the hardships incident to prison life. In conjunction with three of his fellow-prisoners, plans for escape were laid, but the hardships and ill food to which he had been subjected had so reduced him physically as to render him unable to travel. So much attached to him were his companions in misfortune that, rather than accept liberty at the cost of leaving him behind, they chose to remain and share his fate. The war ending, Mr. Black returned to his home, where he resided until his death, which resulted in 1880 from the kick of a horse. By his kind disposition, sterling uprightness and Christian charity he won many lasting friends, and enjoyed an enviable popularity. He was an active member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he was an elder, and an enthusiastic Sunday school worker, being an instructor in the Sunday-school at the time of his death. In political views he was a Republican, though conservative.

To Mr. and Mrs. Black were born three sons, namely: Brice, born March 25, 1861 (married June 11, 1892, to Lizzie Reller, of this county); John Miller, born June 8, 1867 (married September 13, 1892, to Lizzie Dille, of Washington county), and Boyd E., born March 18, 1871. Since her husband's death, Mrs. Black and her two sons, Brice and Boyd E., have managed to good advantage the farm and other property. The place on which they reside, known as the "Timothy Lindley" farm, has been their home since 1866. John M. Black works at the carpenter's trade, which was also followed by his father.

JOHN F. BUCHANAN is a worthy representative of one of the leading pioneer families of Buffalo township. His ancestors were of Irish birth, and his grandfather, John Buchanan, was married in Ireland to a Miss Foster, a native of the same country. The young couple remained in their native land several years, and then, in company with several others, embarked for America in a small sailing vessel. They had a long and tedious voyage of sixteen weeks, and finally landing in New York, remained a short time in eastern Pennsylvania, afterward moving to Washington county, same State. They made a permanent settlement as farmers in Chartiers township, and died there, leaving a family of children. Mr. Buchanan was an active member of the Seceder Church in Buffalo township for many years. He was a member of the Democratic party. He and his wife were buried in the cemetery at North Buffalo.

Thomas Buchanan (father of subject) was born and reared in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., there receiving his early education. He was united in marriage with Sarah, daughter of James Simley, of Cross Creek township, this county, who bore him the following children: James S., John F., Alexander and Samuel. Mr. Buchanan was a farmer, and passed his early married life in Peters township, this county, afterward purchasing a farm in Buffalo township, where he remained some years, finally settling in Cross Creek township. In early life he evinced an unusual strength of character, and ever exerted a beneficial influence upon the moral and religious sentiment of the community. Mr. Buchanan was also a warm friend of education, and served on the school board many years. He died July 16, 1869, and was followed by his wife in June, 1875.

John F. Buchanan was born October 2, 1829, and passed his earlier years at home. He then learned the trade of a miller, which he has since followed, for a number of years operating a mill in Cross Creek township, and now owning one in Taylorstown, same county. He is known in the community as a man who never loses an opportunity of doing a good deed, and never allows it to be known. Mr. Buchanan has never married. In political life he is a Democrat.

WILSON LINVILLE is a native of Washington county, Penn., born March 12, 1816, on his father's farm in Donegal township. He is a son of George Linville, whose grandfather, Peter Linville, was a pioneer farmer of Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., and there reared a family of children, one of whom was Jeremiah Linville, grandfather of the subject of this sketch; three other sons—Peter, Aaron and Lewis—moved to Kentucky, where they lived and died.

Jeremiah Linville was born in 1790, in Mt. Pleasant township, and on attaining a mature age enlisted in the army during the war of 1812. In the Ohio campaign he chanced to see Aaron Linville, one of his three brothers who had gone to Kentucky many years before, and was then a member of a Kentucky regiment. But they were on a rapid march, which was immediately followed by an engagement, so the brothers had no chance to speak—a formal salute as their eyes met in startled recognition, and again they parted. In 1811 Jeremiah Linville was united in marriage with Elizabeth Riley, who was born in 1795, near Winchester, Va., and afterward came with her parents to Washington county, Penn. To Mr. and Mrs. Linville children were born as follows: Lavina (deceased), Maria (deceased), George W., Lucretia (Mrs. Samuel Hanen, of Madsville, W. Va.), Harriet, Drusilla, Cyrena (the latter three being deceased), Caroline (widow of Henry Hilloe, of Wetzel county, W. Va.) and Amanda (Mrs. Franklin Fisher, of Claysville, Penn.). Mr. Linville lived near Atchison, Donegal township, the greater part of his life, but in later years moved to West Middletown, same county, and lived in retirement with his wife until they were both laid to rest, after a life of many and useful years.

George W. Linville, father of our subject, was born August 10, 1816, in Donegal township, and secured his education in the common schools of the day. In 1836 he was united in marriage with Mary Rodgers, who was born January 22, 1819, a daughter of Francis Rodgers, and she bore him children as follows: Alfred (deceased), George, Elizabeth, Mary Jane (deceased), Francis, Wilson, Jeremiah, John and Calvin Terry. The mother of these children died in 1865, and in 1867 Mr. Linville was married to Lydia Lucas, who was born September 29, 1838, a daughter of Benjamin Lucas, of Donegal township, Washington county, and they had two sons: Roley and Newton, both of whom are living at home. Mr. Linville has always been a farmer. In politics he is a Republican, and he and his wife are members of the Dutch Fork Disciple Church.

Wilson Linville, son of George and Mary (Rodgers) Linville, was brought when a young child to Independence township, this county, with his parents, receiving his education at the common schools. On October 16, 1884, he was married to Ella Condit, who was born June 9, 1863, a daughter of Cephas Condit, of Amwell township, and to this union were born two children: Florence May and Harry Wilson. After his marriage Mr. Linville located on the old "Bane farm," a valuable tract of land, located one mile southwest of Atchison, which is now owned by himself and his brother Frank. They are extensive wool growers. Politically Wilson Linville is a Republican, and has frequently filled offices of trust in his township, the duties of which he has performed with much credit. In religious connection he is an officer in and prominent member of the Disciple Church.

Francis Linville, a brother of Wilson, with whom he is engaged in business, followed the carpenter's trade in early life, and afterward formed the above spoken of partnership with his brother. In politics he also is a Republican. The Linville Bros. are recognized as honest and upright citizens, and enjoy the reputation of being thoroughly capable business men. The Linville brothers—Wilson, Francis and Calvin Terry—located on the old farm in Donegal township in October, 1871.

GEORGE W. COLFFEY. That Scotland has furnished the United States with many of her best and most loyal citizens has never been disputed, and in this respect no section has been more favored than Washington county. Prominent among such is the Colffeey family, of whom the subject of this memoir is a worthy member.

He is a son of George R. Colffeey, who was born in 1801, in Ayrshire, Scotland, where he learned the trade of wheelwright, which he followed in his native land. In 1836 he emigrated to America, landing in New York on the Fourth of July, our great national holiday. From New York he proceeded westward, and landing in Washington county took up his residence near the borough of that name, at what was then known as "Rankin," but is at the present day called "West End." After a brief sojourn here, he moved to Buffalo township, same county, where he put up a dwelling and workshop on the then famous National pike, and where he continued to industriously work at his trade. Saving his earnings, he was at last enabled to purchase a tract of land containing seventy-two acres, where he resided until four years prior to his death, when he moved into the borough of Washington. Before leaving Scotland Mr. Colffeey had married Agnes, daughter of Alexander Dickey, and her he brought with him to this country, together with the following named children: Alexander (who died September 13, 1892), Margaret (deceased) and Ann (now in Washington county, Penn.). The children born to them on this side the Atlantic were: Jane, William (deceased April 4, 1875), George W. and Agnes (who died October 1, 1888). On June 30, 1886, the father passed from earth, the mother having preceded him to the silent tomb some ten years before.

George W. Coffey was born September 7, 1841, at his parents' first home in Buffalo township, which, as above stated, stood by the National pike, and he received a good common school education. On November 16, 1865, he was married to Narcissa A., daughter of William McCoy, and the young couple afterward, for twelve years, made their home in West Virginia, where Mr. Coffey followed with success the business of contractor. In 1879 they returned to this county and took up their residence on the old Coffey homestead, where they now reside. The following named children have been born to them: George R., Martha R., Earnest Lester, Grace, Bessie, Clark and Chester, all yet under the parental roof. In 1890 Mr. Coffey erected his present handsome and commodious residence, on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, at the station known as "Coffey's," and the building and grounds are considered to be among the finest in the county, his farm covering 138 acres of the most fertile land. Here, in addition to general farming, he pays considerable attention to the breeding of blooded stock, including Poland-China hogs, an Oxford-Down sheep. Politically, he is a Democrat, and has filled numerous township offices with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of his constituents. He affiliates with the United Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM McCONNELL has been a successful farmer of Cecil township, and, being retired from active business, is now living in Hickory. He is a son of James McConnell, who was born in Cecil township. James McConnell was married to Sarah Phillips, who was born here in 1800, and passed their lives farming in the township. In politics he was originally a Whig, afterward becoming a Republican. He and his wife were members of the U. P. Church at Robinson's Run, in which he was a ruling elder. He died about 1872, having been preceded by his wife several years.

James and Sarah McConnell were the parents of the following children: Mary (Mrs. Hugh McDowell, of Peters township), Martha (widow of Samuel Vaneman, of North Strabane township, who died in 1891), John (living on the old homestead in Cecil township), William (subject of this sketch), James (residing in Peters township, a widower), Sarah (wife of Samuel McPeak, of Canonsburg), Jane (living on the old home farm).

Elizabeth (wife of Mark Kelso, of North Strabane township) and David (living in Cecil township).

William McConnell was born March 29, 1831, on the farm in Cecil township, Washington county, and received his education in the subscription schools. He chose a life companion in the person of Rachel P. May, a native of Cecil township, and daughter of Alexander and Elizabeth (Berry) May, January 8, 1857. Alexander May was born in Cecil township, and his wife was a native of Mt. Pleasant township, this county. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. May settled in Cecil township. They were members of the Associate Church until the union, and in politics he was active in the Republican party. Mr. May died at Venice, this county, in 1872, being followed by his wife in 1884. William and Rachel (May) McConnell passed the first years of married life on a farm in Peters township, this county, but in 1862 he bought and moved upon a farm in Cecil township, remaining there until 1882. He then sold the place, and buying eight acres in Hickory, has since led a retired life in that village. His wife died in 1887, leaving one daughter, Sarah Elizabeth, wife of John H. McCalmont, of Mt. Pleasant township.

JS. VANCE. The Vance family were among the earliest pioneers of Washington county, and as nearly as can be ascertained are perhaps the oldest settlers of Smith township.

The first ancestor of these prominent citizens, of whom we have an accurate history, was one Maj. William Vance, born in 1718 in Scotland, and came to Virginia in early life, afterward moving to Washington county, Penn., where he died April 18, 1788. His son Joseph was born, about 1750, near Winchester, Va., where he was married, and coming to Washington county, Penn., about 1773, located about three miles southwest of Burgetts town, in Smith township, on a large tract of land. This land was then an unbroken wilderness, or, to quote a pioneer phrase, "there was not a stick amiss," but it has since been divided into nine of the finest farms in Washington county. As soon as a rude shelter had been erected for the family, Joseph Vance, in company with a few of his widely parted neighbors, began the erection of what was known as "Vance's Fort." This was intended to protect the settlers from the onslaughts of the Indians, who were yet numerous in the Territory, and bitterly resented the encroachment of the pale faces upon their hunting grounds. The fort was situated but a short distance from the cabin of Joseph Vance, and stood for many years, the only signs of its existence now visible being a piece of brick colored ground and an old stone chimney. At the gates of Fort Vance, under a white oak tree, on October 14, 1778, the Rev. James Powers preached the first sermon known to have been heard west of the Alleghany mountains. On this wild tract Joseph Vance and his wife passed their lives, with the exception of occasional visits to his birthplace, and as the immigration increased, property rose in value. The vast tract of land, once seemingly worthless, became very valuable and the pioneers reaped the deserved reward of early years of toil, privation and danger. The first wife of Joseph Vance died many years ago, leaving him six children, viz.: William, John, Joseph, Elizabeth, Jeannette and Mary. Of this family, Elizabeth married William Wylie, and settled in Harrison county, Ohio; Jeannette married James Stephenson, and settled in Smith township, Washington Co., Penn.; Mary married Robert Lee, and settled in Belmont county, Ohio; one son, Joseph, returned with his father on a visit to Virginia, then went west, and his fate was never known. For his second wife Mr. Vance was married to a native of Winchester, Va., who died soon after their marriage, and he made a third choice in the person of Mary Moore, a native of Winchester, Va., who bore him two daughters: Anna Mary (wife of William Brady, Ohio county, W. Va.), and Hannah (married to Edward Morgan, Ohio county, W. Va.). The father died May 6, 1832, and in 1852 his faithful wife was laid beside him.

William Vance, eldest son of Joseph, was born November 30, 1775, on the old "Fort Vance farm" in Smith township, where his boyhood was passed in the usual duties of pioneer life, a large portion of them falling to him as the eldest son. On December 24, 1799, he was married to Rachel Patterson, who was born June 3, 1781, daughter of William Patterson, of Cross Creek township, this county. To the union of William and Rachel Vance children were born, of whom the following is a brief record: Cynthia, born March 8, 1801, married William Van Ostran (they moved to Wayne county, Ohio, where she died in 1884); Joseph, born September 18, 1802, was a farmer in Smith township, and died in 1864; James, born July 23, 1804, followed agriculture in Jefferson township, this county, and died in 1881; William P., born September 4, 1806, lived on a farm in this county for some time, thence moving to Hardin county, Ky., and is now a retired farmer of Caldwell county, Mo.; Allison, born December 14, 1808, died in Washington county on the home farm; Elizabeth, born February 17, 1811, is now living in Burgettstown, Penn., the widow of David S. Walker; Ann, born November 8, 1812, was united in marriage with Norris Walker (she died, leaving a large family of children); David, born April 14, 1815, died in infancy; and Rachel, born December 28, 1816, was married to Josiah N. Scott, and is now deceased. On January 9, 1817, the mother of these children passed from earth, and on June 12, 1818, Mr. Vance was married to her sister, Hannah Patterson, who was born in 1786. Five children were born to this union, namely: Thomas P. (deceased farmer of Cross Creek township), born July 15, 1819; Mary (unmarried, living in Rome, Ga.), born June 1, 1821; Caroline (deceased wife of R. S. Caldwell, Hopewell township, this county), born December 30, 1824; John S., born June 7, 1827; and Jane (wife of J. S. Young, of Ohio, died in Rome, Ga., where they resided), born September 7, 1830. During his earlier life the father resided on the home farm in Smith township, in company with his brother John, whose interest he afterward purchased. In 1816 William Vance was elected a representative of Washington county in the State Legislature. He was an enthusiastic member of the Whig party, was a counselor and adviser among his friends, and favored the tariff bill from its infancy. After his term of office had expired, Hon. William Vance returned to his farm, having made a signal success in the performance of his duties. He was a liberal contributor toward and consistent attendant of the Presbyterian Church with which his wife was connected. He died April 18, 1856, and in 1878 his widow followed him "across the dark river." Both are buried in the Cross Creek cemetery.

John S. Vance was the second son of William and Hannah Vance. He grew to manhood on the home farm in Smith township, where he was born, and received a common school education. On November 9, 1848, he married Emily H. Jerome, who was born December 19, 1827, a daughter of John Jerome, of West Liberty, Ohio Co., W. Va., but a native of Maryland, whose widow (nee Harriet Miller) moved to Cross Creek village, Washington Co., Penn., after his death. Mrs. Vance has but one brother, James Jerome, living in Minerva, Stark Co., Ohio. John S. and Emily H. Vance have had the following children: Caroline J. (Mrs. Robert Campbell, of Sheridan, Penn.), William O. (living at home), Charles J. (residing in Oakdale Station, Allegheny Co., Penn.), Thomas W. (county recorder of Jefferson county, Ohio), Joseph G. (a farmer of Cross Creek township, this county), Edwin L. (deceased in youth), John F. (a resident of Bridgeville, Penn., in the office of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company), Jessie B. (deceased in childhood), Frank B., Viola V. and Mary G. (the latter three living at home).

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Vance lived on the home farm in Smith township until 1858, when they settled on their present home, a portion of the original Vance tract, upon which Mr. Vance has erected new and commodious buildings. He follows farming and stock raising, giving considerable attention to the breeds of fine grade sheep, and like all who have borne the name, is a most successful business man. He was a Whig, now voting the Republican ticket, but is not an active politician, as he has no ambition for office. He attends the Presbyterian Church of Cross Creek. His house, all the improvements on which were made by himself, is situated two miles southwest of Burgettstown. Mr. Vance is a man of large stature, and is in the enjoyment of good health.

WILLIAM M. REA is a descendant of one of the oldest families of Cross Creek township, whose ancestors have long been identified with the history of northwestern Washington county. The first member of the family to locate in Washington county was William Rea, of whom it is only known that his life was passed among the early settlers of Cross Creek township, this county, where his children were born and reared.

William Rea was born on the home farm in Cross Creek township, and in early manhood was married to a Miss Campbell, a member of a pioneer family. Their children were John C., William (who became blind at the age of seventeen years, but lived to old age, spending most of his time with a brother Charles), Joseph V. (a farmer of Mt. Pleasant township), Jane (deceased wife of Cyrus Wells), Elizabeth (married to William T. Kerr, and died in Canonsburg, this county), Samuel (deceased in youth) and Charles C. (a farmer of Cross Creek township). The father of these children was a successful farmer, and in politics first an Old-line Whig, then a Republican. He died in 1865, being followed a few years later by his widow.

John C. Rea was born March 13, 1813, on the home farm in Cross Creek township, and received a subscription school education. In 1836 he was married to Mary A. Lyle, who was born in 1816, daughter of James and Mary (Campbell) Lyle. Her father was a descendant of the prominent pioneer family of that name who resided in Cross Creek and Smith townships, this county. To the union of John C. and Mary A. (Lyle) Rea, the following children were born: James L. (deceased), William M. (of whom a sketch follows), Samuel J. (of Harrison county, Ohio), Elizabeth J. (deceased wife of D. M. Pry), Mary E. (deceased wife of John W. Pry), Aaron L. (was a soldier in the war of the Rebellion and died from the effects of disease contracted while in the service), Joseph V. (deceased), Alice M. (wife of Prof. Ewing S. McWreath, of Hopewell township, this county), Eliza A. (Mrs. J. D. Cook, of Cross Creek township) and Elvira (deceased in infancy). The parents always resided on the old homestead in Cross Creek township, this county, where the father followed agricultural pursuits. In politics he was, like his father, a Whig and Republican, and in religious faith an earnest member of the Presbyterian Church. He died several years ago, and his widow is now living a retired life in West Middletown, Penn.

William M. Rea was born March 5, 1839, in Cross Creek township, this county, passing his boyhood on the home farm. He received a common school education, and then began a course at Jefferson College, Canonsburg, which was interrupted by the opening of the Civil war. On August 21, 1862, he enlisted at Cross Creek village in Company K, One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment, P. V. I. His first duty was the guarding of the railroad lines between Baltimore and Harrisburg, and he afterward took part in the other engagements in which his regiment participated. On May 8, 1864, at Todd's Tavern, in the battle of the Wilderness, he was wounded by a musket ball, which passed through the right ankle joint of his right limb. Amputation being found necessary, he was placed in Lincoln Hospital, and being discharged about the close of the war returned to Washington county in May, 1865. Some time after his return home, Mr. Rea entered mercantile business at Pittsburgh, thence moved to Burgettstown, but finally selected farming as his life work, and moved to Cross Creek township. On September 20, 1866, he was married to Martha J. Keys, who was born February 17, 1844, daughter of Joseph Keys, of Smith township. Four daughters were born to this union: Ida M., Josephine E. (both of whom are living in Canonsburg, this county), Anna T. and Martha V. (living at home). On November 23, 1875, the mother passed from earth, and for his second choice Mr. Rea was married to Nannie A., daughter of James McElroy. She was born October 21, 1844, in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., and the children of this marriage are James M., John C. (deceased in youth), Samuel J. and William M. Some time after locating on the farm in Cross Creek township Mr. Rea moved to Mt. Pleasant township, thence to North Strabane township, but finally settled on his present home in Smith township, where he is known as one of the most successful farmers of the neighborhood. He is an ardent worker in the Republican party, and in religious faith he and his family are members of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church.

ARTHUR B. WARD. The Ward family trace their lineage through four generations to one James Ward, an Englishman, who came to America many years ago and settled in Virginia, where he died leaving a large family. Stephen Ward, a son of this James, was born and reared near Martinsburg, Va., where he was married to Hannah Thurston, and they had three children, namely: James, Hannah and Thomas. The father followed farming and stock raising, and in politics affiliated with the Whig party. The family finally moved to Washington county, Penn., locating near Malden, in East Bethlehem township, where the parents died, both members of the M. E. Church.

Thomas Ward, son of Stephen and Hannah, was born February 27, 1811, near Winchester, Va., and attended the schools of his native State. After attaining his majority, he left home and commenced farming in Washington county, Penn., there passing the remainder of his life, with the exception of six years he spent in Fayette county, Penn. When a young man, Thomas Ward was united in marriage with Elizabeth Williams, a daughter of John Williams, who was born October 12, 1784, and was married in Winchester, Va., to Mary Thompson, who was born in March, 1789. Mr. and Mrs. Williams were the parents of the following children, their names and dates of birth being here given: Alfred, March 16, 1806; Susan, April 22, 1808; Daniel, January 9, 1809; Mary Ann, January 11, 1811; Robert, March 9, 1813; Thomas, January 28, 1815; Elizabeth, January 4, 1817; John, April 6, 1820; Catherine, August 17, 1821; Sarah J., January 2, 1823; James Knox, April 17, 1824; Clara E., November 14, 1826; Margaret, January 9, 1830. After his removal to Pennsylvania the father followed teaming from Baltimore on the National pike. In political opinion he was a Whig and Republican, with strong Abolition sympathies, and in religion he was a member of the M. E. Church. To the union of Thomas and Elizabeth (Williams) Ward the following children were born: Mary J. (wife of Thomas Whorly), Melinda (wife of Daniel Linn), John W. (who enlisted in the 18th Regiment, P. V. C.), Stephen (who enlisted in Company I, Second Virginia Infantry), Robert, James Knox and Thomas. Mrs. Ward died in March, 1846, followed by her husband May 18, 1891.

James Knox Ward was born March 31, 1844, in East Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., and remained at home until March, 1865. He then enlisted in Company B, Second Regiment, P. V. C., and served with the army of the Potomac. On May 10, 1866, he was married to Susannah, daughter of William C. Wolfe, who was born in Virginia, and was a son of Isaac C. Wolfe. The latter was also a native of Virginia, and there married Susanna De Haven, who bore him four children, viz.: William C., Joseph, Elizabeth and Rachel A. The father voted with the Democratic party, and in religious faith was a member of the M. E. Church. Mrs. Wolfe died January 19, 1846, and he was laid to rest July 27, 1870.

William C. Wolfe was born July 22, 1820, in Virginia, and in 1820 came with his parents to Washington county, Penn.; he received his education in the subscription schools, and followed agricultural pursuits. On July 1, 1841, he was united in marriage with Melinda J. (Small) Wood, who was born June 2, 1823, in Washington county, where they settled, and he followed teaching and cabinet making. In political opinion he was a Democrat, and in religious connection a member of the M. E. Church. His children were Alfred D., who enlisted in Company I, Second Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and served three years; Susannah (wife of James K. Ward); Joseph, who enlisted in Company D, Seventy-ninth P. V. I.; Ann, wife of Herdman Maxwell Taylor; Henry W.; Sarah N.; Abram and Isaac C. The father was a Democrat in politics.

William C. Wolfe died March 4, 1855, and was followed by his widow April 7, 1874. To the union of James Knox and Susannah (Wolfe) Ward five children have been born, viz.: Arthur B., Thomas H., Elizabeth, William S. and Louis. The family have, with the exception of one year, passed their lives in Washington county. Mr. Ward affiliates with the Republican party in politics, and in religious faith is a member and trustee of the M. E. Church.

Arthur B. Ward was born February 25, 1867, in West Brownsville, Penn., receiving his education at the Southwestern State Normal School, California, Penn. At the age of fifteen he entered the store of Robert Lynch, with whom he remained as clerk for about two years, then served as manager until 1888, afterward purchasing the business, and conducting it for several years. In April, 1891, he removed to the Hotel Arlington Building, having increased his old stock of goods, and added a large line of gents' furnishings. On August 27, 1891, he was united in marriage with Luella, daughter of J. P. McCain, a resident of California, Penn. Mr. Ward is actively identified with the Republican party, and is a member of the M. E. Church.

JOHAN M. WATSON, a prominent farmer of North Strabane township, was born January 31, 1833, in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn. His father, David Watson, was also a native of Chartiers township, born in 1791, and passed his early life on the home farm. He received a good common-school education, and in early manhood was married to a Miss Craighead, who bore him children as follows: Martha (deceased), Amelia (deceased), Nancy (Mrs. Alexander Henderson), Rachel (wife of William Ross), Belle (deceased wife of John Chambers) and George. For his second wife Mr. Watson was united in marriage with Margaret Morrison, also born in Chartiers township, this county, a daughter of James Morrison, and the children born to this marriage were John M., Mary (Mrs. Peter Martin), and George N. (who died in Washington county, aged fifty three years). David Watson died at the age of fifty two, Mrs. David Watson when aged eighty-four years. Mr. Watson had charge of the Washington turnpike for many years, and managed its affairs with marked success. He was a staunch member and active partisan of the Whig party, and was one of the most ardent supporters of the U. P. Church at Cross Roads, Chartiers township.

John M. Watson passed his early years on the home farm in Chartiers township, and after the death of his father began life at a very early age. On August 18, 1862, he enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and served until the close of the war; he was mustered out June 5, 1865, near Alexandria, W. Va. On November 15, 1866, he was married to Sarah J., daughter of Andrew Borland, and one daughter, Ida, has been born to their union. Mr. Watson is a successful business man, and owns a large and productive farm in North Strabane township. He is a staunch Republican, and is always active in the interests of his party. He and his family are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Mt. Prospect, and he is a member of the Session.

THOMAS C. SHIPLEY. Among the progressive citizens of Hanover township is the above mentioned gentleman, a son of Benjamin Shipley, who was a son of John Shipley.

John Shipley was born about twelve miles from Baltimore, Md., and passed his boyhood in his native State, there receiving his early education. At the age of twenty-one years he came to Washington county, Penn., and purchased a wild tract of land in Smith township. He added to this from time to time until he had 135 acres, where a small log cabin was erected, which Miss Lydia Day consented to share. To this marriage the following children were born: Benjamin, George, John, William, Nancy, Talbert T., Richard, Samuel, Lavina, Catherine, Rachel and Henry. Although the Indians were then very numerous, those in their vicinity were usually of a peaceable disposition. John Shipley was a soldier in the war of 1812, and while he was defending his home, the brave wife followed the plow in his stead. He was an active worker in the Whig party, and in religious faith was a member of the M. E. Church.

Benjamin Shipley was reared on the home farm, and educated in the rude subscription schools. In 1824 he was married to Nancy Cole, who was born in 1802, a daughter of Thomas Cole. The children of Benjamin and Nancy Shipley were as follows: Rachel (wife of James White), John and Nancy (were scalded to death when small), Thomas C. (our subject), Lydia (Mrs. John Frederick, of Burgettstown), Mary (widow of John Vance), Richard (a farmer, deceased in 1883), Talbot (a farmer, died in 1890), Catherine (deceased, unmarried) and Dallas (deceased in infancy). Mr and Mrs. Shipley passed their married life in Smith township, this county. He was a successful agriculturist, and in politics was first a Whig, then a Republican. He died in 1876, and Mrs. Shipley survived him till 1884. Both were members of the M. E. Church, and are buried in the Presbyterian cemetery at Burgettstown.

Thomas C. Shipley was born February 28, 1833, on the home farm in Smith township, this county. On October 24, 1861, he was married to Eleanor K. Proudfit, who was born August 29, 1833, a daughter of John and Eliza (Lyle) Proudfit. The children of T. C. and Eleanor Shipley are: Elizabeth Nancy (Mrs. David Riddle, of Wellsville, Ohio), Isa Mary (wife of Frank Hill, of Wellsville, Ohio), John P. (married December 28, 1891, Mary G. E. Sims, and to this union Thomas Earl Shipley was born), Willie D. (deceased at the age of sixteen years) and Ella Nora (living at home). After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Shipley located for some time on the farm in Smith township, and in 1863 settled in Hanover township, on the place where they are now residing, but which then contained all old buildings. Three years later he returned to Smith township, and in 1883 came back to the same farm and erected new buildings, including a residence and barn. Since that time he has resided in Hanover township, following general farming, stock raising, and the dairy business. Both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Florence.

JAMES W. BIGGER. Of the prominent, prosperous and respected citizens of Robinson township, none are better or more favorably known than the gentleman whose name opens this brief sketch. The sons of Erin are and ever have been among the leaders of all enterprises in which bravery, energy and enthusiasm are the requisite ingredients.

About the middle of the last century, Thomas Bigger, a native of County Antrim, Ireland, was there married to Elizabeth Moore, who was born in the same county. The young couple decided that their wedding trip should be an ocean voyage, and accordingly they embarked for the New World not many days after their marriage. After landing in America they came to Pennsylvania, first locating on a piece of land near Hickory, this county, which belonged to George Washington but was then in court. His rights, however, were soon established, after which Mr. and Mrs. Bigger settled on a farm in Robinson township, which is yet in the family name, being now the property of Matthew Bigger. The Indians had not then entirely left the old hunting grounds, and often compelled the adventurous pioneer to flee for life to Fort McDonald; but as new settlers entered, and the forests were cleared away, the Redmen roved farther west, finally leaving the pale faces in undisturbed possession of their homes. Eleven children were born to Thomas and Elizabeth (Moore) Bigger, as follows: Matthew, Jane, John, James, Thomas, Ann, James, Samuel, Martha, Andrew and Elizabeth.

Samuel Bigger was born on the old Bigger homestead in Robinson township, this county, which is now occupied by his son Matthew. Samuel passed his youth on the old place, being employed in the usual manner of a farmer boy, and in early manhood married a Miss Wills, a native of Ireland, who bore him a large family of children, of whom are yet living: Thomas, Elizabeth, James W., Matthew, Mary J., Ann, Jennette, Martha, Samuel and Jane (twins); John died when he was about two years old. The father was a Presbyterian, then a Seceder, and afterward a member of the U. P. Church, in which he was an elder. In politics he was first a Democrat, then a Whig, finally a Republican.

James W. Bigger, the second son of Samuel Bigger, first saw the light of day November 30, 1828. He remained on the old homestead during his boyhood and early youth, receiving his education in the common schools of the period, which, to quote the gentleman's own language, were: "According to my judgment better adapted to give the pupil a more thorough knowledge of the branches taught than the schools of the present day." On January 1, 1857, Mr. Bigger was united in marriage with Miss Sarah H., daughter of the late Richard Donaldson, a resident of Hanover township. Children came to brighten their pleasant home as follows: Jennie W., Esther M., Lizzie, Isaac, Ida and S. W. (twins), Richard, W. M. and J. M. Of these, Lizzie is deceased, while the other children are scattered, some living near their parents, others gone far from the home nest. The mother died June 5, 1891. Mr. Bigger has continued to reside on the farm where he had settled immediately after his marriage. He is a representative citizen, and in politics has ever been a firm advocate of the principles embodied in the platform of the Republican party. In religious faith he has for many years been a member and liberal supporter of the Robinson United Presbyterian Church.

W W. JACKSON, a rising young agriculturist of Cross Creek township, is a representative of a well known family. His grandfather, Andrew Jackson, was born in 1785 in Cecil county, Md., and when ten years of age came with his parents to Washington county, Penn. They settled on King's creek, in Hanover township, where Andrew was reared to manhood.

Andrew Jackson was united in marriage in 1808 with Elizabeth Cool, of Hanover township, who was born June 27, 1782, and children were born as follows: Mary, born April 25, 1809; W. C., born November 12, 1810; Isaac, born January 1, 1812; Elizabeth, born October 2, 1816; Eli, born October 27, 1818; Elsie, born October 23, 1820; John, born September 9, 1822; James, born April 20, 1825; and Sarah, born May 24, 1827. Of these the only ones yet living are James and Elsie. The father was a soldier in the war of 1812.

W. C. Jackson, the second son of Andrew and Elizabeth Jackson, was born on King's creek, Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn. His youth was passed on the home farm and he attended the Florence Academy for several years. He then began the study of theology under the tutelage of Rev. William Wallace, of Wheeling, W. Va., afterward taking a course at the Allegheny Theological Seminary, graduating in 1846. In 1842 he selected as his life companion Miss Martha H. Lawton, who was born May 1, 1825, daughter of Job T. Lawton, a native of Rhode Island, who came to this county with his parents in 1813. After graduating, Mr. Jackson preached as a supply at different U. P. Churches for several years, but never took charge of a congregation, as his wife could not leave her aged parents. Two children were born to the union of W. C. and Martha H. (Lawton) Jackson, namely: W. W., born March 19, 1844; and Mary E., born October 22, 1850, the latter of whom was married to William Cole, a prominent hotel landlord of Burgetts town, Penn. In politics Mr. Jackson was a staunch Democrat. He died August 20, 1888.

W. W. Jackson (son of W. C., and grandson of Andrew) was born at Wheeling, W. Va., and passed most of his early life in Cross Creek township, Washington county. He attended the Cross Creek Academy several terms, and then entered Washington and Jefferson College, graduating at the early age of nineteen years. He afterward returned to the farm and assisted his father, who was unable to do much manual work, having been crippled by a falling tree in 1863. On September 30, 1872, W. W. Jackson was united in marriage with Miss Mary Boyles, of St. Clairsville, Ohio, daughter of Jacob Boyles. The farm contains 105 acres of land. In politics Mr. Jackson is a Democrat, and in religious faith a member of the Presbyterian Church, and of the Session at Cross Creek.

To William and Mary E. (Jackson) Cole was born William A. Cole, November 22, 1868. He married Alice R. Crawford, of Westmoreland county, Penn., in 1889, and to this union the following named children were born: Willa Marie, in 1890; Alfred Orlando, who died when one year old, and Alice Margie, born in September, 1892. William A. Cole resides at Pittsburgh, where he is in the real estate business.

ALLEXANDER S. BERRYHILL, a citizen of Burgettstown who has risen unaided from the lowest round of the ladder to a prominent position in business and social life, was born August 15, 1808, in West Liberty, W. Va. He is a son of Alexander, and grandson of William Berryhill.

William Berryhill was of Scotch descent and served as captain under Washington throughout the Revolution. After the war he settled near Greencastle, Penn., and followed the blacksmith's trade some years, afterward purchasing the farm where his life was passed. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Ruth Steele, who was born in Ireland, coming with her parents to America when but one year of age. The children born to William and Ruth (Steele) Berryhill were as follows: Alexander S., Ruth (Mrs. Noble), William, Samuel, Elias and Isabella (wife of Rev. Blackburn). Mr. Berryhill was a Federalist in politics, taking an active interest in the affairs of the county. He and his family were members of the Presbyterian Church.

Alexander Berryhill, father of Alexander S., was born in Lancaster county, Penn., and was educated in the schools of the neighborhood. In early life he came to Uniontown, Penn., where he was married to Mary, daughter of Moses Linn. After his marriage he moved to West Virginia, and conducted a tanyard for some time, then opened a general store at West Liberty, W. Va. He finally sold out and became one of the pioneer boatmen of that vicinity, making trips from West Liberty, W. Va., to Nashville, Tenn. He exchanged the Northern produce for cotton, sugar and other articles raised in the Southern States. While returning from one trip, he met the first steamboat that was ever on the Ohio river, and challenged the crew for a race to Short Creek. They accepted, and he won the race. In 1830 he came to Cross Creek township, this county, where he made a permanent home. In politics he was formerly a Whig, afterward uniting with the Democratic party. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church. They were the parents of the following children: William, Moses L., Alexander S., Mary E. (wife of William McKinley), James, John, Samuel and Martha.

Alexander S. Berryhill (the subject of this biography) received a common-school education in the home district, and on April 15, 1840, was united in matrimony with Catherine, daughter of John Shipley. The young people immediately settled in Burgettstown, Penn., where they remained nine years, then went to Burlington, Iowa, being there one year, thence moved to Lancaster, Wis. They remained three years in the latter place, when the father of Mr. Berryhill died, and he returned home. He settled in Cross Creek, where he remained for some years. He then spent some time in Florence and at Cumberland, W. Va., and removed from Cumberland to Burgettstown at the time the railroad was being constructed. The railroad passed the town about half a mile north-east, and the station was called Cardville, by which it was known until the towns were incorporated as one, under the name of Burgettstown, in 1881. Mr. Berryhill built the first house in Cardville, and started a grocery store, continuing in this business until 1887, when he retired from active business and has since been leading a retired life. Mr. and Mrs. Berryhill have had the following children: Martha (wife of James Jackson), Mary L. (Mrs. Simpson), Flora, Belle (formerly Mrs. Richard Heinrich, now wife of James P. Kelso, of the Burgettstown National Bank), Richana (wife W. E. Fisher, of Columbus, Ohio) and Ella. In religious faith he and his family are active members of the Presbyterian Church. In politics he is a Democrat, having cast his first vote for Jackson and his last for Grover Cleveland. In addition to the family of Alexander S. Berryhill above mentioned: Thomas M. Berryhill, son of William, Jr., and nephew of Alexander S., is the only surviving member of the Berryhill family. He resides on a farm near Hickory, Pennsylvania.

ELIAS D. OWEN. Among those who have made farming in Morris township a thorough success, is Elias D. Owen. He is a son of Aaron Owen, and a grandson of John Owen, whose father emigrated from Wales in the early part of the eighteenth century, and located in New Jersey, where he married, and reared a family of children, of whom John Owen is the only one recorded. John Owen married a Miss Pool in New Jersey, who bore him five children, all boys, as follows: Benjamin, Daniel, John, Aaron and Gudiah. The parents died in New Jersey, as also did their son John. Daniel emigrated to Ohio, thence to Michigan, where he died. Aaron, Benjamin and Gudiah all emigrated to Washington county, Penn. Benjamin came first, and located in Morris township, followed by Gudiah.

Aaron Owen, father of our subject, came next, locating in Morris township about 1822. He was born in New Jersey about 1796, and there married Mary D. Day. He was a weaver by trade, which occupation he followed for some time after coming to Washington county. Three children were born to them here—Phoebe, Lavina and Benjamin, all of whom are living. Phoebe, widow of Edmund McVay, lives in Greene county, Penn. Lavina, wife of John Young, lives in the same county. Benjamin married Julia Day, and lives near Jacksonville, Greene Co., Penn.; he is an elder of the Jacksonville C. P. Church. The father died in 1854, and the mother in 1883. Both were Cumberland Presbyterians. Elias D. Owen, the eldest child of Aaron and Mary Owen, was born in New Jersey, July 24, 1819, and came to Washington county in 1822 with his parents at the age of eighteen years; he joined the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at West Union and has been a Sabbath-school teacher ever since. In 1842 he married Sarah Auld, born June 17, 1822, whose ancestors came from Ireland about the middle of the eighteenth century, locating in New Jersey, whence they moved to Washington county soon after 1800. After his marriage Mr. Owen moved to what was then known as the "Jolly Farm," where he has since resided.

James E. Ray, half brother of Aaron Owen, and uncle of Elias Owen, was born in the year 1807, and married Margaret Lenord. Three children blessed their union. The eldest, I. M. Ray, elected congressman in 1888, is a prominent lawyer in Waynesburgh, Greene Co., Penn.; the second, J. L. Ray, a resident of Morris township, Greene Co., died in 1893, aged thirty-six years. His daughter Jane, who married John Powers, died some years ago.

To the union of Elias D. Owen and Sarah Auld there were born two children: Caroline, the eldest, was born in 1843, and married Milton Robertson, whose death occurred April 2, 1875; Mrs. Robertson and children have since lived with her parents. Mary Ann, born 1853, married B. F. Reeves, and is the mother of six children. Mr. Owen, although well along in years, is still able to do a day's work on the farm, to which he gives his personal attention. He is possessed of a remarkably strong constitution, having sustained on three different occasions injuries that would ordinarily have resulted in death. In politics Mr. Owen was a Democrat prior to 1884, but his views on the tariff question being at variance with those advocated in the platform of that year, he voted for Blaine, and has since been an active supporter of the principles of the Republican party. On his farm Mr. Owen gives considerable attention to sheep raising, in which he has been remarkably successful, his flocks never having, in his fifty years' experience, been affected with an epidemic so common in that section. Mr. Owen has made life a success in many ways, not excepting financially. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, at West Union, as is also his wife. Mr. Owen's grandfather, on his mother's side, was Samuel Day, who was born in New Jersey, and there married Sophia Hayden, who bore him twenty-one children, eighteen of whom lived to maturity and raised families. In 1831 the family of Samuel Day had a reunion, there being present seventy-five representatives. He joined the Presbyterian Church early in life; but when the Cumberland Presbyterians organized here in 1831, he joined the congregation of that church at Old Concord, becoming an active member thereof and serving as elder for several years. He then moved to Athens, Ohio, with the intention of having a Cumberland Presbyterian Church organized there, which he soon succeeded in accomplishing. He died some time afterward in the triumph of a living faith.

JAMES MARTIN is one of the progressive and therefore successful farmers of South Strabane township, and is a representative of an old pioneer family of the county. They were originally natives of York county, Penn., and toward the close of the eighteenth century, Peter Martin moved with his wife and family to Washington county, settling on the farm which is now occupied by his descendants. He died at the age of eighty years, having reared a family of seven children.

James Martin, a son of this early settler, was born in 1792, in York county, Penn., coming with his parents to this county when a boy. In 1821 he was married to Mary White, who bore him children as follows: Peter B., born February 4, 1822; Samuel, born January 21, 1824; James, born December 12, 1826; John White (a merchant of Causburg, this county), born January 11, 1828; Matthew, born December 7, 1829; Mary Jane (deceased), born September 21, 1832; Ebenezer Henderson (drowned in the Potomac river), born June 21, 1834; Ann Elizabeth (deceased), born November 2, 1837; Elizabeth Margaret, born October 10, 1839; William Henry, born September 4, 1842, and Thomas Jefferson, born August 28, 1847. Mr. Martin continued to improve his farm, in connection with managing a sawmill, during his active business life. He was formerly a Whig, afterward a Republican, and held several political offices. In religion he first united with the Seceder Church, then joined the United Presbyterians. He died in 1887, having been preceded by his wife in 1878.

James Martin was reared on the home farm in North Strabane township, this county, and attended the common schools. He was early inducted into the mysteries of agricultural pursuits, and decided to devote his life to farming. He believed that a knowledge of science, especially of that branch which pertains to agriculture, was necessary to secure the highest success as a farmer. He has therefore read and studied much on the subjects connected with his vocation. On November 12, 1868, James Martin was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Samuel Clokey. Samuel Clokey was a son of James Clokey, a native of County Down, Ireland, who was reared and educated in the old country, coming to America at an early date. He settled in Dauphin county, Penn., remaining there until 1812, when he moved to Washington county and purchased the farm now occupied by his son, following farming and stock raising in connection with the distilling business most of his life. In politics he was an active worker in the Whig party, and in religion was a member of the Seceder Church at Peters Creek, and assisted in organizing the Seceder Church at Pigeon Creek. He was the father of two children: Sarah (Mrs. James Herron) and Samuel.

Samuel Clokey was born in Dauphin county, Penn., and came to Washington county at the age of eighteen years. He was married to Rebecca, daughter of Alexander McClure, of South Strabane township, and settled on the home farm, where the following children were born: James, Alexander, Mary J., Elizabeth (Mrs. James Martin), Sarah (wife of John G. Clark), Samuel, Abigail, Rebecca (married to George A. Dougherty) and Caroline. Of this family James, Alexander, Samuel and Abigail are deceased. Mr. Clokey was formerly a Whig, and then a Republican, being a leader both in political and business circles. In church connection he was first a Seceder, after uniting with the United Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek, in which he was a trustee and leading member. His wife died in 1878, and he rests by her side in the cemetery at Pigeon Creek.

James and Elizabeth (Clokey) Martin have had no children. He is a member and liberal supporter of the U. P. Church at Pigeon Creek. In politics he is an active member of the Republican party, though never accepting office.

GEORGE R. DEEMS, a successful farmer of West Pike Run township, is a native of the same, born October 3, 1841, on the old homestead. The father, John Deems, was also a native of the county, and here learned the carpenter and wagon making trades. When a young man he was married to Mary Reynolds, a native of Fayette county, Penn., who bore him nine children, namely: Mary, wife of Lewis Duvall, a farmer of Hopewell township, Washington Co., Penn.; Martha, widow of Nickson Ailes, a resident of California, Penn.; Sarah J., widow of S. W. Rogers, of Beallsville, Penn.; George R., whose name opens this sketch; Margaret E., wife of Robert Elwood, a resident of Beallsville; Cornelia, married to John D. Springle, a boat builder of Brownsville, Penn.; Frank, living in Ottumwa, Iowa; Elizabeth and Jacob R., both deceased. The father died soon after the birth of his youngest child; his widow is now living, at the age of seventy-seven years, with her daughter, Mrs. Rogers, in the village of Beallsville.

George R. Deems was reared in the West Pike run township, where he received a common school education, and when seventeen years old learned the cabinet-maker's trade. In 1861 he enlisted in Company I, Eighth P. V. I., and participated in the Seven Days' Fight, the second battle of Bull Run, Fredericksburg, the Wilderness, and numerous other engagements. He served until the close of the war, then returning to Washington county followed his trade about five years in West Brownsville. On November 25, 1869, he was united in marriage with Emma E. Rogers, who was born December 12, 1846, in Washington county, Penn., a daughter of Samuel and Sarah F. (Crawford) Rogers, natives of Maryland, and the parents of children, as follows: Priscilla, wife of Adah Crouch, a farmer of West Pike Run township; Joseph H., a farmer of Beallsville, Washington county; Sarah E., married to Smith F. Scott; Emma E., wife of George Deems; Mary A., deceased; and four who died in infancy. The father of this family was a public-spirited citizen, and a successful agriculturist. He died in 1890, having been preceded to the grave by his wife in 1882. Both were members of the M. E. Church, and in politics he was a Republican.

After their marriage George R. and Emma E. (Rogers) Deems located on the pleasant farm in West Pike Run township which is now their home. It contains seventy-three acres of valuable, well-cultivated land, to which Mr. Deems devotes the greater portion of his time. He is identified with the Republican party in politics, and is deeply interested in all public matters. Mr. and Mrs. Deems are members of the Beallsville M. E. Church.

JOSEPH HAYBURN, a prominent representative of one of the oldest pioneer families of Donegal township, and an enterprising and progressive citizen of Claysville, is a native of Donegal township, born August 20, 1859. His father, James Hayburn, was also a native of that township, born in May, 1820. Joseph Hayburn, grandfather of Joseph, was born and reared in Ireland, and was there united in marriage with Margaret Laird, a native of County Donegal. The young people immigrated to America, and finally settled in Donegal township, Washington Co.,

Penn. Their children were as follows: Alexander, Mary, John, Robert, Fannie, Ada M. (Mrs. John Griffith), James, Joseph and Elizabeth (Mrs. Isaac Titus). Mr. Hayburn was always a farmer. In religion he was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics he was a staunch Democrat.

James Hayburn, father of Joseph, was reared and educated on the home farm in Donegal township. In 1857 he was married to Margaret, daughter of Alexander Reed, and the following children were born to them: Belle, Joseph, Jennie and Lizzie. Mr. Hayburn was a successful farmer and progressive citizen. Politically he was a leading member of the Democratic party, and in religion was an adherent of the Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Hayburn died January 22, 1884, and was followed by her husband within the next month.

Joseph Hayburn passed his early life in Donegal township, where, June 24, 1886, he was married to Miss Jennie E. Griffith, and they have one daughter, Ethel Bernadeen, born November 27, 1888. Mr. Hayburn lived on the farm and engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1891, when he purchased a livery business of L. D. Lindley, which he now conducts in company with John Knox. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

JAMES SHANNON McCUTCHEEN. No citizen of East Bethlehem township, and for that matter, it may even be said, of the entire county, can boast of a wider circle of friends than this successful agriculturist, such is his well-earned popularity.

Hugh McCutchen, grandfather of our subject, when a young man emigrated from Ireland to America, landing in New York about the year 1786, all he brought with him being the clothes on his back, a stout heart, and strong and willing hands. After leading for a time a somewhat wandering life—working here and there—he finally settled in Fallowfield township, this county, and after some five years, during which time he was employed in various occupations, he invested his entire earnings in a small stock of goods, and embarked in mercantile business. He became very successful, enjoying a wide and profitable trade among the pioneer families. He married a lady whose parents were natives of Scotland, and several children, all now deceased, were born to them; both he and his wife lived to a ripe old age, she preceding him to the grave some few years. Politically he was a Whig, and is remembered as having been an oft-sought local adviser in his party. The following interesting family anecdote is related: When Grandfather McCutchen was about to board the ship that was to carry him across the Atlantic from his native land, he and a brother, who had come to see him off, exchanged watches, each one agreeing to treasure the other's timepiece as a family heirloom to be handed down to posterity. This compact each kept faithfully: yet, although carefully and jealously guarded, the watch that came to America was stolen some years since, after having been "handed down" to the grandson, James S. McCutchen.

Samuel McCutchen, the second son of Hugh and Jane McCutchen, was born, in 1798, in Fallowfield township, this county, where he received a limited education at the subscription schools of the vicinity. In boyhood he learned the trade of a shoemaker, which he successfully followed during the greater part of his life, in connection with farming pursuits. He commenced life poor, for his father's estate, after being divided among many heirs, rendered him but little assistance. By dint of hard work, however, he was enabled to earn and save sufficient to buy a small farm, and being successful in his undertakings, particularly as a financier, and by reason of various speculations, in buying and trading land, turning out profitably, he in course of time accumulated a considerable share of this world's goods. His wife, Melinda Furnier, was a daughter of Henry and Julia (Horine) Furnier, natives of Germany, who came to America shortly after the Revolutionary war, locating in Hagerstown, Md., whence they removed to Washington county, Penn., making a final settlement near Belle Vernon, in Fallowfield township. To Samuel and Melinda McCutchen were born children as follows: Henry Erwin, who died at the age of seventeen years; Sarah Jane, now Mrs. John Stacker, residing in Monongahela City, and James Shannon. The mother died in 1861, the father in 1862, he was a strong supporter of the principles of the Whig party.

James Shannon McCutchen, the subject proper of this memoir, was born January 15, 1828, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., and was two years old when his parents moved to East Bethlehem township, where he was reared on the farm, and educated at the common schools. In his youth he was employed as a farm assistant, receiving for his services from $5 to $10 per month. He has never used tobacco or intoxicants in any form, and as a result he saved his earnings, which he judiciously invested, and to-day is deservedly well circumstanced financially. He is the owner of 127 acres of valuable land situated on the banks of the Monongahela river, within but a short distance of Lock No. 5, and the elegant residence thereon, together with the entire surroundings, gives evidence of superior taste, prudent thrift and easy affluence.

Mr. McCutchen is perhaps the most widely read gentleman in his vicinity, and his library contains some 180 volumes of handsomely bound works by eminent authors. He is not only a man of letters, but also a traveler of no little experience, his journeyings from time to time having been many, which, to a man of observation such as Mr. McCutchen, means a vast amount of additional information and mental pabulum. Among many points of interest which he has visited in the East and in Canada, may be mentioned Washington (D. C.), New York, Boston, Montreal, Toronto, Niagara Falls, etc. Some three years since, along with a party of neighbors, he visited the "far West," during which tour he remained six days in San Francisco, was in Seattle (Wash.), Portland (Ore.), St. Paul (Minn.), Yellowstone Park, Hot Springs (Ark.), etc. Our subject is a faithful Republican, and although not a politician, has been called upon at times to fill offices of trust in his township, where his popularity is unbounded, which incumbencies he has invariably filled with characteristic care and natural ability.

PARK J. HAMILTON, an enterprising citizen of Nottingham township, this county, is a son of James R. Hamilton. The latter was born in 1818, in Peters township, Washington county, and received a classical education. During his earlier years he followed the profession of school teaching, and being solely dependent upon his daily earnings for a livelihood, was obliged to practice strict economy. In 1846 he was married to Miss Patience Morrison, a native of this county, and having managed to save a small amount of his salary, the young man bought a little farm in Nottingham township, this county, upon which he and his bride began their wedded life. They were poor in worldly goods, but happy and rich in the possession of health and love. Fortune soon began to smile upon the brave young couple who met her frowns with such cheery faces, and as years passed on children came to brighten the little home as follows: Patience B. (wife of James H. Barkley), William H. L., Charles James Reed, John T. G., Joseph G. P., Elizabeth Ann, Margaret Elvora and Mary Jane. Of these the latter three are deceased. At the time of his death James R. Hamilton owned 300 acres of land.

Park J. Hamilton was born October 15, 1863, on the home farm in Nottingham township, this county, attending the home schools during his early youth. On October 18, 1888, he was united in marriage with Miss Agnes J. Miller, a well-known school teacher of Nottingham township, and a daughter of John Miller, a prominent agriculturist of Allegheny county, Penn. Mr. Hamilton had been working with his father on the home place previous to his marriage, and the young couple immediately took up their residence on the paternal homestead. He now owns eighty-one acres of the old place, which he keeps in an excellent state of cultivation, and also raises a good grade of cattle. Two children have been born to this marriage, viz.: Elfra Augusta and John Park.

AJ. HESS was born May 3, 1813, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of John Hess, who was born in 1817, in Pennsylvania, of Dutch parents, who were among the earliest pioneers of that State. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Ann Jones who was born in 1819, in Fallowfield township, Washington county, of English parents; her father lived to the age of one hundred years. To the union of John and Ann (Jones) Hess were born eight children, of whom are named: William, who enlisted in the "Ringgold Battalion," serving three years and six months, part of the time as clerk of his regiment; A. J.; Mary E., wife of Capt. Fairfield, of Allegheny county, Penn.; Amanda, deceased in 1844, wife of Thomas Teeple; Maggie J. and John E. The father was a leading agriculturist, and raised a large quantity of sheep and cattle; the farm contained eighty eight acres of very fertile land. He served his township in different offices, and was a valued citizen. He died in 1887, followed by his wife in 1889.

A. J. Hess, son of John and Ann Hess, has always resided on the old place, and since the death of his father has lived there with his brother John E. He owns forty four acres of the homestead, and devotes his principal attention to its cultivation. Politically he is an advocate of Republican principles, and in religion is a member of the Methodist Church. On January 27, 1874, he was united in marriage with Emma S. Teeple, a native of Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn. Their union has been blessed with three sons and two daughters, namely: Charles W., Alcinous J., Elizabeth L., Angelia P. and Howard Floyd.

JOHIN H. HAMILTON, one of the successful stock raisers in Washington county, is a son of Robert C. and Mary (Young) Hamilton, and was born in 1849, on the home farm in Washington county. From earliest boyhood he evinced an unusual fondness for the animals on the farm, and soon developed rare judgment in the care of stock. He attended the common schools of the neighborhood, acquiring as well a good practical education, thus laying deep the foundations of a life which has been most useful and prosperous. On January 14, 1886, he married Emma L., the only daughter of P. H. and Eliza-both Stovenson, of Allegheny county, Penn. Two daughters have been born to their union, namely Mabel Pauline and Mary Elizabeth.

Mr. Hamilton is a member of the Delaine Association of Sheep Breeders, serving that organization as corresponding secretary, and his principal attention is devoted to this branch of stock raising. In politics he votes with the Democratic party, and in religious faith he is a member of the Presbyterian Church of Canonsburg.

THE MARTIN FAMILY were natives of York county, Penn., and in the latter part of the eighteenth century Peter Martin came to Washington county, Penn., with his wife and family, and settled on the farm where the remainder of his life was passed, and which is the present home of his descendants. He died at the age of eighty years, and rests beside his wife, who bore him seven children, all of whom are now deceased.

James Martin, son of Peter Martin, was born in 1792, in York county, Penn., and came with his parents to Washington county, where, in 1824, he was united in marriage with Mary White (who was born in 1800), daughter of Samuel White, and she bore him the following children: Peter B., born February 1, 1822 (deceased); Samuel, born January 24, 1824; James, born December 12, 1825; John White (now a merchant in Canonsburg, this county), born January 11, 1828; Matthew, born December 7, 1830; Mary Jane (deceased at the age of twenty two), born September 21, 1832; Ebenezer Henderson (drowned in the Appomattox river), born June 21, 1834; Ann Elizabeth (deceased in 1838), born November 3, 1837; Elizabeth Margaret, born October 10, 1839; William Henry, born September 4, 1842; and Thomas Jefferson, born August 28, 1847. Of these children Ebenezer Henderson enlisted in the Civil war, Company G, 110th P. V. I., and afterward became a member of the Signal Corps. Mr. Martin cleared and improved his farm, and, with the aid of his sons, also managed a sawmill. He was actively interested in politics, having first been a Whig, and after the formation of that party he became a Republican. He held several political offices, and in early manhood was captain of a militia company. In religion he was formerly a member of the Seceder Church, afterward uniting with the United Presbyterian Church. He died at the age of eighty five years, following his wife, who died in 1878 in her seventy eighth year.

MATTHEW MARTIN, son of James and Mary (White) Martin, grew to manhood on the home farm in South Strabane township, Washington county, and received his earliest education in an old log schoolhouse, which was built and furnished in the most primitive manner. The large chimney at one end, greased paper for windows, a rough puncheon floor, the writing desk fastened to the wall, and the rude benches supported by wooden pegs. After leaving school, young Matthew worked on the farm and assisted his father in the sawmill. He is now a prosperous man. He votes the Republican ticket, and has filled the position of supervisor of roads three or four terms.

WILLIAM HENRY MARTIN (brother of Matthew) was married January 17, 1867, to Annie M. Thome, a resident of North Strabane township, this county, and they have two children: Abner Edie (wife of Rev. William Jones, pastor of a Presbyterian Church at Pittsburgh), and James Willie. William H. Martin is now a school director of his township, and in religion a member of the U. P. Church, of which he is an elder. In 1884 the brothers erected their present handsome dwelling. Their farm consists of over 100 acres of land, situated five miles east of Washington borough, in South Strabane township, which is one of the most comfortable and cosy homes in the vicinity. The brothers devote a great deal of time to stock raising, and now own about eight hundred fine Black Top Merino sheep. This farm was patented to Jacob Shively, in 1786. The patentee sold to Peter Martin in 1814, and it has been in the Martin family since that year.

THOMAS WEAVER, a native of Washington county, and early settler of Cecil township, is the eldest son of John, and grandson of Thomas Dill Weaver. The Weaver family are of Welsh descent, and trace their settlement in Pennsylvania to the time of William Penn. Thomas Dill Weaver was born in Chester county, Penn., and there married to Jane Hunston, who came with her parents from Ireland to Chester county, Penn., at the age of seven years. After the birth of their third child the young couple came with pack horses to Washington county, Penn., locating at Canonsburg, where both died many years ago.

John Weaver, a son of this pioneer couple, was born in Chester county, Penn., having come with his parents to Chartiers township, this county, when but seven years of age. He grew to manhood in this county, and learned the trade of a stone mason. When a young man he selected a life companion in the person of Mary McMillan, a native of North Strabane township, daughter of Dr. John and Catherine (Brown) McMillan. The parents were born in Chester county, Penn., coming to this county in an early day, and locating in North Strabane township. The father was pastor of the Chartiers Presbyterian Church for fifty years, also the founder of Jefferson College. He died in 1828, having been preceded by the mother in 1818.

John and Mary (McMillan) Weaver made a permanent home near Canonsburg, Penn., and were members of the Chartiers Presbyterian Church. The children born to this union were as follows: Thomas (whose name opens this sketch), Catherine (Mrs. Patterson White, of Paxton, Ill.) and Jane (a twin, wife of John Jeffrey, of Jefferson county, Ohio), Sarah (deceased at the age of seventeen years), Mary (deceased in 1887, wife of Wilson Lesnett, Allegheny county, Penn.), John (died in Canonsburg), Margaret (Mrs. John Perry, of Missouri), Nancy (married to William McNutt, of Canonsburg) and Samuel (deceased in Canonsburg). Thomas Weaver was born April 16, 1811, in Chartiers township, this county, being educated in the subscription schools of the home district. On March 17, 1835, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Frederick and Isabella (Wilson) Lesnett, early pioneers of Allegheny county, Penn., where their lives were passed. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Weaver resided in Chartiers township until 1848; then bought a partially improved farm of 106 acres in Cecil township, of which he yet retains eighty six acres, well improved and cultivated. He votes with the Democratic party, and in religion both are members of the Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg, of which he has for many years been a ruling elder. They are the parents of the following named children: (1) John, born December 25, 1835 (a physician and surgeon of Canonsburg, was united in marriage with Belle A. Boyce, December 10, 1863, and died March 18, 1872. The children of this union are Lizzie B., Thomas McKeag (died in childhood), Mary J., Thomas C. and John B., twins, the latter of whom died January 16, 1892); (2) Frederick, born January 14, 1838 (farmer and dairyman, living in Cecil township, was united in marriage with Sarah A. Henry, February 17, 1881. They are the parents of the following named children: Martha M., Ida E., Thomas V. and William McC.); (3) Mary, born February 9, 1840 (wife of James M. White, of Cecil township, married March 16, 1866); (4) Thomas, born November 5, 1811 (preferred to follow the profession of a teacher, but entered the One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment P. V. I. and died as a prisoner of war at Louisiana Hospital, Va., November 27, 1863); (5) Isaac, (6) Isabella, and (7) Calvin (all died in childhood); (8) Isaac Calvin, born June 29, 1819 (farmer and mechanic, living in Cecil township, was united in marriage with Mary J. McLaughlin, October 19, 1876, and died December 25, 1890. The children of this union are Mary E., Fred R., Annie B., Alice L., Thomas D., Olive M. and Francis J.); (9) Samuel W., born January 9, 1853 (a physician and surgeon of Oregon, was united in marriage with Alice Grim, November 1, 1888. The children of this union are Francis and Grey Grim); (10) Frank Ritchie, born August 17, 1855 (farmer, living in Cecil township, was united in marriage with Sarah J. McNary, August 9, 1892).

SAMUEL SCOTT, a leading and representative citizen of Smith township, is a son of Finley Scott, and a grandson of Abraham Scott, who was born and reared in Maryland, and when a young man (about the year 1780) came to Washington county with his brother Alexander, settling near Raccoon, Robinson township. Here he purchased a wild tract of land, where the remainder of his active life was passed in agricultural pursuits. He married Jane, a sister of John Finley (the founder of Finleyville), and reared the following children: Rachel (Mrs. James Russell), Mary (wife of Thomas Fletcher), Ann (married to James Kerr), Jane (wife of David White), Elizabeth (Mrs. William Scott), Susan (married to John McBride), Samuel, Finley and Holland. Abraham Scott was a Democrat in politics, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church at Raccoon.

Finley Scott was born in 1800, in Robinson township, and educated in the schools of the neighborhood of his home. In 1822 he married Margaret, daughter of James Stephenson, of Smith township. The young people made their first home after marriage on a farm in Robinson township, this county, remaining there a few years, when they rented a neighboring farm, afterward purchasing a place in Smith township, where they lived twenty years, and finally moved to the home where the remainder of their lives was passed. The children of this couple were Ann, Robert K., James, Samuel, Finley, John, Levi, Jane F. (Mrs. William Cowan), and Margaret (wife of Thomas Akleson). Mr. Scott was the architect of his own fortune, and owned 150 acres of land at the time of his death, which occurred April 5, 1878. He was a Democrat, and held various township offices. In church connection he was first a member of the Associate Reformed Church, in which he was an elder, afterward uniting with the U. P. Church at Burgettstown. He and his wife are buried in the United Presbyterian cemetery.

Samuel Scott was born August 13, 1829, on the home place in Robinson township, and came with his parents to Smith township, where he was reared and educated, receiving a country school education. On January 31, 1878, he married Mary M., daughter of John Ross, and she has borne him children as follows: Margaret J., Walter S., Martha A. and Samuel O. Mr. Scott was an Old-line Democrat, but since the organization of the party has been a Republican; he has held various township offices, and served three years as county auditor. He and his family are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Burgetts town, of which he has been trustee for many years, and has contributed liberally to the cause. For a time he taught school in Cross Creek, Smith township, and Robinson township.

ZACHARIAH BAKER is descended from a Quaker family, whose characteristic spirit of honor and morality is still manifested in the lives of the present generation of that name.

Nathan Baker was a resident of New Jersey, and lived near Philadelphia for several years, finally removing with his family to Chester county, Penn. Afterward he purchased a farm of 150 acres in Washington county, near Fredericktown, where he managed a mill, drove stock and carried on the work of the farm. His first wife was Elizabeth Baker, of New Jersey, and their children were Aaron, Nehemiah, David, Joseph, Nathan, Enoch, Mrs. Lydia Townsend and Mrs. Mary Linton. After the death of the mother of this family, Mr. Baker married a widow, Mrs. Jordan, who bore him the following children: William, Israel, Mahlon and Mrs. Hannah Rejester. Soon after Mr. Baker came to Washington county he went to Baltimore, Md., with stock, and while there was taken sick and died; this occurred in 1803, and he was buried beside his first wife.

Joseph Baker, son of Nathan, was born July 9, 1786, in the State of New Jersey, and passed his early youth at home, attending the rate schools, and assisting in the farm duties. When seventeen years of age, his father died, and he then learned the carpenter's trade of Spencer McKay, which he followed many years. He first purchased the Miller farm, comprising thirty acres, and in 1830 bought the place which is now the property of his son Zachariah, and here passed the remainder of his life. On January 1, 1818, he was united in marriage with May Corwin, of Amwell township, who was born November 1, 1797, and the results of this union were the following children: Eunice, born November 15, 1818; Alpheus, born May 27, 1821; Stephen, born June 8, 1824; Sophia, born September 29, 1826 (deceased August 9, 1840); Asenath, born August 22, 1829; Enoch, born April 5, 1832; Zachariah, born December 19, 1835; Ruth, born November 11, 1837; and David, born August 20, 1842. Mr. Baker was a successful business man, and his property represented the result of his own integrity, economy and perseverance. Politically he was formerly an Old-line Whig, afterward becoming a Republican. He and his wife were members of the Baptist Church at Mount Vernon. He died July 22, 1863, after a long and useful life.

Zachariah Baker, son of Joseph, was born on the farm in Amwell township, where his entire life has been passed. In his boyhood days he attended the district schools, but at the age of twenty-one he began working by the month, continuing in that way several years. On August 22, 1862, he enlisted at Amity in the One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., remaining in the service until July 6, 1865. He participated in the battles of Gettysburg, Auburn Heights and Spottsylvania Court-house, in which latter engagement he was wounded. On December 21, 1865, he was united in marriage with Rosa A. Voorhes, who was born March 6, 1839, near Amity, in Amwell township, a daughter of A. W. and Mary Voorhes; the other children in her father's family were Nelson, born February 27, 1829; Samuel, born June 12, 1830; Jane, born March 21, 1832; Albert, born December 26, 1833; Margaret, born October 16, 1835; Nancy, born May 11, 1837; Rose A. born March 6, 1839; Julia (Mrs. Swiggler), born February 4, 1841; Elizabeth, born August 24, 1842; Mary, born March 21, 1844; Andrew, born March 28, 1845; and Peter, born February 28, 1847.

The record of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Zachariah Baker is as follows: Sophia Jane, born October 19, 1866, is the wife of Joseph Tucker, of Amity; Victoren, born July 25, 1868, died September 14, 1869; Elizabeth Ann was born January 11, 1874; William Horner, born December 22, 1879, died November 16, 1880. Mr. Baker has been a successful business man, and is a highly esteemed citizen. He is a zealous worker in the Republican party, and he and his family are all members of the Methodist Church at Amity.

ISAAC C. PATCH is a son of William Patch, who was born June 1, 1820, in Washington county, Penn., and when a young man was married to Annie E. Clemens. They moved to Triadelphia, W. Va., in 1854, but after eight years returned to this county, and are now residing in Allegheny, Penn. Their children were born as follows: Alexander M., Isaac C., William E., George A. C., Lizzie M., Katie B., Alice A., Birney M., and Ralph C. Alexander M. graduated at West Point in 1876; lost his leg at Fort Brown, Tex., and is now a merchant at Cornwall, Penn. William E., Katie B. and Birney M. are dead. George A. C. is engaged in oil and gas drilling. Lizzie M. married Albert Boone, and lives in Allegheny, Penn.; Alice A. and Ralph C. live with their parents.

Isaac C. Patch was born January 19, 1856, in Triadelphia, W. Va., and when fifteen years of age began to learn the blacksmith's trade in his father's shop. This business he has since followed with a full measure of success. In 1872 the family moved from Claysville to Houstonville, Penn., where Isaac C. and George A. C. still reside. On February 10, 1886, Isaac C. Patch was united in marriage with Jennie, daughter of James and Ellen Ferris. There were born to him the following named children: Anna Mazie, Emma Elsie, William Clark and Albert Boon.

WILLIAM J. MATHEWS, for many years a leading merchant of Washington, was born in Washington county, Penn., November 10, 1817. His early home was in the country a few miles from Noblestown, in this State. Here he spent the first twenty years of his life, gathering what education he could at the school in the neighborhood, and at the same time forming habits of industry by assisting his father and only brother in a flouring mill. The death of his mother broke up the home. His brother John was married and became a farmer in Noblestown, taking the father with him.

William J. Mathews, the subject of this sketch, came to Washington and entered the dry-goods store of C. M. Reed, Sr., who was then in business on the corner of Main and Wheeling streets, where the Pittsburgh store is now. Here he served several years as a clerk, and, when Mr. Reed sold his interest in the house, the firm became known as that of Chambers & Mathews. This partnership continued a harmonious and successful one for twenty five years, when failing health decided both members to retire. The transfer of the business was just about to be made when death called Mr. Mathews from his earthly labors. He died suddenly of pneumonia, November 30, 1874, aged fifty-seven years and twenty days. He was married in 1860 to Frances S. Pelletreau, of Southampton, N. Y., who graduated from the Washington Seminary in 1849. She, her three sons and one daughter, survive him. While Mr. Mathews' life may in some ways be called uneventful, his was one of those sterling characters which are ever to be held in high esteem. Beginning life a poor boy with few opportunities for mental improvement, he became, because of hard work, scrupulous honesty and strict integrity, a prosperous man. At the same time, as well as being "diligent in business," he found time to cultivate the higher interests of his being. He joined the Presbyterian Church early in the pastorate of Rev. J. I. Brownson, D. D., and became by a consistent daily life a witness for Christ. He was a trustee in the church, and at a meeting held December 4, 1871, the following action was taken in relation to his death:

William J. Mathews, whose death we are called upon to record, died November 30, 1874. He had been a trustee for four years, the confidence of the congregation being manifested by his election annually from 1870 to 1874. In the discharge of the duties of the office he was conscientious and faithful, taking a deep interest in all matters pertaining to the business of the congregation, and advocating liberal measures for the promotion of the welfare of pastor and people. During a residence in the community for a period of thirty years he maintained the character of an upright, honest citizen. The trustees bear cheerful testimony to his uniform courtesy and kindness in his intercourse with them and to his consistent character as a member of the church. They direct a copy of this minute to be furnished to his widow with the assurance of their sympathy in her bereavement. (Signed by) M. H. Ewing, C. M. Reed, A. S. Baird, Alex Wilson.

JERRY MYERS was born December 29, 1837, and is a son of Henry Myers, who was born in 1807. In 1832 Henry Myers was united in marriage with Mary Ann Myers, who was born in 1812. They reared a family of fourteen children, twelve of whom are now living, viz.: Hiram, a farmer of Somerset township, married to Miss Sarah Ann Wilson; Ursula, married to Christian Hootman, an agriculturist of Nottingham township; Elizabeth, married to William Keenan, an agriculturist of Fallowfield township; Jerry, married to Sarah Rainey; Abner, farming in Somerset township, married to Miss Mary Horner; William, a farmer of North Strabane township, married to Eliza J. Leyda; John, a stock dealer, of Castle Shannon, Allegheny county, married to Dora West; Anderson, an agriculturist of Somerset township, married to Lucinda Huffman; Jacob, an agriculturist of Somerset township, married to Josephine Red; Mary J., married to Linsey Hetherington, a farmer of Somerset township; Henry, an agriculturist of Somerset township, married to Isabelle Crouch; Sarah A., married to Alva Leyda, a farmer of Somerset township. The mother of this family died May 16, 1892. She was a member of the Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church. The father is now in his eighty-sixth year, and is living at the old homestead; he is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek.

Jerry Myers received his early education in the common schools of Somerset township, this county. In 1862 he enlisted in Company E, Twenty-second Pennsylvania Calvary, under Capt. J. T. Chessrown, and took part in all the principal battles, and many skirmishes, of the West Virginia campaign, serving until the close of the war. In 1865 he returned home and resumed his agricultural duties. On March 8, 1866, he was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Rainey, who was born November 11, 1838, in Somerset township, this county, daughter of William and Mary (Gamble) Rainey. William Rainey was born in 1805, and in early life was married to Mary Gamble, who was born in 1813; they reared a family of nine children, six of whom are now living, viz.: Jane M. (wife of George Adams, a farmer of Page county, Iowa). Sarah (Mrs Jerry Myers), Levi G. (a farmer of Somerset township), Eunice E. (married to George Young, an agriculturist of Somerset township), Minerva (wife of Charles Floyd, also an agriculturist of Somerset township) and George M. (a stock dealer, of Somerset township). The father of this family died in 1886. He was a member of the Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church. The mother is now in her eightieth year, and is living with her daughter, Mrs. Floyd. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek.

Jerry and Sarah (Rainey) Myers have had five children, viz.: Harry A., born August 1, 1870; Jennie G., born November 16, 1872; Pearl C., born December 26, 1880; William (deceased) and one that died in infancy. Mr. Myers is a progressive citizen, rapidly rising to prominence in public and business life, and taking an active interest in all movements tending to elevate or improve the condition of the community. He owns a fertile farm of 247 acres, the resources of which are developed to their utmost capacity. He and his wife are members of the Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church.

JOHAN CUNNINGHAM is a well known resident of Donegal township, and, like many of our most successful and honored citizens, he is a native of the fair "Emerald Isle." His father, Peter Cunningham, was born in 1799, in County Down, Ireland, and in early life learned the weaver's trade, which he followed but a short time. He then became a farmer, and also dealt very extensively in stock. He was married to Dorothea Wilkinson, who was born in the year 1812, also a native of County Down, Ireland, and to them were born the following children: John, Eliza, George, Thomas, Peter, Ellen, Sarah and Abigail, all of whom passed their lives in Ireland, with the exception of John. The father died in the year 1844, and was followed by the mother in 1863.

John Cunningham, the eldest son in the above mentioned family, was born July 24, 1829, in County Down, Ireland. He learned the trade of weaver during his boyhood, but never followed it. His education was obtained in the schools of the country, and he remained at home until April 12, 1849, when he resolved to seek a fortune in the New World. Embarking at Belfast on the vessel "Agitator" (so named for Daniel O'Connell, the great Irish agitator), the ardent youth sailed to America, and after a voyage of six weeks and five days landed at Philadelphia. He then went to Pittsburgh by way of canal boat and rail, but work being poor, he remained there only a short time, and soon came to Washington county, Penn. The first man he worked for after leaving Pittsburgh was Isaac Hodgens, of Taylorstown, with whom he remained one month, being treated very kindly, and receiving $10 for his services. From there he went to James Campsey, an extensive land-owner, with whom he remained fourteen years. On September 17, 1863, he was united in marriage with Margaret J. Heyburn, who was born in 1840, daughter of Alexander Heyburn, and they have had children as follows: John (living with his parents, is a speculator), Mary Jane (deceased in infancy), George (residing at home), Joseph (living at home), Amanda (also living with her parents) and Margaret Jane (deceased in infancy). The mother of these children died December 25, 1879, and for his second wife Mr. Cunningham was married, December 29, 1885, to Mary Ann Heyburn, who was born in 1817, a sister of his first wife. They have had no children. Mr. Cunningham passed the first few years of his married life as a tenant on the farm of his former employer, and finally saved enough money to purchase a home. In 1872 he bought and moved upon a farm which was located near Atchison, Donegal township, this county, and remained there till 1881. He then moved onto a part of the "Heyburn" tract, lying three miles northwest of Claysville, in Donegal township, and has since resided on this farm, which belongs to his wife. Mr. Cunningham has been the architect of his own fortune. He was but a poor Irish boy when he first landed on American soil, and by dint of industry and enterprise has accumulated a competency. In religious faith he is a Presbyterian, and with his family he enjoys the esteem of the community. In political life he has always been a Republican. The following is from the pen of Mr. Cunningham:

Ireland my country I'm now going to leave you,

I'll bid you farewell for a while;

To a far distant country I'm now going to wander,

Where wild beasts and savage are king,

But Erin my country I'll still think upon you;

And of your sweet vales I will sing.

When far distant from you I will think on you still,

Your sweet purling streams and your daisy-clad hill.

The ship she is waiting with flags waving high,

Which bears me from Ireland my fortune to try.

But ne'er will I forget till the day I shall die,

The pleasures I spent there when I was a boy.

In the old County Down, near the town of Hillsborough,

Where my youthful days I have spent;

When I think upon them my heart fills with sorrow,

Alas, for their sakes I lament;

But I hope that kind Providence will still be my guide,

And conduct me safe over the ocean so wide

With a full flowing glass on the other side.

I will drink to Old Erin the Green.

Farewell to the land where the shamrocks do flourish;

Farewell to its green flowery vales;

Farewell to the green woods, where the songsters chant

chorus,

And tell to the warblers their tales;

May the bright sun of heaven still shine round your isle;

And peace and prosperity still on you smile;

This is the prayer of your wandering exile,

In a land far from Erin the Green.

LEVY SCOTT (deceased) was a son of Finley and grandson of Abraham Scott, the latter of whom was born and reared in Maryland, and when a young man came to Pittsburgh, Penn., afterward settling in Washington county with his brother Alexander. He purchased a wild tract of land near Raccoon postoffice, Robinson township, this county, where his life was passed in agricultural pursuits. He was married to Jane, a sister of John Finley (the founder of Finleyville), and reared the following children: Rachel (Mrs. James Russell), Mary (wife of Thomas Fletcher), Ann (married to James Kerr), Jane (wife of David White), Elizabeth (Mrs. William Scott), Susan (married to John McBride), Abraham, Finley, Holland and Samuel. The father was a Democrat in politics, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church at Raccoon.

Finley Scott was born in 1800, in Robinson township, and educated in this county. In 1822 he was married to Margaret, daughter of James Stephenson, of Smith township. The young people first settled on a farm in Robinson township, and remained there a few years, when they rented a neighboring farm, afterward purchasing a place in Smith township, where they lived twenty years, and finally moving to the home where the remainder of their lives was passed. Their children were Ann, Robert K., James, Samuel, Finley, John, Levi, Jane F. (Mrs. William Cowen) and Margaret (wife of Thomas Akleson). Mr. Scott was the architect of his own fortune and owned 450 acres of land at the time of his death, which occurred in 1879. He was a Democrat, and held various township offices. In religious connection he first united with the Associate Reformed Church, in which he was an elder, and afterward became a member of the U. P. Church at Burgettstown. Both he and his wife are buried in the U. P. cemetery.

Levi Scott was born January 18, 1837, in Smith township, on the farm now occupied by his widow. He remained on the home place, and attended the common schools of the neighborhood until seventeen years of age, when he came with his parents to a farm a short distance north of his birthplace. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company C, Twenty-second P. V. C., in which he was a bugler, remaining until the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged. After the war the young soldier returned to his home in Washington county, and on June 5, 1867, was married to Lizzie J. Lee, who was born August 19, 1844, daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Hindman) Lee. Mrs. Scott had two sisters, Mrs. Mary L. Pry, and Miss Nannie H. Lee, who died February 24, 1892, and was buried beside her father and mother in the old cemetery at Cross Creek village.

After his marriage Levi Scott settled on the old home farm. He was a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown, and was one of the building committee who superintended the erection of the handsome edifice which is their present house of worship. In politics he was an influential worker in the Republican party. On June 2, 1883, he was working at a portable sawmill near Rankin's Mill, in Mt. Pleasant township, and by some accident was thrown between the huge saw logs, being instantly killed. He was buried in the United Presbyterian cemetery, and left a widow and one son, Robert Lee, who was born June 19, 1868. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Scott and her son have continued to reside on the home place, upon which Mr. Scott had erected one of the most handsome farm residences in Smith township. The farm work is carried on by the son and his assistant, Mr. B. D. Malone, a faithful and energetic man, who has been in the employ of the Scott family for twenty years.

WILLIAM C. IRWIN. Prominent among the enterprising and prosperous agriculturists of Canton township is the subject of this brief biographical sketch. He was born May 6, 1830, in Canton township, Washington Co., Penn., a grandson of David Irwin, who was among the earliest settlers of the county, but the particulars of whose emigration are unknown. However, the family settled in Canton township, where they at once began clearing up and improving a farm.

James Irwin, son of the old pioneer, David Irwin, was married October 8, 1818, to Margaret Smith, who died July 6, 1819. On March 1, 1821, Mr. Irwin married Nancy Clark, who bore him the following named children: Margaret, Ann, Jane, Mary, William C., Martha, David, Nancy and Adeline. The mother died October 15, 1860, the father December 12, 1854. Mr. Irwin was an energetic worker in the Democratic ranks, and an active member of the United Presbyterian Church at North Buffalo, where he and his wife lie buried.

William C. Irwin, son of James and Nancy (Clark) Irwin, passed his early youth and manhood upon the home farm, and was educated at the public schools of the neighborhood of his birthplace. On October 19, 1854, he was married to Mary R., daughter of Leet and Elizabeth Dye, and immediately brought his bride to the home of his boyhood. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Irwin has been blessed with the following named children: Florence A. (deceased), James D., John L., Laura A., Leman N., William M., Edith E., Asa C., Minnie J. (deceased), Mary Etta, Charles Milton, Nellie S. and Clifford T. The mother was called from earth December 12, 1886. Since early manhood Mr. Irwin has been engaged in agricultural pursuits, and he now owns one of the best farms in Canton township. He is a member of the Second Presbyterian Church at Washington, with which he has long been identified. Politically he is a Democrat, active and zealous in the interests of his party.

JAMES PATTERSON, a prominent citizen of Chartiers township, was born February 20, 1828, in Allegheny county, Penn., and is a grandson of John and Mary (Miller) Patterson, natives of Ireland, who came to America, first settling near Wilmington, Del. In 1806, with one horse and a wagon to transport their worldly goods and themselves, the family moved to a partially improved place in Allegheny county, Penn., where John Patterson died, his widow surviving him many years.

Robert Patterson, son of John and Mary (Miller) Patterson, was born in 1791, in Ireland, and passed his earlier youth in his native land, coming to America with his parents, who finally settled in Pennsylvania. Robert Patterson married Mary McConnell, a native of Allegheny county, Penn., and settled on the homestead in that county. He was one of the minute men in the factory at Wilmington, Del., previous to his arrival in Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Patterson were formerly members of the Associate Reformed Church at Robinson's Run, afterward uniting with the U. P. Church at that place. Mrs. Patterson died in the spring of 1863, and on March 31, 1876, he passed away on the old homestead, while in his eighty-fifth year.

James Patterson received his education in the schools of his native county, and then learned the carpenter's trade, following that vocation several years. In November, 1861, he was married to Miss Catherine Stewart, a native of the Emerald Isle, and a daughter of John and Mary (Walker) Stewart, also natives of Ireland, who immigrated in 1852 to Allegheny county, Penn., where the mother died in 1875; the father is now living with his daughter Catherine. James Patterson remained in Allegheny county several years after his marriage, and in 1867 removed to his present home in Washington county, Penn. The children of James and Catherine (Stewart) Patterson are Robert M., John W., Mary Jane, Anna Martha, Sarah Ellen and Mary Rebecca. Of this family, John W. was married in 1890 to Lizzie J. Phillips, a native of Cecil township, and daughter of John Wayne and Anna Mary (Cummins) Phillips, natives of Chartiers township, this county. To the union of John W. and Lizzie J. Patterson has been born one daughter, Anna Laura. Mary Jane Patterson (the third child of James) is married to C. L. Reed, of Cecil township, and they have one child, Catherine Pauline. Mr. Patterson has 135 acres of land, to which his attention is principally given; he also raises a fine breed of stock. Politically, he is an active worker in the Republican party.

WILLIAM M. RUSSELL, a prosperous farmer of Chartiers township, is a son of Andrew Russell, whose father was a native of Scotland, and came to eastern Pennsylvania, afterward moving to Washington county, where he died. Andrew Russell was born in 1777, in Cecil township, this county, and in 1782 came to a farm in Chartiers township, where he grew to manhood and was married to Ann McClellan. They passed their lives in their native county. In politics Andrew Russell was a Whig, and an active worker in the party. He died in 1861, and was followed to the grave by his widow February 17, 1868. They were formerly both members of the Associate Reformed Church, and afterward united with the U. P. Church at Canonsburg. They were the parents of eleven children.

William M. Russell was born October 10, 1825, in Chartiers township, Washington county, being the youngest child in his father's family. He was reared on the home farm, and educated in the subscription schools of the county. In 1855 he was married to Margaret Jane Thompson, a native of Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and a daughter of Joseph and Margaret (Wilson) Thompson, natives of Ireland, of Scotch descent. They immigrated to America in an early day, settling in Mt. Pleasant township, where Joseph Thompson passed the rest of his life in agricultural pursuits. He was actively interested in political questions, and in religion was connected with the U. P. Church of Hickory, this county. His wife, who was a member of the Associate Reformed Church, died in 1847, and in 1861 he was laid by her side. After his marriage William M. Russell opened a book and drug store at Canonsburg, this county, keeping a full line of school and college text-books. In 1862 he moved to a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and in 1881 settled on the farm in Chartiers township which he now occupies, comprising 135 acres of good land. Mr. and Mrs. Russell have had ten children, but four of whom are now living, namely: L. A. (living in Chartiers township), William Frank (an operator at Bridgeville, Allegheny Co., Penn.), Mamie Bell Agnes (married to James M. Paxton) and Robert Lee (studying for the ministry at New Wilmington College). In politics Mr. Russell is a Republican, and has served as supervisor and member of the school board. His wife died January 19, 1892. She was a member of the U. P. Church at Hickory, in which her husband was an elder, now being a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Houstonville.

WILLIAM VAN KIRK was born September 24, 1836, in Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., and is a great-grandson of Henry Van Kirk, who was born January 9, 1742, and who married Sarah Van Kirk. To their union were born the following children: William, Johnson, Mary, Gideon, Ira, Arthur, Sarah Henry, John, Ann, Elizabeth and Jennie. Mr. Van Kirk settled in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., in an early day, and remained there until his death, April 3, 1797. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and in politics was a Federalist.

Henry Van Kirk was born in Amwell township, Washington county, and in early life learned the mason's trade, which vocation he followed several years. He was married to Ruth Jolly, and reared the following children: Mary E., Dryden, Jane, Charles, Ruth, Susanna and Milton. After a few years' residence in Amwell township, Mr. Van-Kirk removed to Franklin township, where he passed the remainder of his life. In politics he was a Whig, and in religious faith a member of the Baptist Church.

Dryden Van Kirk was born on the home farm in Franklin township, and in early life learned the mason's trade of his father, which was afterward his chief occupation. He was married to Matilda Sowers, a resident of eastern Pennsylvania, and she bore him children as follows: John O., Henry (deceased), William, Charles, Simeon (deceased), George M. (deceased), Nancy J. (Mrs. John McClelland), Sarah (Mrs. Henry Lindley) and Hiram. Politically Mr. Van Kirk is a Republican. He is now residing on his farm, one of the best in Franklin township.

William Van Kirk passed his early life on the home farm, attending the common schools. Like his father and grandfather, he learned the mason's trade, and followed it until the commencement of the Civil war, when he enlisted, in August, 1862, in Company C, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I. His company was commanded by Capt. Acheson, and was sent to the South, where he did guard duty on the West Central Railroad, and thence going to Fredericksburg, he remained with the company until the close of the war. When on the skirmish line near Deep Bottom he was struck by the splinters of a sapling near by, which went through the knapsack and its contents, and killed the man beside him. He also stood near a man whose head was shot off by a cannon ball. On his return from the war Mr. Van Kirk engaged in buying stock. In May, 1872, he was united in marriage with Sidney A., daughter of George Van-Kirk, of Amwell township, and to their union have been born the following children: Blanche, infant, Howard (deceased), Julius C. and Jessie V. (twins) and Merle W. Mr. Van Kirk has achieved success through his own efforts. He has always supported the Republican party, and has served as school director, supervisor, and inspector of elections. The family are members of the Disciple Church at Washington.

Simeon Van Kirk, a brother of William, also enlisted in Company C, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., and followed the fortunes of his regiment until in the battle of Gettysburg they were called to assist in a charge, and were outflanked by the enemy. The regiment suffered a heavy loss when they attempted to close up the ranks, in front of Little Round Top Mountain, and Simeon Van Kirk was one of the men killed at that time.

ROBERT ZEDIKER. This progressive and enterprising citizen of South Strabane township is a representative of one of the best-known and most prominent families in the county.

John Zediker, grandfather of subject, was a native of eastern Pennsylvania, and in their youth he and his brother David, having an eye to the grandeur and fertility of the then "far West," set out to "spy the land," ostensibly on a hunting expedition, and finally arriving in Washington county, they were so fascinated with the beauties and attractions of South Strabane township, that they here resolved to remain and cast their lot. John, while in eastern Pennsylvania, had learned the trade of blacksmith, which he carried on for many years in the county of his adoption. Soon after his arrival he married Margaret, daughter of Ludwig Smith, who was among the earliest settlers of the county, and the children born to this union were Lewis, Susan (Mrs. Joseph Hallam), Elizabeth (Mrs. George Smith), Julia A. (Mrs. James Schwisher), Mary (Mrs. Matthew Doak) and John. Mr. Smith took a "tomahawk claim" of nearly a thousand acres of wild land, a part of which is now occupied by the subject of this sketch. He early identified himself with the politics of his section, and was prominent among the Federalists. In church matters he also took an active interest, and in the organization of the Lutheran Church in Amwell township he was a prominent factor. In this Society he was an elder for many years.

Lewis Zediker, father of our subject, was born in 1792 in South Strabane township, and passed his boyhood and youth on the home place, attending the subscription schools of his locality. In his early manhood he was married to Isabella, daughter of Robert Henry, and the children born to them were John (deceased), George, Robert, Nicholas, Sarah (Mrs. William Birmingham), Mary A., Susan (Mrs. E. R. Smith), Julia (Mrs. Frank Martin) and Harriet (Mrs. John Redick). After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Zediker took up their residence on the farm of his father-in-law, where he built a log cabin in which they lived some years; then moved to the place known as the "B. B. Zediker farm," on which they passed the remainder of their days, Mr. Zediker dying in 1867, his widow in 1876. Their remains repose in the Pigeon Creek U. P. cemetery. As members of the United Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek, Mr. and Mrs. Zediker were among its most active and liberal supporters. In politics originally a Whig, afterward a Republican, he was a leading counselor in the ranks of either party.

Robert Zediker was born August 24, 1822, on the old homestead, where he was early inducted into the multifarious duties of farm life. He attended the common schools of the district, and was regarded as one of the most apt scholars of his section. On December 25, 1849, Mr. Zediker was united in marriage with Sarah, daughter of John Hewitt, of Anwell township, and the children born to them are Mary J. (Mrs. John Berk), Anna M. (Mrs. Aaron Gamble), Martha B. (Mrs. George Shipe), Margaret K. (deceased), John H. (deceased), Emma G. (deceased), Lizzie (Mrs. John N. White) and Fannie. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Zediker took up their residence on the home farm, where they yet live, and on which they have made material improvements, having built two commodious dwellings; the one in which they at present reside was erected in 1885.

A zealous and enthusiastic Republican, Mr. Zediker has for many years been one of the leaders of the party in his section, and he has ever taken a deep interest in all matters tending to the advancement of his township and county, particularly in educational affairs, in connection with which he has done much to elevate the standard of instruction, and for a long period he served as director of schools. Mr. Zediker, through his liberality and influence, was of valued assistance in getting the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad through his locality, giving the right of way, and donating grounds for the station.

HAMILTON DAVIS (deceased) was a son of Samuel Davis, who was born in Canton township, Washington Co., Penn., June 19, 1794. On February 19, 1816, Samuel Davis was united in marriage with Nancy Hamilton, a resident of the same county, and she bore him the following children: John, William, Hugh, Mary, Samuel, Hamilton and Robert. In politics Mr. Davis was formerly a Whig, and on the organization of the Republican party became one of their most active workers. He kept a tavern for many years, dealt largely in stock and was a leader in all public enterprises. On November 22, 1861, he passed from earth. Mrs. Davis following him to the grave October 8, 1872.

Hamilton Davis was born August 22, 1830, in Canton township, this county, and passed his youth upon the farm, receiving his education in the common schools. He was an ardent and profound student, and always took an active part in the political and religious questions of the day. On March 8, 1865, he was married to Mary G., daughter of David Morrow, whose ancestors emigrated to America about the middle of the eighteenth century; her mother was Grizella, daughter of Robert Johnson. After their marriage the young people immediately took possession of the old home farm where the family still reside. The children born to them are: Harry N., born November 3, 1865; John W., born April 16, 1868; Charles M., born July 16, 1870; Samuel A., born June 1, 1874; Minnie H., born June 28, 1876; Retta C., born March 10, 1879; Frank L., born January 20, 1881; and David O., born May 10, 1885. Mr. Davis was for many years engaged in buying stock from different parts of the country, a business in which he was successful. In political life he was an earnest advocate of Republican principles, although he never accepted official positions, and in religion was for many years a trustee in the Presbyterian Church at Upper Buffalo, of which he was a zealous member. Mr. Davis died January 31, 1889.

HENRY STEPHEN DAY, a successful and prosperous young farmer of Morris township, is a son of I. N. Day, and a grandson of Stephen Day. Henry S. Day was born January 13, 1852, and March 2, 1876, was married to Alice K. Vaile, daughter of Leonard Vaile, of Morris township, to which union have been born five children, as follows: Clinton H., Arthur W., Howard N., Harry V. and Mary C., all living. Mr. Day has lived for fifteen years on the excellent farm of 135 acres which he now owns, which was formerly known as the old "Hathaway" farm. He gives considerable attention to stock raising, especially sheep. He was the first stock raiser to introduce Dorset-Horn sheep into Morris township. Mr. Day is a lifelong Democrat, and both he and his wife are members of Upper Ten-Mile Presbyterian Church at Prosperity. Few young men of this section have succeeded better or stand higher in the estimation of the best citizens, than Henry S. Day.

ANDREW MILLER, a farmer of Mt. Pleasant township, is a native of the same, having been born there July 17, 1828, and is a representative of one of the pioneer families of Washington county.

James Miller (his grandfather) was born in Ireland, and coming to Lancaster county, Penn., just before the Revolution, served five years in the war. In 1782 he was married to Margaret Shearer, afterward serving one year more as a soldier. In 1786 he returned to his wife, settling on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and followed agricultural pursuits. He and his wife were members of the Seceder Church.

Thomas Miller, a son of James and Margaret Miller, was born in 1783, in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington county. In 1806 he bought the farm now owned by his son, Andrew, and in the spring of 1812 was united in marriage with Sarah Miller, daughter of Thomas and Margaret Miller, also natives of Ireland. The latter had emigrated from their native country, and, coming to Washington county, settled in Mt. Pleasant township, where they passed the remainder of their lives, the father dying in his eighty-seventh year. They were both members of the Seceder Church at Hickory. After his marriage Thomas Miller settled on the home farm, and there passed his life, combining agricultural duties with carpentry, having erected the first house in Claysville. He was a worker in the Democratic party, and in religious connection he and his wife were both members of the Seceder Church at Hickory. He died in 1859, being followed in 1865 by his wife, who had borne him children as follows: James (deceased at the age of twenty-three years), Margaret, Catherine, Mary, Sarah, Ann, Thomas, Elizabeth (deceased at the age of seven years) and Andrew (subject of this sketch), all now deceased except the last-mentioned son.

Andrew Miller was reared on the home farm, receiving a subscription school education. On March 11, 1852, he was married to Sarah Stewart (a native of Chartiers township), daughter of Archibald and Rebecca (Reed) Stewart. Archibald Stewart was a blacksmith, and passed his entire life in Chartiers township, where both he and his wife died some years ago. After their marriage Andrew and Sarah (Stewart) Miller settled on the home farm and reared the following children: Thomas, Archibald S. (a merchant, living in Washington, Penn., married to Miss Susannah Espy), James B., John N. (a physician of Dorseyville, Penn., married to Maggie Weber; he is an elder in the U. P. church), Andrew Reed (an attorney of Steubenville, Ohio), W. W. (a physician and surgeon at Bakerstown, Penn.), David M. (a physician and surgeon at Pittsburgh, Penn.), Alvin and Rebecca Jane. Andrew Miller has a good coal land farm of 212 acres, upon which is a pleasant and comfortable residence and barn, with many other improvements. He is not an active politician, but has held some township offices. He and his wife are members of the Cross Roads United Presbyterian Church. Many changes have been wrought since the ancestors first settled on the old farm. The grandfather, James Miller, used to make the trip by boat to New Orleans, returning home on foot through miles of unbroken wilderness, where now the locomotive sweeps by with a scream and pleasant homes dot the grassy hills and valleys.

WILLIAM A. DICKSON, a successful farmer of Robinson township, is a grandson of George Dickson, who was a native of Ireland, immigrating to Allegheny county, Penn., at an early day. He then purchased 400 acres of land, and followed farming and stock raising until his death.

William Dickson, father of William A., was born in 1790, and reared on the home farm in Allegheny county. He was married to Margaret Glenn, who bore him children as follows: George (a surveyor, of Pittsburgh, Penn.), Rachel (widow of Robert Potter, of Noblestown, Penn.), James G. (a practicing physician of Canonsburg, this county), Mary (widow of James Clarke, of Canonsburg), William A., and three that died in infancy. The father united with the old Seceder Church when but seventeen years of age, and during the last twenty years of his life was a member of the U. P. Church of Noblestown. He was a ruling elder in these Societies for fifty-five years, and in business was a prominent and successful agriculturist. He died March 19, 1872.

William A. Dickson was born June 15, 1831, and reared to manhood on the old home farm. His elementary instruction was obtained at the country schools, after which he attended Duff's Commercial College at Pittsburgh, completing the course in 1856. He then returned home and worked on the home farm. On October 15, 1857, he was united in the bonds of matrimony with Elizabeth McBurney, who was born on February 28, 1835, in Washington county, an only child of Robert and Eliza (Welch) McBurney, the former of whom was a son of John McBurney, Sr. Robert McBurney was originally a Democrat, then became an Abolitionist and finally a Republican. He was a member of the Centre U. P. Church, and an elder in same for some years. For years he served as a justice of the peace. He died in 1875; his widow is still living with her son in law.

To the union of William A. and Elizabeth (McBurney) Dickson the following children have been born: Margaret G., Elizabeth W. (a graduate of the Steubenville Female Seminary, class of '85, afterward teaching two years in the Oswego College, now teaching at Chase City, Va.), Robert M. (who graduated at Duff's College), William R. (graduated at New Wilmington College, now a student in the Medical College at Pittsburgh, Penn.), Anna S. (a graduate of New Wilmington, Lawrence Co., Penn., now teaching at Chase City, Va.), Agnes J. (student at New Wilmington), Walter E. and Bertha L. Mr. Dickson still retains a portion of the ancestral acres. In 1875 he moved to his present home in Washington county. He and his family are members of the United Presbyterian Church, and he was an elder in the U. P. Church at Noblestown, at present in the Midway U. P. Church.

Am. A. Dickson

THOMAS McCLELLAND is of Irish descent, his grandfather, Thomas McClelland, having been born in County Donegal, Ireland, and immigrated to America when about seventeen years of age, first landing at New York. Thomas McClelland entered the war of the Revolution, and served till the close of the contest, receiving a cut in the head, besides being wounded in both ankles. He was afterward married to Nancy, daughter of Samuel Fergus, and their children were William, Margaret (Mrs. William McLain), Mary (Mrs. John Allen), Hugh, John, Martha (Mrs. James Brown) and Thomas. Mr. McClelland passed the earlier part of his married life in Adams county, Penn., and in the year 1790 removed to South Strabane township, Washington Co., same State, where he remained until his death. Politically he was identified with the Democratic party, and in religion was formerly a member of the Covenanter Church, but afterward united with the United Presbyterian Church at Washington.

William McClelland, son of Thomas and Nancy (Fergus) McClelland, was born in Adams county, Penn., in 1783, and was six years of age when his parents brought him to Washington county, where he obtained his education. He was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of John Allen, also a resident of South Strabane township, and to their union were born the following children: Eliza, Nancy (Mrs. Samuel McQuay), Thomas, Rebecca (Mrs. James Waller), Jane and John. Mr. McClelland was a Democrat in politics. In religion he was formerly a member of the Presbyterian Church at Washington, but after united with the United Presbyterian.

Thomas McClelland was born March 6, 1818, on the farm in South Strabane township which is his present home, and received a subscription school education. On March 17, 1842, he was married to Martha, daughter of William Waller, a resident of Somerset township; he was united in marriage with Mary Peese, and settled on the home farm. His children are Andrew, Elizabeth, Mary, William, Ruth A., Rachel, Sarah, George, James, Margaret, Martha and William. Mr. McClelland is a Democrat in politics, and has held the offices of road supervisor and school director. In religion he is an adherent of the Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek.

HO. McKNIGHT. Among the early families of Washington county, none are more deserving of prominent mention than that of the gentleman whose name opens this sketch. His grandfather, Hugh McKnight, was born in Ireland, and came to America in early life, first settling in Cecil county, Md., where he was married to Mary Nesbit. In 1784 they moved to Washington county, settling on the Littleton tract of 193 acres. He died in this county.

Joseph McKnight, father of subject, was born in 1774, in Cecil county, Md., and in 1818 was united in marriage with Sarah Anderson, a native of Ireland, who came with her parents in 1781 to eastern Pennsylvania, and settled in Chartiers township in 1800. She was a daughter of Abraham and Elizabeth (Chestnut) Anderson, natives of Ireland, who settled in Chartiers township, this county. They had a son in the war in 1812. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson died some time prior to 1850. The young people began married life on a farm in Chartiers township, where two children were born to them, viz.: Eliza Mary (Mrs. Alexander McConnell, of Chartiers township) and H. O. (subject of our sketch). Mrs. McKnight died in 1850, and in 1856 Mr. McKnight was married to Margaret, widow of John Campbell, and daughter of Thomas McEwen, of Allegheny county, Penn. Joseph McKnight was a soldier in the war of 1812, and was at Erie with Commodore Perry, at the time the fleet was building in 1813. He was an active politician of the Whig party, and afterward became a Republican. In religion he was a member and ruling elder of the Seceder Church at Hickory, this county. He died in 1872 on the home farm nearly in his hundredth year; he had lost his sight some years before. Mrs. McKnight died in 1892, in her ninety-second year. She was formerly a member of the Associate Reformed Church, which afterward became the United Presbyterian Church.

H. O. McKnight was born September 29, 1822, on the home farm in Chartiers township, and was the youngest child born to his father's first marriage. He received a district-school education, and, May 19, 1859, he married Margaret, daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Dawson) Welch, natives of Maryland, who came to Washington county and settled in Chartiers township, where their lives were passed. Mrs. McKnight died June 10, 1871, leaving four children: Sarah Anderson (Mrs. A. T. Cowden, of Mt. Pleasant township), Joseph A. (who married Lizzie J. Welch, and lives on the home farm), Florence Emma (who died in December, 1889, wife of A. C. Smith, of Canton township) and Ella Margaret Welch (living at home). On October 1, 1873, Mr. McKnight married Martha E., daughter of Thomas and Jane (Mills) Paxton, natives of Washington county and Ohio, respectively. Mr. Paxton died in 1886, and his widow is now living in Chartiers township. Mrs. McKnight died April 20, 1884. H. O. McKnight owns a good farm, containing 240 acres of fertile, well improved land, upon which is a large tract of timber. In 1879 he erected a comfortable barn, 70x36, and in 1878 built an eight-roomed, two-story house. He was formerly a Whig, and has been a member of the Republican party since its organization; he has held various township offices, having served as justice of the peace and member of the school board. He is a member of the Chartiers Cross Roads United Presbyterian Church, formerly of Mt. Pleasant U. P. Church, with which his wife was also connected.

JOHAN A. BOONE is a prominent representative of a pioneer family of Washington county. John Boone, his grandfather, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, where he was married to Nancy Badger. The family came to America many years ago, and first settled in Dauphin county, Penn., where Mr. Boone was engaged in farming and distilling, most of the wheat being then distilled, as produce brought no profit. He finally moved to Canonsburg, Penn., where he died. Their children were as follows: William, James, John, Mary, Jane, Margaret, Elizabeth, Joseph and Nancy. In politics Mr. Boone was a Whig, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church at Miller's Run.

Joseph Boone, son of John, was born in 1798, in Dauphin county, Penn., and came to Washington county, Penn., with his parents, when yet a child. He attended the schools of Washington county, and was early inducted into the mysteries of agriculture. In early life he was married to Nancy, daughter of John McCoy, a resident of Chartiers township, this county, and a native of Scotland. Mr. and Mrs. Boone began married life on the farm now occupied by John C. McNary, where they resided about three years, then purchased and moved upon a farm in Cecil township, and three years later settled in North Strabane township, this county. Mr. Boone died September 16, 1850, having made a success in life solely by his own exertions. He was a Whig, and in religion a member of the Chartiers Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Boone is yet living, now in her eighty-eighth year. She is the mother of the following children: John A., Samuel (who graduated at Jefferson College, Canonsburg, in August, 1853, and is now living in Ohio), Thomas (deceased) and Margaret (Mrs. Thomas Pettit).

John A. Boone, eldest son of Joseph and Nancy (McCoy) Boone, was born June 13, 1829, in Chartiers township, this county, and received his early education at the common schools. On May 28, 1874, he was united in marriage with Ada, daughter of Levi Griffith, and three children have been born to them, viz.: Ada C. and Alice E. (twins) and Joseph G. Mr. Boone is an energetic, representative citizen, in politics a Republican, and in church connection a member of the First Presbyterian congregation of Canonsburg. His home is a large and beautiful residence, pleasantly situated on the principal street of Canonsburg.

JAMES D. HUSTON, a public-spirited and enterprising citizen of Amwell township, is a grandson of Joseph Huston, who came to Washington, this county, in 1786, and established the old "Huston Inn" (as it was then called), situated on the east side of Main street, below Maiden. He kept the tavern until his death, making a good profit in the business. He married Miss Elizabeth Beckwith, and to their union were born the following children: Mrs. Sarah Meekirk (deceased at the age of ninety-one years), Mrs. Isabella Sarratt (deceased when aged forty-two), Cyrus (who died in his seventy-eighth year), Mary, wife of Zachariah Reynolds (she died when eighty-seven years old), Joseph (who died in his eighty-fifth year), Hamilton (who died in his eighty-first year), William B. (deceased in his eighty-fourth year; he continued the old "Huston Inn" for many years), and Mrs. Eliza Oliver (who died when eighty-six years old). At the time of his death, which occurred in 1813, Joseph Huston, the father of this family, owned nearly all the southwestern part of Washington, Penn. His wife survived him many years, and died about 1855, in her eighty-fifth year.

Cyrus Huston, son of Joseph, was born February 23, 1797, at Washington, Penn., in the old "Huston Inn." In early manhood he learned the trade of a cabinet maker, which he followed for a time in what is now known as Monongahela, thence in about 1843 removed to Pittsburgh, and was there during the great fire of 1845. He afterward sold out and invested in a tan-yard, opposite Horse Island, on the Allegheny side of the river; he was then a very wealthy man, but the flood of 1852 completely ruined him, and he afterward returned to Pittsburgh, where he lived about twenty years, engaged in the real estate and brokerage business. In 1848 he was married to Miss Mary Swart, and they had one child, Sarah. The mother lived but a short time afterward, and Mr. Huston was afterward married to Mrs. Nancy Howden, by which union were born James D. (whose name opens this sketch) and Mrs. Martha Belle Hornish. About 1872 Mr. Huston came to Washington county, Penn., where he remained till his death, which occurred May 3, 1871.

James D. Huston was born August 4, 1838, in Washington, Penn., and remained with his parents until they moved to Pittsburgh, when he went to Holmes county, Ohio, and for a time attended a small academy in Knox county, same State. He then went to Pittsburgh and learned the trade of cabinet making, which business he followed, together with carpentering, five years, and removing in 1859 to Amity, this county, he embarked in mercantile business. In 1860 he went to Monticello, Ind., and clerked in a store there for a time, but returning to Amity in 1861 he bought out James Hughes, Sr., and in April, 1865, again began mercantile business. On April 29, 1862, Mr. Huston was united in marriage with Rosetta Hughes, who has borne him five children, namely: William (deceased), born July 15, 1863; Charles (deceased), born September 23, 1864; Mrs. Doisey M. Burroughs, born November 28, 1867; Harry H., born January 14, 1870 (still living at home), and Jessie B. (Mrs. Kerr), born August 7, 1871. In 1869 Mr. Huston removed to Lone Pine, and served as postmaster there for sixteen years. He was president of the academy of Pleasant Valley three years. He has always taken an active interest in school matters, and is ever ready to aid a worthy cause. He has always been a Republican.

ALLEXANDER McCONNELL represents one of the earliest pioneers of Washington county, his grandfather, Alexander McConnell, who was a native of Virginia, coming to Washington county in 1787, with a brother Matthew. The brothers each took a farm, and Alexander afterward bought 200 acres of the "Black Woods" tract, of one Mr. Black. Alexander was married in Cecil township, this county, to Elizabeth McCrory, and they settled on a farm adjoining that of his grandson and namesake. He took an active part in the Whiskey Insurrection. In church relation he and his wife were members of the Seceder denomination. He died many years ago, being followed several years later by his wife. She was the mother of six children, viz.: Alexander, who resided in Cecil township; David, whose sketch follows; Prudence, wife of James Oram; Jane; Nancy; and Matthew, of Chartiers township, all now deceased.

David McConnell, son of Alexander and Elizabeth (McCrory) McConnell, was born in 1791, on the home farm in Cecil township, where he grew to manhood. In 1828 he was united in marriage with Sarah Campbell, who was born in 1805 in Cecil township, and to their union were born the following children: Alexander (who died at the age of fourteen years), Mary Margaret (Mrs. James Johnston, of Helena, Mont.), John C. (a widower, living in Washington, Iowa, near Ainsworth), Elizabeth (deceased, first married to James Giffin, then to Frank Collins, of Peters township, this county), David (who died at the age of four years), Jane (deceased in youth), Alexander (whose name opens this sketch), Isabella (Mrs. John Skiles, of Dallas county, Iowa), and Sarah (wife of J. R. Gladden, of Cecil township).

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. McConnell settled on the homestead in Cecil township. In politics he was formerly a Whig, then a Democrat, and served some years as supervisor. He and his wife were first connected with the U. P. Church at Robinson's Run, afterward uniting with the same society at Venice, he having been one of the organizers of the church in the latter place. David McConnell died in 1873, and was followed by his wife in 1881.

Alexander McConnell was born in 1840, on the old place in Cecil township, this county, attending during his boyhood the district schools of the vicinity. In 1881 he was married to Mary Jane, daughter of John and Mary (Spence) Matthews, natives of Cecil township; they moved to Jefferson county, Kans., where the father died in 1887, the mother following him to the grave in 1889. Alexander and Mary Jane McConnell settled on the place where they are now living, and which contains 109 well-cultivated acres. The barn, yet in a good condition, was erected in 1794, and the house was built in 1805. In politics he is a Democrat, but votes independently in county elections. He has served two or three terms as supervisor, and in religion he and his wife are members of the U. P. Church at Venice. They have three children: Esther Mary, Sarah Eveline and John Walter.

ROBERT HERRON, a descendant of a leading pioneer of North Strabane township, was born September 30, 1826, on the farm now occupied by his brother James. He is a son of Joseph Herron and grandson of James, whose father, Charles Herron, was born in Ireland, where he was married, and reared a large family, coming with them to America in an early day. His son James was born in County Down, Ireland, and passed his boyhood in his native land. He came to America in the latter part of the eighteenth century, locating in North Strabane township, this county, on the farm now owned by James Herron, the grandson. The place was then in a rude state of cultivation, but was soon transformed into a comfortable home. In early manhood Mr.

Herron was united in marriage with Rachel Reed, a resident of Ohio, and the following children were born to them: Charles, John, William, James, Robert, John, Joseph, Thomas and Rachel. Politically, Mr. Herron was a Democrat, and took an active part in the questions of the day. He was an earnest member of the Seceder Church.

Joseph Herron was born January 2, 1797, in North Strabane township, Washington county, on the farm of his father, and received his early education in the schools of the vicinity. On January 3, 1821, he was married to Margaret, daughter of Daniel Hastings, of Somerset township, this county, and then settled on the home place, where the remainder of his life was passed. In 1850 he erected the brick residence now occupied by his son James. To Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Herron were born children as follows: Rachel, born December 15, 1824; Robert, born September 30, 1826; James, born September 18, 1828; John, born July 24, 1830; Sarah J. (Mrs. Jonathan Peese), born April 22, 1833; Joseph, born December 8, 1834; Margaret A. (Mrs. Robert Munnell), born October 4, 1837; and Elizabeth M. (Mrs. John B. Herron), born October 6, 1842. Mr. Herron was a Democrat in politics, and served as judge of elections and school director. He was also a lieutenant in the militia, and in religious connection was a member and liberal supporter of the Seceder Church. Mr. Herron died January 25, 1852, and was followed by his wife March 18, 1854. Both are buried in the cemetery of the United Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek.

Robert Herron worked on the home farm during his boyhood, and on May 13, 1858, was united in marriage with Rachel E., daughter of John Berry, and she bore him the following children: William G., Margaret J. (Mrs. W. B. McNary), Lizzie R. (Mrs. M. H. Munce), Anna M. (Mrs. W. H. McNary), Sadie Thome and Robert Walker. Mr. Herron has always been a Democrat in politics, and has held various township offices. He is a very prominent citizen, and in religious connection he and his family are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Mt. Prospect, to which he gives a liberal support. Mr. Herron has in his possession one of the oldest Bibles in Washington county, which was formerly the property of one of his paternal ancestors.

RICHARD GLADDEN occupies a conspicuous position in the large circle of prominent agriculturists of Cecil township, and is descended from a pioneer family. The earliest ancestors of the name, whose history can be obtained, were William and Mary (Woods) Gladden, both of whom were born in eastern Pennsylvania. They came to Cecil township in May, 1795, and bought of one Nicholas Gaunce 206 $\frac{1}{4}$  acres, of which tract he had secured the patent in 1789, and which became their permanent home. After the death of William, the land became the property of Richard Gladden, and has continued to remain in the family name up to the present time.

Richard Gladden, son of William and Mary (Woods) Gladden, was born on the old homestead in Cecil township, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. In early life he was married to Mary Kelso, who was born near Noblestown, Allegheny Co., Penn. He brought his bride to the old farm and devoted his life to agricultural pursuits, also giving considerable attention to politics; he voted with the Whig and Republican parties. To the union of Richard and Mary Gladden came the following children: William, living in Canonsburg, Penn.; Martha, wife of Thomas Reed, living at Pasadena, Cal.; Benjamin John, residing in Carthage, Mo.; George, a physician and surgeon of Homestead, Allegheny Co., Penn.; Richard, whose sketch follows; and Joseph, living at Canonsburg, Penn. The father of this family died in 1864, the mother passing away in 1885. Both were members of the U. P. Church at Robinson's Run.

Richard Gladden, son of Richard and Mary (Kelso) Gladden, was born in 1855, in Cecil township, in a house which was used as a fort in colonial times. The schoolhouse which he first attended was built on the ground where an oil well is now in operation. On October 25, 1876, he was united in marriage with Lavina Tuten, who was born in Hickory, Mt. Pleasant township, this county, daughter of George and Catherine (Trimmer) Tuten, natives of eastern Pennsylvania, who settled in this county many years ago. The father died in Hickory, Penn., and the mother is yet living, in Pittsburgh. Richard and Lavina (Tuten) Gladden began married life on the farm in Cecil township which they now occupy, consisting of 200 acres of well-cultivated land. He has been engaged in the dairy business, and three oil wells are in operation on the place. In politics he is a Republican, and in religion Mr. and Mrs. Gladden are members of the U. P. Church at McDonald, Penn. They are the parents of three children, viz.: Anna Mary, Iva and Frank.

JW. GIFFIN is descended from a family who originally settled in eastern Pennsylvania. In 1795 Andrew and Jane (Hervey) Giffin bought 450 acres of land on the boundary line of Allegheny and Washington counties. They settled in Cecil township, this county, where he died in 1815, being followed by his wife a few years later.

John Giffin, son of Andrew and Jane Giffin, was born in 1785, in Chester county, Penn., and when ten years of age came with his parents to Cecil township, where his youth was passed. In 1804 he was united in marriage with Jane Hanson, who was born about the year 1787, in Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn., and they settled permanently on a farm in Allegheny county, to which he devoted his time; he took an active part in the Whig and Republican factions. He died in 1870, having been several years preceded by his wife. Their children were as follows: Andrew H. (living in Cecil township), Margaret (deceased in youth), Jane (widow of William Young, in Cecil township), Alice (wife of John Ballantine, in Muskingum county, Ohio), Nancy (who died in 1890, in New Concord, Ohio, wife of Andrew Hanson), J. W. (whose sketch is given below), Jacob Hanson (deceased), William (a widower, living in Canonsburg, Penn.), Mary (Mrs. Richard Boyce, of Missouri), Thomas (a widower, living in Kansas), Rebecca (deceased wife of Archibald Rutherford, of West Virginia) and Sarah (Mrs. George Rutherford, of West Virginia). The parents were members of the Associate Reformed Church at Robinson's Run.

J. W. Giffin was born December 1, 1815, in Allegheny county, Penn., and was educated in the log-cabin subscription schools of Fayette township. He was first married to Elizabeth Patterson, a native of Allegheny county, daughter of James Patterson, who was born in Ireland, and immigrated to this country many years ago. The young people settled in Fayette township, Allegheny county, and the wife died in Cecil township, this county, in 1860, leaving three children, viz.: Mary Abigail, Samuel Hanson (living at McKeesport, Penn.) and James P. (a widower, of Pittsburgh, Penn.). On March 19, 1863, Mr. Giffin was united in marriage with Patience Morrison, a native of Nottingham township, this county, the ceremony taking place in Cecil township. She was a daughter of Maj. John Morrison, an early pioneer of Nottingham township. This wife died in 1870 in Cecil township, leaving four children, as follows: Elizabeth, Mrs. William R. Miller, of Mt. Washington, Allegheny Co., Penn.; John B., living at home; Anna, wife of Harry Wilson, of Noblestown, Penn., and Ella Y., living at home. In 1874 Mr. Giffin bought an improved farm of 111 acres adjoining Venice, this county, where he carries on general farming, and upon which is an oil well nearly ready for operation. Politically he was formerly a Whig, and has been a member of the Republican party since its organization; has served as supervisor, member of the school board, assessor and in various other offices of public trust. He is a member of the U. P. Church at Venice.

ROBERT JOHNSTON. The Johnston family were for many years residents of Allegheny county, Penn., where one James Johnston was born and reared. In early life he was married to Jane Morrow, a native of the same county, and the young couple immediately settled in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn. He died in his seventy-third year, his wife passing away at the age of seventy two, leaving a family of children, among whom was a son Robert.

Robert Johnston was born September 30, 1817, on the farm in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn., and during his earlier years assisted his father with the work on the place. On March 2, 1841, he married Miss Rebecca Black, and they began housekeeping on a farm which he had purchased of his father, near Canonsburg, this county. In 1863 he bought 141 acres of land in North Strabane township, this county, to which he removed in the fall of that year. On this farm he has continued to reside, and has reared four children, namely: Sarah Jane, James L. (living in Canonsburg), Richard and Mary Eliza. The mother died in 1872, at the age of fifty-eight years, but her memory is ever living in the hearts of those who knew and loved her. The family are members of the First Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg, and Mr. Johnston has taken an active part in questions of public interest, having served in various township offices.

Richard Johnston, the second son of Robert and Rebecca Johnston, was born February 26, 1848, on the place near Canonsburg, this county, and has passed his life under the parental roof, receiving a common-school education. On November 13, 1873, he married Anna M., daughter of Isaac and Jane (Matthews) Weaver, and she has borne him three children, namely: Eva M., Robert B. and Harry W. Like his father, Richard Johnston affiliates with the Democratic party, and in religion he and his wife are members of the First Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg.

ROBERT WARRELL. Among the esteemed residents of East Finley township, none are more worthy than the subject of this sketch. He is a son of James Warrell, who was a native of County Donegal, Ireland, to which country Washington county is indebted for many of her substantial and enterprising citizens.

James Warrell received a fair education, of which he made good use in later years, and learned the shoemaker's trade. In about 1815 he was united in marriage with Sarah Wilson, a native of the same county, and before leaving Ireland the following children were born to them: Thomas (deceased), Rebecca (living in Allegheny county, Penn.), Rachel (deceased), Charles (residing in Claysville, this county) and James (deceased). Mr. Warrell was engaged in the mercantile and broker business at Convoy, County Donegal, Ireland, and during the war of 1812 was frequently called on business to New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia and many other large eastern cities. In 1825 he immigrated with his family to America, and landing at New York, resided in that city for some time, where another child, Robert, was born to him. In 1826 he moved to Washington county, Penn., locating near Claysville, Donegal township, where he purchased some property, upon which was a hotel, conducted for a short time by John Valentine, then purchasing a farm, engaged in agriculture. Three other children were there born: William, a farmer in East Finley township, this county; Sarah Ann (Mrs. William L. Oliver), of East Finley township, and John, a farmer of Richland county, Ohio. Mr. Warrell was never sick a day in his life before his last illness, and was a man of wonderful vigor and vitality. He once walked from Claysville to Pittsburgh and returned, in one day and two hours of the night. Politically he was a Republican, and in religious faith a member of the Presbyterian Church. His wife died in 1831, and after a short sickness he sank peacefully to rest.

Robert Warrell (the eldest of the children born in America) was born in New York City, July 4, 1826, and was early brought by his parents to Washington county, Penn., where he received a limited education. After attaining his majority he was employed as a tanner, afterward becoming a partner in the business with his brother. He then clerked in the dry-goods store of George K. Scott, Washington, Penn., for some time, when he went to Pittsburgh and clerked for Stephen Barton, a jeweler and notion dealer on the corner of Wood and Water streets. At this time there were no railroads in the city. On July 30, 1850, Mr. Warrell was united in marriage with Rebecca Crisswell, who was born November 15, 1825, a daughter of Richard and Jemima (McKenzie) Crisswell. To this union two children were born: Sarah E. (widow of Rev. William Gamble, a M. E. minister and native of Allegheny county), born May 29, 1851 (has four children: Mamie R., Clara E., Estelle and Walter D.), and Robert B., born September —, 1854 (deceased when four months old). After his marriage Mr. Warrell remained some time in Pittsburgh, and then moved to Henry county, Ohio, locating near Napoleon (the county seat). He remained there two years, returning in 1856 to Washington county, Penn., where he finally settled on his present well-improved farm, situated five miles south of Claysville, in East Finley township, this county, and successfully followed agricultural pursuits. Mr. Warrell is a versatile man, and has an extensive acquaintance throughout the county. He is an enthusiastic worker in the Republican party, and has been called on to fill several political offices, but has invariably declined. He and his wife are both members of the Stony Point M. E. Church. Their widowed daughter, with her four children, resides with her parents.

JAMES SMITH was born January 1, 1817, on the old farm in Washington county, where he remained until he reached the age of maturity. He is a grandson of Demas Smith, who emigrated to this country from Germany, and was married to Elizabeth Zook, a native of the same country. They had the following family of children: Betsey (Mrs. Johns), Joseph, Peter, Polly (Mrs. Jamso), Susan (Mrs. Clark), Christopher, Hannah (Mrs. Huffman), Rachel (Mrs. Seales), Abram, Susan, Dennis, David and Catherine (Mrs. Meeks). Mr. Smith served seven years in the war of the Revolution, being among the band of suffering heroes who for the cause of liberty endured those terrible winters at Valley Forge. He entered Washington county about 1785, locating in West Bethlehem township, at the head of Daniels run. Here he resided two years, and then moved to Greene county, settling on a farm of 200 acres in what is now Washington township. He there passed the remainder of his life, dying about 1824 in his ninety-sixth year. In politics, he was an Old-time Whig.

Peter Smith, son of Demas and Elizabeth Smith, was born in the State of Pennsylvania (east of the mountains) in 1775, and in 1785 removed with his father's family to West Bethlehem township, Washington county. He remained with his parents (who afterward moved to Greene county) until he was twenty nine years old, but had no educational privileges. In 1804 he was united in marriage with Priscilla Cooper, daughter of Moses and Sarah Cooper, of Amwell township, this county, and to this union were born children as follows: Dennis, Moses (deceased), Polly (Mrs. Garber), Peter, Betsey (Mrs. Riggle), Sally (Mrs. Potts, residing in Missouri), James, David (deceased), Mrs. Eunice Johnson (deceased), Hannah (Mrs. Hufford) and Priscilla (Mrs. Bealer). Mr. Smith was a hard working and successful man, owning at one time 300 acres of land. He was a Whig, and took an active interest in the political affairs of the township and county. He and his father were for many years members of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Smith died in 1840, Mr. Smith in 1848.

James Smith, son of Peter and Priscilla Smith, received his education in the common schools of Washington county, Penn., and is fond of his torical and current literature. In 1843 he was united in marriage with Margaret Johnson, daughter of Zenis and Sarah Johnson, of Greene county, Penn., and to this union were born two children: Johnson, a resident of McKeesport, Allegheny Co., Penn., and Sarah, deceased wife of Mr. Watson. After his marriage Mr. Smith moved on the farm he now occupies, which he purchased when his father died. His first wife dying March 4, 1871, Mr. Smith married for his second wife Mrs. Sarah Paul, widow of Philo Paul. In political affiliation Mr. Smith was a Whig, first casting his vote for Gen. Harrison, and since its formation has been an active member of the Republican party. He is much interested in local politics, and has been supervisor and school director for a number of years. He has been a valuable member of the Baptist Church forty-seven years.

WILSON T. DENNY, son of Josiah, grandson of William and Elizabeth Denny, was born September 11, 1843, in Cecil township, this county. The grandparents came with their family in 1790 from eastern Pennsylvania to Washington county, where both died. William Denny was a soldier in the Revolutionary war.

Josiah Denny was born June 16, 1798, in Washington county, Penn., and passed his youth on the home place. On October 19, 1820, he was united in marriage with Jane Simeox, who was born August 18, 1798, in this county. They settled on the farm in Cecil township now owned by W. T. Denny, and children were born to them as follows: William W. (deceased March 3, 1868), a physician and surgeon, of Pittsburgh, Penn.; Joseph, living in Noble county, Ohio; Mary (wife of William H. McClay), died in October, 1883, at Cumberland, Ohio; Martha Jane, Mrs. Hugh Liggett, of Muskingum county, Ohio; John A., living at Canonsburg, Penn.; and W. T., whose sketch follows. The father passed away April 1, 1856, followed by his widow July 7, 1868. Both were members of the Presbyterian Church at Miller's Run.

W. T. Denny was educated in the schools of the home district, and then followed agricultural pursuits. On February 27, 1866, he made choice of a life companion in the person of Margaret Tidball, who was born December 24, 1845, a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Nicholson) Tidball, all three being natives of Robinson township, Allegheny Co., Penn. The father passed away May 12, 1884, the mother on November, 10, 1849.

Mr. and Mrs. Denny have resided on the old homestead since their marriage. Many improvements have been made on the place since the present owner has had possession. A good house and two good barns have been erected, one barn having been burned. The farm contains seventy-five acres of well cultivated, fertile land. In the autumn of 1871 Mr. Denny embarked in mercantile business at Burgettstown, but in 1876 returned to the old place, resuming his former occupation. He votes the Republican ticket, and is now serving his second term as a member of the school board. He and his wife are members of the U. P. Church at Venice, this county. Four children have been born to them, viz.: Harry W., William W., Eva Jane and Laura M.

ELIJAH MILES. Of the many prominent and esteemed citizens of Buffalo township, the name of this family ranks among the first.

Elijah Miles was a son of Elijah Miles, who was born in the State of Virginia in 1765, and in his later years removed to Canton township, Washington Co., Penn. He died August 27, 1834, in Ohio, on his farm (where he was settling up his business affairs), honored by all who knew him. His wife and four children survived him at the date of his death. John died in 1891, in Marietta, Ohio, at the age of eighty-five years; Mary died January 20, 1837, in the twenty-eighth year of her age; Nancy died April 13, 1837, in the twenty-sixth year of her age. Their mother, Elizabeth, died at the age of sixty years.

Elijah Miles, our subject, the only surviving one of the four children, was born in Canton township, Washington Co., Penn. He moved to Keokuk county, Iowa, in 1855, and came back to Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., in 1856, where he permanently settled. Elijah Miles was married in 1862 to Caroline, daughter of Lewis Snyder, and the children born to this union were Mary, wife of Frank M. Caffey, of Buffalo township, Elizabeth and John.

Lewis Snyder, father of Mrs. Caroline Miles, was born in 1801 in Germany. He was well educated, and became a soldier in the German army. He was married to Catherine Mary Cook, and the children born to them were Caroline, who was born October 6, 1835, in Germany, and came with her parents to America; and Charles, George, Louisa, Lewis, William, Catherine and Frank, born in America, the last named being now deceased, the only one in the Snyder family that has been taken away. The living children of this family are all residents of Washington county, Penn. In 1844 Mr. Snyder came to America with his family, and first settled on a farm in Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., where he made his permanent home.

JAMES A. THOMPSON. Among the self-made men of Washington county, none are better deserving of prominent mention in this Biographical Record than the above-named citizen. His parents were Allen and Martha (Lindsay) Thompson, early pioneers of Washington county. The father was born in 1794, and the mother in 1797. The following children were born to them: William, John L., Josiah, James A., Allen, Martha J., Mary Ann, Harvey H., Sarah, William, John A. (deceased), and Ebenezer (deceased). The mother passed away in 1870, followed by the father in 1872.

James A. Thompson was born December 10, 1822, on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn. He assisted his father in the care of the farm and, receiving but little financial aid from home, began life with no capital but that of a willing heart, strong hands and cheerful spirit. On Christmas Day, 1845, he was united in marriage with Margaret Griffith, and soon after their wedding he rented his father's farm and continued to live there as a tenant for several years, finally purchasing the old place. His wife died April 3, 1857, leaving two small children: Allen and Samuel (deceased), and on March 9, 1858, he was joined in wedlock with Margaret, daughter of James and Mary (Geis) Kerr. To this union have been born four children: Mary Eva, William K., Martha E. and Sadie M. The name of Ella Steele, a little orphan girl, completes this family circle, for she is cherished as tenderly as their own by her foster-parents. Mr. Thompson has done all in his power to advance the educational interests of the community. He has served as supervisor, but though shirking no responsibility, he has no desire for political honors. He declares that "the Republican party is good enough for him," and votes accordingly. He is a wide-awake, progressive man. In 1858 he sold the old place, and bought 156 acres now known as the "Guthrie farm," in Chartiers township, and in 1875 bought the eighty three acres which is now his home. To this he has added thirty-three acres of another tract, and is now living near Canonsburg.

AR. DUVALL. The Duvall family, of which this gentleman is a prominent representative, has for many years been closely associated with the progress and improvement of Washington county.

Alexander and Elizabeth Duvall were natives of Maryland, born of French descent. They came to Pennsylvania many years ago, and located in Washington county, where he lived several years, and then settled on a farm in Fayette county, near Brownsville, where he died at the age of eighty-five years. Of their children are named John, David, Jacob, Lewis, Eli, Jehu, Hiram and Elizabeth, all now deceased.

David Duvall was born April 7, 1785, in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his youth on the home farm. He began life with no financial aid, but willing hands, an active brain and stout body proved sufficient capital, and he soon acquired a comfortable property, all in agricultural pursuits. When a young man he was united in marriage with Mary Bailey, who was born in 1782, in East Pike Run township, and they reared the following family of children: Nancy, widow of S. Robison, now residing in California, Washington Co., Penn.; Eliza, wife of John B. Hanen, of East Pike Run township; Ruth, widow of George Garrett, a resident of California, Washington county; Mary; Alexander B.; John; Lewis; Abigail, and Sarah, of whom the four last mentioned are now deceased. The father in his political affiliations voted with the Republican party. He died August 24, 1865, having been preceded by his wife in 1862.

Alexander B. Duvall, son of David and Mary (Bailey) Duvall, was born March 19, 1825, in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn. He received a subscription-school education, and grew to manhood on the home farm, working the old place on shares until the death of his father. In 1870 he was united in marriage with Josephine Pester, who was born in Washington county, Penn., a daughter of Moses and Elizabeth (Smith) Pester, also natives of this county. Her father was a cabinet maker at Coal Centre, Penn., and in politics voted with the Democratic party. He and his wife died in Coal Centre, leaving two children, Ann and Josephine (Mrs. Duvall). To the union of Alexander B. and Josephine (Pester) Duvall the following children have been born: Emma, David R., Nellie S., Carolus, Anna Thames, Chauncey Slocum, John Shanton, Flora G., Belva L., Pierre L., Alexander V., Cassius A., and Jessie.

The old homestead contains 210 acres of well-cultivated land, and is universally admitted to be one of the finest farms in Washington county. In 1875 Mr. Duvall erected a handsome two-story house upon the property, commanding a beautiful landscape view for many miles, carrying the eye to the mountain beyond. Since 1852 he has been a member of the F. & A. M. at Coal Centre. He is a fearless, conscientious man, and worships at the Disciple Church, his wife being identified with the Methodist Episcopal denomination.

JAMES H. ALLEN. Among the prosperous citizens of Carroll township, perhaps none have had more varied or thrilling experiences of life than this gentleman. His grandfather, David Allen, was an early settler of Forward township, Allegheny Co., Penn., where he carried on farming and stock raising, also operating a distillery. He married Mary Warne, who bore him children as follows: John, Dorcas, Joseph, James, David, Eliza, Frances, Mary and Bela. The father of this family died about the year 1823. He was a leading member of the Presbyterian Church at Round Hill, and in politics he was a Democrat.

David P. Allen, father of subject, was born in 1805, in Forward township, Allegheny Co., Penn., and learned the trade of tanner. He married Miss Mary Whorley, and, with the exception of short intervals, their lives were passed in Forward township, Allegheny county. He owned twenty-one acres of coal land, and followed farming during his later years. On October 30, 1889, he died, aged eighty-four years six months, leaving the following children: James H., Joseph W. (living in Kansas), Ann Eliza (deceased), Dorcas (Mrs. McConnell, living in Majors, Buffalo Co., Neb.), Bradford (residing near Denver, Colo.), Albert G. (a resident of Pittsburgh, Penn.), Florence (Mrs. McTeeter, of Bradlock, Penn.), and Mrs. Mary J. Fleming, of Fayette City, Penn. The mother is yet living on the old homestead in Allegheny county, Penn., aged eighty-three years. In politics the father was a Whig and Republican.

James H. Allen was born November 23, 1832, in Wheeling, W. Va., and was brought with his parents to Allegheny county, Penn., when an infant. At the age of twenty years he took a course of engineering at Brownsville, Penn., and passed four years learning the machinist's business. After completing his studies he became a steamboat engineer, and for thirty-five years sailed the western waters—the Ohio and Mississippi—going as far north as St. Paul, and as far south as New Orleans. During the Civil war he was engaged in transporting troops and provisions, and was held as a prisoner for some time on the Cumberland river. He was on a boat that sank in the Ohio river, near Battleground Island. After the war he returned home, and February 28, 1867, he was married to Miss M. A. Thompson, daughter of Wilson Thompson, of Monongahela. The children born to them were as follows: Bertha (deceased), Wilson T., Albert and Harry. Wilson Thompson was a native of Maryland, whence, when a young man, he came to Monongahela, and learned the trade of glass blowing, which he followed some time. He was married to Margaret, daughter of Elias Watkins, of Monongahela, and the children born to them were: Martha A. and William (deceased in infancy). The father died in 1872, the mother in 1840, and both are buried in Monongahela. He was a leading member of the M. E. Church, and was deeply interested in educational affairs.

Mr. and Mrs. James H. Allen have a beautiful home in Bellwood, near Monongahela, where they have resided some fifteen years. They are members of the Methodist Church. Mr. Allen is one of the leading citizens of his locality, a typical self-made man, one whose integrity is unquestioned. In his political affiliations he is a staunch supporter of the Republican party.

JOSEPH HAWKINS. The Hawkins family have long been residents of Pennsylvania. Robert and Ruth Hawkins (grandparents of Joseph) were born in eastern Pennsylvania, where they married and reared the following children: William (a resident of Newton Falls, Trumbull Co., Ohio), Robert (living in West Bethlehem township, this county), Elizabeth (living in Springfield, Ohio, widow of George Taylor), Lydia A. (residing in Ohio, widow of Eli Hill), Mary (widow of Thomas Dutton, Ohio), Louisa (wife of Joseph Weaver, a farmer of Ohio), Elijah, Thomas and Gideon, the latter two being deceased. The father of this family was a preacher for the Disciple Church; in politics he voted the Republican ticket. He died in 1850, at the age of seventy-two years, after a busy life in agricultural pursuits.

Elijah Hawkins was born September 17, 1815, in West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., and was reared on the farm. He received a business education, and began mercantile life at Beallsville, this county, remaining there five years. He then moved to Zollarsville, this county, conducting business in that place for twenty years, but finally sold out and retired to his present farm in Pike Run township. He was first married to Mary A. Greenfield, a native of Washington county, Penn., who bore him one daughter, Mary A. (wife of James Hedge, a farmer of Jefferson county, Iowa). The mother died in 1841, and in 1842 Elijah Hawkins was married to Elizabeth Weaver, who was born in 1815, in Washington county, Penn. Their children were as follows: Louisa (wife of Isaac Hill, a farmer of West Pike Run township), Ruth (Mrs. Stephen Hill, of Polk county, Mo.), George (a farmer of Fayette county, Penn.), Joseph (of whom a sketch follows), Theodore (a merchant of Beallsville), Theophilus (farming in the home place), Walter (farming in West Pike Run township), William (deceased) and Avorilla (deceased). The mother of these children died in 1889, in her seventy-second year. The father is a preacher in the Christian Church, of which both his wives were earnest members. In politics he votes with the Republican party, and is interested in both the civil and religious welfare of the people.

Joseph Hawkins was born September 15, 1848, in Beallsville, West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., being reared in the village and educated at the public schools. In 1873 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Deemes, who was born September 15, 1841, in Washington county, Penn., a daughter of Mark F. and Margaret Deemes. Her parents were both natives of this county, and reared the following children: Joshua (a resident of Colorado), George W. (farming in Beallsville, Penn.), Maria (wife of W. F. Wilson, of West Pike Run township, this county), Samuel P. (a ranchman of Nebraska), Elizabeth (Mrs. Hawkins), and Willie and Oliver, both deceased in infancy. The parents both died in their sixty-fifth year.

To Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins have been born two daughters: Maudie and Ada. In politics Mr. Hawkins votes the Republican ticket. He is a member of no church.

SAMUEL J. GHRIST, one of the most prosperous and influential citizens of Burgettstown, is a son of Isaac Ghrist, who was born in Maryland, where he was reared and educated. He was a blacksmith by trade, and in early life was united in marriage with Maria Wilson, also a native of Maryland, where the young people continued to reside for several years after their marriage. They then moved to Fayette county, Penn., finally going farther west, to near Ironton, Ohio. The children born to them were: Samuel J., John, Peter, Isabel, Isaac, Elias, William, Sabina and Sarah A., of whom Samuel J. is the only one living in Washington county. The father and other members of the family died of cholera during the outbreak of that disease at Ironton. The mother afterward married Mr. McCoy of Ironton, and after his death removed to Illinois with her sons, Elias and William, where she died.

Samuel J. Ghrist, the subject proper of this sketch, was born January 1, 1818, in the State of Maryland, and when a young man came from Fayette county to Smith township, this county. He commenced working on a farm for one John Hobbs, remaining with him four years, at the end of which time he began working on another farm. Several years later he purchased a small place, to which he added from time to time, and he now owns over 230 acres of good land in Smith township, and a fine residence in Burgettstown. In March, 1838, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of James and Jane (Vance) Stevenson, of Smith township, the latter of whom was a daughter of William Vance, of Vance's Fort. The following named children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Ghrist: Jane, deceased February 15, 1892; Sarah M.; Martha A.; M. Elizabeth; Catherine W., wife of J. R. McNary, of Smith township (they have six children); Anna M., deceased January 31, 1892, was married to G. M. Miller, of Claysville, now a druggist of Burgettstown (had one child, Sarn Edna); and S. Vance Ghrist, now an attorney at law in South Dakota. He married Miss May Putnam, who holds the honor of teaching the first school in Hand county, S. Dak. They have two children: Elizabeth Vance and Bayard Sidney. The mother of this family dying March 3, 1854, Mr. Ghrist married in August, 1873, Rachel Stroud, of Steubenville, Ohio, who died July 24, 1888, leaving no issue. In 1878 Mr. Ghrist moved to Burgettstown, where he is yet residing, his home being cared for by his daughters, who are still under the paternal roof. His success in life is to be attributed solely to his own efforts, which have been untiring, and now, a man of about seventy five years of age, he is in the enjoyment of good health. Until he was twenty years of age he never wore a coat of any kind, only a kind of knitted jacket, and his first coat he worked for and earned by the sweat of his brow. His farm, when he came to it, was but partly cleared, but by assiduous labor he highly improved it. His present home in Burgettstown he bought, besides which he owns other houses in that borough. The family are all great readers. Catharine and Martha were educators in Washington and Allegheny counties, and S. V. in Washington county and in several western States, and has been admitted to the practice of law in Kansas, Illinois and South Dakota. In political opinion Mr. Ghrist was formerly a Whig, afterward a Republican upon the organization of the party; has been actively interested in politics, and has held various township offices. He is a member, and has been a liberal supporter, of the Presbyterian Church from early youth, at the same time contributing largely to all charitable and public enterprises.

HUGH McDOWELL, a prominent agriculturist of Peters township, is a son of Joseph McDowell, and a grandson of Thomas McDowell. The grandfather was born in Lancaster county, Penn., and followed farming and hunting, being an enthusiast in the latter pursuit. In early life he selected a life companion in the person of Jeanette Clark, and of the children born to their union the following are named: Joseph, James and Jane.

Joseph McDowell, son of Thomas, was born about 1790, in Lancaster county, Penn., where he grew to manhood. In 1808 he and his father came to Washington county, where the latter bought a farm in Mt. Pleasant township. After the death of his father Joseph worked on neighboring farms, and devoted his leisure hours to hunting, many a turkey and deer falling beneath his unerring rifle. In early life he was married to Eleanor McKnight, of Washington county, who bore him seven children, viz.: John, Joseph, Hugh, Mary, Jane, Elizabeth and Ellen; of these Hugh (of whom a sketch follows), Ellen and Jane (wife of Benjamin Vannatta, of Noblestown, Allegheny county) are yet living.

Hugh McDowell was born September 28, 1815, near Hickory, Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn. His youth was passed in rural pursuits, and at the age of seventeen years he learned carpentry, a trade he followed twenty years. He finally purchased 173 acres of land in the Chartiers Valley, taking possession of the place in 1863, where he has since carried on general farming, including sheep raising. On February 25, 1847, he was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of James McConnell, a pioneer farmer of Cecil township, this county, and their children were as follows: Ellen J. (wife of W. J. Johnston), Elizabeth, Margaret and Ida (these three died of diphtheria in 1861), Samuel (deceased in 1863), Mary M. (living at home), John J. (living on a part of the Alexander McConnell homestead, being now part of the McDowell farm, married to Elizabeth McMillian), and Effie A. (living with her parents). The daughters all attended the academy at Canonsburg.

Many improvements have been made on the place, and Mr. McDowell personally erected the handsome buildings thereon. Politically he is a staunch Republican, having originally been an Anti-slavery Whig, and served as a delegate to the convention held at Pittsburgh when the Republican party was organized. He has held many local offices, but does not care to take a prominent place in politics. In religious faith he is a member of the United Presbyterian Church, in which he has served in many ways. Mr. McDowell did not inherit a cent, but, by the industry and economy of himself and wife, now owns one of the best farms in the country. This should serve as an incentive to young men in like circumstances, to go and do likewise.

ELI WORRELL is a son of Elias, and grandson of Robert Worrell, the latter having been a pioneer of Fayette county, Penn. Robert was a relative of William Penn.

Elias Worrell was born in 1798, on his father's farm in Fayette county, Penn., and came with his parents to Allen township, Washington county, when a boy. In early life he was united in marriage with Sarah Allen, a native of Allen township, this county, who bore him children as follows: Allen, a cabinet maker, who died at California, Penn., July 24, 1866; William, a merchant of Brownsville, Penn., who died June 19, 1872; John, a clerk on a steamboat, died July 25, 1872, at Brownsville, and Joshua, who enlisted in 1862, in the Eighteenth Cavalry, under General Kilpatrick. After the war he moved to Kansas, then returned to Washington county, where he died February 22, 1872. For his second wife Elias Worrell married Aves Smith, a native of East Pike Run township, and their children were S. W., wife of C. L. Kinder, who died in 1892, at Scenery Hill; Mary Elizabeth, wife of E. A. Williams, of East Pike Run township, and E. L., whose name opens this sketch. Mr. and Mrs. Worrell always resided in Allen township. Mr. Worrell owned land in Wooster, Ohio. In politics he was an active Republican, having held various local offices. He died May 1, 1873, having been preceded to the grave by his wife July 6, 1861.

E. L. Worrell was born November 12, 1848, on the home farm in Allen township, Washington county, received a district school education and also attended the Normal at California, Penn. He was married March 2, 1881, to Emma, daughter of George W. and Caroline (Riggs) Hazelbaker, and a native of Allen township, this county. Her parents were born in Washington county. Both parents are now living in this county. Mr. and Mrs. Worrell have had three children, namely: J. H., Cora and Irwin. The father is an active member of the Republican party, and has held the position of county auditor since the fall of 1890, receiving 6,686 votes. The farm contains 106 acres of good land. In religious faith Mr. and Mrs. Worrell are members of the Methodist Church at Ebenezer. He studied pharmacy when a young man, with the intention of becoming a druggist; but at the solicitation of his father, took charge of the farm and has ever since been an agriculturist. Mr. Worrell has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church since boyhood, serving as superintendent of Sabbath school, secretary of the board of trustees and leader of the choir. He has been administrator, trustee and assignee of many estates, and has always been faithful in every position.

ABRAM COLVIN is a son of Stephen Colvin, whose father, Vincent, was an early settler of Fallowfield township. The latter invested largely in land, having at one time owned nearly 2,000 acres in Fallowfield township. On March 28, 1780, he received a grant for the home place, which was situated on Pigeon creek, and contained 470 acres. The following children were born to Vincent Colvin: Stephen (who inherited 200 acres of the old place), John, Vincent, Joshua, Moses, Lott, Agnes (Mrs. Powell), Susanna (Mrs. Wilson), Charlotte (Mrs. Frye), Lucy (Mrs. Frye) and Harriet, who married a Baxter.

Stephen Colvin was born in 1778, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., and became a leading agriculturist, devoting special attention to stock raising. He was married to Mary, daughter of Abram Frye, who married a Miss Wilson, of Washington county, who bore him thirteen children, whose names are given as follows: Hester, Julia, Nancy, Abram, Lucinda, Sarah, Stephen, Mary, Elizabeth, John, Lewis, Rebecca and Vincent, of whom Vincent and Lewis enlisted in the army, Vincent dying while in the service. The father died in 1846.

Abram Colvin was born April 21, 1820, on the homestead in Fallowfield township, and his education was received in the log-cabin schoolhouse of the district. In 1848 he was married to Miss Frye, daughter of Abraham, and granddaughter of Samuel Frye, a farmer of Washington county, who erected the first house on the west side of the Monongahela river, in this county. Samuel Frye was born in 1729, in Virginia, and was there married to Christina Speers, who was born in 1752 in the same State. They came overland to Washington county at a very early day, and July 19, 1792, took out a "tomahawk right" to a large tract of land in Fallowfield township, where the Gibson distillery is now located. He was a famous hunter, and also worked on the farm, remaining in the neighboring fort at night for protection from the Indians. He died in 1814, his widow, November 9, 1841.

Abraham Frye, son of Samuel and Christina (Speers) Frye, was born in 1792, on the home farm in Fallowfield township. He received a subscription-school education, and in early life was married to Isabella Ringland, a native of Washington county, who bore him eleven children, namely: Samuel and John, both in Allen township; Christina, Mrs. Abram Colvin; Abraham, who entered the service in Washington county, and is now living near Nashville, Tenn.; Henry, a resident of Sumner county, Tenn., on the Cumberland river; Noah, who died in Fallowfield township; Sarah, wife of Thomas McGowan, Lock No. 4, same township; Jackson, living in Cowley county, Kans., enlisted and was taken prisoner, being confined in Andersonville prison eleven months; Clarissa, married to Alexander Allman, and died in East Pike Run township; Smith; and Isabelle, wife of Elgy T. Van Voorhis, of Kansas City, Mo. After their marriage Abraham and Isabella Frye settled on the lower part of the old homestead in Fallowfield township. He was actively interested in public matters, first affiliating with the Democratic party, then becoming a Whig and Republican. He died December 11, 1866, followed by his widow April 12, 1881, she having lived to see her youngest daughter the mother of twelve children. Both parents were members of the Disciple Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Colvin are the parents of seven children, namely: Stephen, Belle, Abram, Christiana, Smith, Fremont and Ellsworth, of whom the youngest child has for the past five years been a resident of Los Angeles, Cal. The home farm contains 110 acres of land, located about five miles southwest of Monongahela City, where Mr. Colvin deals extensively in stock. Politically, he votes with the Republican party.

HENRY M. CONKLIN, one of the most prominent of the agricultural citizens of Morris township, is a native of the same, born April 12, 1835. He is a worthy representative of one of the pioneer families of his native township.

John Conklin, his grandfather, was born in New Jersey, and in 1790 moved with his family to Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., locating near the town of Sparta. John Conklin had seven children, of whom one son, Isaac, was born in the State of Pennsylvania in 1805. In 1825 he was married to Lydia Sears, also a native of Pennsylvania, and the following children were born to this union: Sarah Ann (deceased wife of William Rogers, of Iowa), Elizabeth (living in Greene county, Penn., the widow of Morgan Thompson), John (a farmer of the same county), William (a farmer near Van Buren, in Morris township), Henry M., Oliver S. (a resident of Missouri), Margaret (living in the State of Kansas, married to John A. W. Dyer), Samuel A. (a prominent practicing physician of Canton, Ohio), Stephen Munroe (a farmer of Morris township), Warren B. (living near Sparta, this county), and Lydia Viola (wife of I. N. Lucas, a physician in North Dakota).

Henry M. Conklin, whose name opens this sketch, received a limited education at the common schools of the home district, and at the age of twenty-one years commenced to learn the trade of painting with his brother John, his financial wealth being, at the start, very limited indeed. After working at his trade for a number of years in the different parts of the county, and in Western Virginia, he returned in 1861 to Washington county. On February 28, 1861, he was united in marriage with Jerusha Jane Blakeway, a native of East Finley township, this county, daughter of Elizabeth and Humphrey Blakeway, both of whom died in that township, and lie buried in the graveyard at Old Concord, Penn. On March 14, 1861, Mr. and Mrs. Conklin moved to their present home, which is now a well-improved farm situated two miles northeast of Prosperity, where he has erected one amongst the finest residences in the township. Mrs. Jerusha Jane Conklin died September 26, 1889, and lies buried in the cemetery at Prosperity. On October 31, 1891, Mr. H. Conklin married Miss Mattie Sampson, daughter of Abraham

H. M. Conklin

Sampson, of East Finley township, and one son, Grover Stephenson, was born to them September 6, 1892. Politically Mr. Conklin has been a Democrat, and has served as inspector of elections in his township. In 1853 he became united with the Church of Upper Ten-Mile, at Prosperity, Washington Co., Pennsylvania.

JOHAN A. McCALMONT, one of the leading dairymen and a successful agriculturist of Robinson township, is a native-born citizen. John McCalmont (his grandfather) was of the fearless and sturdy Scottish race, and possessing an adventurous spirit, decided to seek the New World. In early manhood he came to America, following the blacksmith's trade, during the early part of his life in York county, afterward settling on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, where eight children were born to him. He died in 1858.

James McCalmont (the eldest son of the Scotch immigrant just mentioned) was born January 31, 1807, in York county, coming with his parents to Mt. Pleasant township at the age of one year, where he was reared and educated. On May 31, 1835, he was united in marriage with Sarah McBurney, who was born April 7, 1811, a daughter of John McBurney, whose father, James McBurney, was a common ancestor of the McBurney family of the present generation. James McBurney was born in County Down, Ireland, and there learned merchant tailoring. In 1762 he was married to Jeanett Milligan, and they had two children: John and Elizabeth. In 1783 they came to America and settled in Washington county, Penn. Mr. McBurney was prominent in both political and church work, serving as justice of the peace in Cecil township until obliged to resign his position on account of enfeebled health. He was one of the first ruling elders of the Associate Reformed Church. He died August 11, 1820, having passed the age of fourscore years.

John McBurney was born in County Down, Ireland, and came with his parents to America. In 1793 he was married to Sarah Hunter, a native of Pennsylvania and a member of the Associate Reformed Church. A large family were born to the union, as follows: Jennie, James, Esther, John, Eliza, Robert, Sarah, David and Samuel, and of these Sarah was married to James McCalmont.

James and Sarah (McBurney) McCalmont began their wedded life on a farm near Hickory, this county, where they remained four years, and then, in 1839, came to Robinson township, where he remained until his death, which occurred in 1890, when he was in his eighty-third year. He was elected an elder in the United Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown, in 1839, and in 1863 transferred his membership to Centre, where he was again elected and installed elder, serving many years in that capacity. He was a Republican, actively interested in the success of his party, and served as school director several years, also justice of the peace two terms. His children were as follows: Mary, Lizzie, John A., James P., Sarah H., David A., R. M., Esther Agnes, and Kate (the latter being deceased).

John A., son of James and Sarah (McBurney) McCalmont, was born February 22, 1840, and received a common business education. On August 22, 1862, he enlisted in Company K, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., under Capt. William A. Stockton, of Cross Creek township, Washington county. He served with his regiment in all the principal battles and in a number of skirmishes, remaining until the close of the war in 1865. After returning home he engaged in agricultural pursuits, which he has since followed with success. In February, 1870, he was united in marriage with Anna B. Keys, who was born in 1846, a native of Washington county, and five children were born to them, namely: James K., Mary J., John C., Sarah M. and one deceased. The mother was a member of the U. P. Church. She passed away in 1880, and on June 15, 1887, Mr. McCalmont was married to Minnie Henderson, who was born November 5, 1853, in Washington county, a daughter of Alexander Henderson. The latter's grandfather was Rev. Matthew Henderson, who was born in Scotland and, coming to America at an early day, preached the first sermon in English west of the mountains in Pennsylvania. He died in 1795. His son Robert was a farmer, and in early manhood was married to Elizabeth Russell. He died in December, 1866. Alexander Henderson, son of Robert Henderson, was born in April, 1809, and when a young man was united in marriage with Nancy Watson, who was born in March, 1819. They had eleven children, five of whom are now living: Mary W., Robert M., Lizzie, Minnie (Mrs. John A. McCalmont) and Rebecca. The father died in April, 1890, the mother having preceded him in February, 1864. Both were members of the United Presbyterian Church. Mr. McCalmont has a farm of 154 acres, and carries on a very extensive milk-dairy. He and his wife are members of the Centre United Presbyterian Church of Midway. In politics Mr. McCalmont is a Republican.

JOSEPH SCOTT, one of the oldest, and undoubtedly one of the most robust men of his age in Independence township, is descended from a prominent family. He is a son of Arthur Scott, who was born in 1761, in Lancaster county, Penn., and there passed his boyhood days. When only a stripling he joined the Continental army, and served during the war of the Revolution. He was one of those half clothed and nearly starved heroes who suffered in that never to be forgotten winter at Valley Forge. He was sick for many weeks; he served as a teamster in the struggle, and has often related to his son Joseph the terrible scenes of those early days, the outlines of which are familiar to every student of United States history.

At the close of the war young Arthur resolved to seek a home in the wilds of western Pennsylvania, of which he had heard thrilling tales of adventure. After a long and tedious journey, traveling by narrow paths through unbroken forests, the sun his only compass, our daring pioneer at last came to the eastern boundary of Washington county, and paused for a time at a place called Ginger Hill. He there met Miss Ann Hamilton, the young lady he afterward wooed and won. She was born in the year 1773, in Adams county, Penn., near Gettysburg. In 1786 Arthur Scott came with his older brother, Samuel, to Washington county, and bought 175 acres of land, lying near Buffalo creek, about one mile from the Pennsylvania and West Virginia (then Virginia) lines, in Hopewell (now Independence) township. It was then an unbroken forest, and the Indians, who had but recently moved across the river into Ohio, often made raids through their former hunting grounds. During these periods of danger, the pioneers were compelled to seek a temporary refuge in the block-houses constructed for that purpose. Wild animals were numerous; bears, deer, and wild turkeys roamed through the forest, and the unearthly scream of the panther made the night hideous to human ears. After purchasing their land, the two brothers erected a log cabin, and began the hereulean task of clearing away the forest. But the toil and privations were endured with the lightest of hearts, for each of the young men were looking eagerly forward to a happy home in the very near future. When the first cabin was finished, Samuel brought home his young wife, and they then began to prepare for the coming of Arthur's bride. But the plans of one were doomed to disappointment. One day Samuel Scott, in company with a brother in law, James Law, crossed the Ohio river in search of game. They soon separated, promising to join each other at a given point, and, after a circuitous course, Scott came to the place of meeting and waited for Law. Meanwhile Law had approached the place in search of game, and, mistaking him for a deer, fired, and the unfortunate man fell dead. The news of the terrible accident was broken to the young wife, who continued to reside on the farm with her two children Joseph and John for some time. She was afterward married to a Mr. Hutchinson, and the home place eventually became the property of her son John. He took charge of it in the year 1808, and with his wife (formerly a Miss Ferguson) resided upon it till the year 1830, when it was then purchased of him by his cousin Joseph.

Soon after they had erected the cabin of Samuel Scott, Arthur also built his home on a part of the original tract, and in 1789 he was married to Ann Hamilton. This couple passed their entire lives on the home farm, and reared the following children: William (deceased September 20, 1851), born November 20, 1790, moved to a farm in Richland county, Ohio, which he cleared from the forest, and there remained until his death; John, born March 6, 1792, during his youth hauled loads of salt and merchandise over the mountains (just before the war of 1812 he hauled a wagon load of specie for the Government from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, being accompanied by a detachment of soldiers. For this service he received $10 per cwt.); Elizabeth (deceased August 8, 1866), born August 8, 1794, was the wife of Walter Craig, a well known politician, statesman and legislator of Washington county; Agnes (deceased February 14, 1869), born February 3, 1797, wife of William Gilmore, of Ohio county, W. Va.; Mary, wife of John Alexander, born February 18, 1799; David (deceased in 1887, at Portsmouth, Ohio), born January 12, 1801, learned piano and organ making in Philadelphia, and afterward became a piano tuner; Samuel (deceased March 25, 1866, at the home of his brother Joseph), born March 6, 1803, passed his early life on the farm, afterward becoming a merchant in Pittsburgh; Jane (deceased July 22, 1886), born November 11, 1805, was married to Hugh Miller, of Knox county; Joseph (subject of the present sketch); and Margaret Ann (deceased March 15, 1838, at her home in Independence township, Washington county), born November 19, 1811, wife of Henry Smith.

Although Arthur Scott had but a limited early education, by close application and observation he became a well informed and fluent man, and was an eager reader. He never tasted whisky, was a strong advocate of temperance, and an earnest religious worker. The "still house" that was found on almost every farm in those days was "conspicuous by its absence" on the farm of Mr. Scott, who instilled the same principles into the minds of his children. Politically he was first a Democrat, but after the election of Andrew Jackson, became a Whig. In the latter part of his life he lived with his son Joseph until the time of his death, which occurred July 21, 1843. His widow survived him several years, when she passed away October 15, 1848, while visiting a daughter in Summit county, Ohio.

Joseph Scott was the ninth child in the order of birth, and was born May 12, 1808, in Hopewell (now Independence) township, and passed his earlier years attending to the common duties of a farmer boy. He received his education in the usual log hut, which required neither nails nor glass in its construction, greased paper serving all practical purposes as a window. The teacher was hired by a subscription from those of the parents who felt inclined to pay for the instruction. Adventurous urchins had no lack of material sport, for in those days wild animals were often seen, and bears were frequent visitors in the neighborhood. Joseph Scott attended school about three months in the winter season, and during the summer assisted on the farm. On August 22, 1832, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Cozad (who was born November 11, 1807, in Carroll county, Ohio), daughter of Jacob Cozad, a Presbyterian minister of New Hagerstown, Ohio. They have had children as follows: John (a farmer of Independence township), born August 16, 1833; Margaret Ann (deceased in 1837), born August 3, 1835; William H. (deceased, a farmer of Washington State), born January 26, 1837; Elizabeth J. (Mrs. George U. Chaney, of West Alexander), born March 22, 1839; Rebecca B. (Mrs. Klinefelter, of Washington, Penn.), born February 4, 1841; David A. (a merchant of Independence, Penn.), born December 2, 1842; Joseph (a farmer of Osage county, Kans.), born January 3, 1845; Jacob O. (a citizen of Washington, this county), born December 27, 1846; and Sarah M. (Mrs. Thomas Lang, of Grafton, W. Va.), born October 5, 1849.

After his marriage Mr. Scott took charge of the home place, as his father was growing old, and remained upon it until 1887, following his vocation of farming and stock raising. His wife died on January 25, of that year, and he afterward moved to the home of his son David, where he has since remained. He is now living a retired life, but still owns the old place. Mr. Scott happily possesses a very retentive memory, and easily recalls incidents of his boyhood as if they had occurred but yesterday. No man is better known, or more highly respected than this gentleman. He organized and was the prime mover in the first Sabbath-school held in the Presbyterian Church, in Independence, Penn., of which he has been a member for sixty five years, serving as elder fifty four years. Politically, he has ever been an enthusiastic supporter of the Republican party since its formation, previous to which he was a Whig. He has never missed a county, township, State or national election since he was old enough to vote, and was an active Anti-slavery man. In addition to his regular business, he has performed many public duties, having been guardian for twelve children at one time. He was colonel in the Tenth Pennsylvania Militia for four years and is frequently called by that title.

[Since the above was written, the subject of the sketch died January 1, 1893.

FINLEY SCOTT, a skilled blacksmith and energetic husbandman of Smith township, is a son of Finley and grandson of Abraham Scott. Abraham Scott was born and reared in Maryland, and when a young man came to Pittsburgh, Penn., afterward settling in Washington county with his brother Alexander. He purchased a tract of wild land on Raccoon creek, Robinson township, this county, where his life was passed in agricultural pursuits. He was married to Jane, a sister of John Finley, the founder of Finleyville, and reared the following children: Rachel (Mrs. James Russell), Mary (wife of Thomas Fletcher), Ann (married to James Kerr), Jane (wife of David White), Elizabeth (Mrs. William Scott), Susan (married to John McBride) Abraham, Finley, Holland and Samuel. The father was a Democrat in politics, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church at Raccoon.

Finley Scott was born in 1800, in Robinson township, this county, and here educated. In 1822 he married Margaret, daughter of James Stephenson, of Smith township. The young people first settled on a farm in Robinson township, remaining there a few years, when they rented a neighboring farm, afterward purchasing a place in Smith township where they lived twenty years, and finally moved to the home where the remainder of their lives was passed. The children of this couple are Ann, Robert K., Samuel, James, Finley, John, Levi, Jane F. (Mrs. William Cowen) and Margaret (wife of Thomas Ackleson). Mr. Scott was the architect of his own fortune, and owned 450 acres of land at the time of his death, which occurred in 1879. He was a Democrat and held various township offices. In church connection he was first a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown, this county, afterward uniting with the Associate Reformed Church, in which he was an elder. Both he and his wife are buried in the U. P. cemetery.

Finley Scott, the subject of this biography, was born December 10, 1831, on the "Hanover Farm" in Smith township, receiving a common-school education. In early youth he learned the blacksmith's trade with Josiah Scott, of Burgettstown, which he followed until 1852, when, with his brother James and a few others, he started for California. They traveled to New York, then took passage to Aspinwall by the steamer "Eldorado;" they crossed the Isthmus, walking the last twenty-one miles, and upon arriving at Panama one of their number was attacked with the "Isthmus fever." He soon was able to continue the journey, and they sailed for San Francisco on the steamer "J. L. Stevens," but when opposite San Pedro bay, the steamer was disabled. Assistance was soon brought from San Francisco, but not long after reaching the end of their journey, William Shields, the sick companion, died and was buried at San Francisco. Finley Scott proceeded with his friends from San Francisco to Eldorado county, and followed mining with fair success. Mr. Scott after ward worked at his trade in California, but eventually returned to Burgettstown, this county. In September, 1857, he was married to Theresa A. Crawford, who was born August 1, 1838, daughter of Thomas Crawford, of Burgettstown, Penn., who has borne him children as follows: France L. (an engineer on the P. C. C. & St. L. R. R.), Thomas L. (an engineer on the same railway), Samuel J. (deceased in infancy), Clara A. (living at home), John E. (an employe of the B. & O. R. R. Co. at Cincinnati, Ohio), Ella M. (living with her parents), Theresa Bell and Laura A. (twins, living at home), Annie E. and Charles L. (both residing on the home farm). Mr. and Mrs. Finley Scott began married life in Burgettstown, this county, where he followed his trade till 1866, and then moved to a farm about one mile and a half northwest of that borough, in Smith township. In 1881 he removed to his present pleasant home, situated on the Florence road two miles from Burgettstown. He has since divided his time between his trade and agricultural pursuits, shipping some milk to Pittsburgh. Personally Finley Scott is a very pleasant and entertaining conversationalist, and is a popular and respected citizen. In politics he is a Democrat. Both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown.

GEORGE W. DUVAL is a grandson of Lewis and Hannah Duvall, who were pioneer settlers of Washington county, Penn., and died on the home farm.

John Duvall, father of subject, was born and reared on the home place in Washington county, and always followed agricultural pursuits, giving considerable attention to stock raising. He voted with the Republican party. He was first married to Mary Yarty, who bore him seven children, viz.: George W., Hannah, Amanda (wife of William Hornbake, of West Pike Run township), Ellen (married to Frank Bake, a carpenter, of Allenport, this county), Elizabeth, Lewis, and John L. (a farmer of Fayette county, Penn.). The mother died in 1869, and Mr. Duvall was then married to Elizabeth Lash, whose children were Tory (deceased), Robert, Isaac (both of whom are living in Charleroi, Washington county), William (a painter of Charleroi), and Frank (a farmer, of Fayette county, Penn.). The father died October 3, 1884, and April 27, 1885, the wife and mother passed away. She was a member of the M. E. Church.

George W. Duvall, son of John and Mary Duvall, was born January 5, 1853, in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and was educated in the district schools. On February 22, 1877, he married Miss Maggie Marker, who was born September 8, 1854, in Washington county, Penn., a daughter of Lewis and Eliza (Williams) Marker, natives of this county, whose children were as follows: John, a resident of West Brownsville, Penn.; William, living in East Pike Run township; James, living in West Brownsville; Charles, also of West Brownsville; Maggie, wife of George W. Duvall, and Mary, deceased. The father followed farming all his life, and in politics voted with the Democratic party. He died August 31, 1891, his wife having passed away in 1862. They were members of the M. E. Church. George W. and Maggie (Marker) Duvall have two sons: Charles W., born September 16, 1880, and John L., born August 23, 1883. Mr. Duvall owns the old homestead of eighty-four acres, where his grandfather first located many years ago. In politics he is a Republican, and he has served as school director for the past three years.

JOHAN COOK was born October 1, 1787, in Chambersburg, Franklin Co., Penn., a son of Robert and Mary (Brown) Cook, who were born, reared and married in Ireland. In 1785 they emigrated to America, first locating in Chambersburg, Franklin Co., Penn., and in 1787 crossed the country to Washington county, locating on the farm where their descendants are yet living. They passed their lives on the old place, making many improvements on it. Robert and Mary Cook were members of the Associate Reformed Church, and both died many years ago. Their children were Jane, Martha, Archibald, John and Margaret.

John Cook, at the age of ten years, came with his parents to Cecil township, this county, where he passed the rest of his days in agricultural pursuits. On April 7, 1814, he was united in marriage with Olevia Coulter, a native of Allegheny county, Penn., who bore him six children, namely: Robert (deceased), Moses C. (a widower, living in Bridgeville, Allegheny Co., Penn.), John (married, residing in Belmont county, Ohio), Jane, Mary and Margaret, all three deceased. The mother died August 22, 1824, having been fatally injured by an accident while returning from church, and February 16, 1826, Mr. Cook married Ursula Herriott, a native of Allegheny county, Penn., by which union five children were born, viz.: George H. (married, a physician and surgeon of McDonald, Penn.), Archibald (deceased), Samuel H. (of whom special mention is made further on), Elizabeth and Hester (both deceased). This wife died July 7, 1838, and on March 10, 1840, Mr.

S. H. Cook

Cook made a third choice in the person of Nancy Grier, who was born in 1802, in Allegheny county, Penn., and one son, N. G., came by this marriage. The father, in his political affiliations, voted with the Democratic party, and served as supervisor of Cecil township. He and his wife were members of the U. P. Church at Robinson's Run, in which he was an elder. He died August 4, 1861, and March 2, 1864, his widow was laid to rest.

SAMUEL H. COOK, son of John and Ursula (Herriott) Cook, was reared on the home place, and received his education in the common schools. He remained at home until twenty-five years of age, meanwhile working on the farm. In 1868 he moved to McDonald, where he embarked in the undertaking business, and in 1882 he opened a general store, which he conducted eight months; then engaged in the furniture business, which, in connection with undertaking, he still conducts; he also does embalming. Mr. Cook has made his own success, and deservedly enjoys the confidence of the public. In April, 1857, he was married to Rebecca, daughter of James Donaldson, by which union was born one child that died in infancy, its mother following it to the grave in 1858. On June 5, 1861, Mr. Cook married Mary A., daughter of Andrew Gilfillan, of Allegheny county, Penn., and three children were born to them: Nancy Grier (wife of Prof. J. M. Shaffer, of Slippery Rock), Dora (deceased at the age of eighteen) and Mary E., at home. The mother of these children dying December 22, 1884, Mr. Cook married, for his third wife, March 14, 1892, Amanda C. Smith, of Pittsburgh. He is a member of the U. P. Church and for the past twenty-five years has been an elder in same—about ten years at Robinson's Run, the remainder of the time at McDonald. He was a substantial donor toward the building of the present U. P. Church at McDonald.

N. G. COOK, only son of John and Nancy (Grier) Cook, was born July 8, 1842, on the home farm in Cecil township, where he was reared, receiving his early education in the common schools of the neighborhood. On March 28, 1872, he was united in marriage with N. Isabella Gladden, a native of Smith township, daughter of William and Nancy (Brown) Gladden, and granddaughter of William and Mary Ann (Woods) Gladden, the former born in eastern Pennsylvania, the latter in England. William Gladden (a son of this couple) was born in 1797, in Cecil township, and in early manhood was married to Nancy Brown, who was born in 1806, in Allegheny county, Penn., a daughter of John and Mary (Acheson) Brown, natives of Lancaster county, Penn., who migrated to Noblestown, Allegheny county, in 1792, and in 1800 moved to a farm in South Fayette township, same county. He died in 1848, having been preceded to the "long home" several years by his wife. Mr. and Mrs.

Gladden resided on a farm in Smith township, this county, until 1855, when they moved to a place in Allegheny county, where the rest of their lives was passed. They were the parents of three children: Mary Ann (who married Joseph McConnell, and died in 1863), William (married, died in 1872) and N. Isabella (wife of N. G. Cook). The father died in 1871, the mother on December 31, 1884; they were members of the Robinson Run U. P. Church.

N. G. and N. Isabella (Gladden) Cook located on the farm where they are now living, containing 212 acres of good land, which has been in the possession of the family over one hundred years. Four children have blessed their union: Nannie B. (deceased in March, 1888, at the age of fourteen years and six months), John L., William G. and Isabella Haddessa. Mr. Cook votes with the Democratic party, and has served as a member of the school board. He and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Robinson's Run.

DAVID WHITE is a well-known farmer and worthy representative of one of the oldest Pennsylvania families. His grandfather, James White, was born in eastern Pennsylvania, coming with his parents to North Strabane township, Washington county, where he died in 1835.

James, son of James White, was born in 1788, on the home farm in North Strabane township, where his youth was passed. In early manhood he was married to Isabella May, who was born December 11, 1798, in Cecil township. He served in the war of 1812 as first lieutenant, and in politics was a Whig, casting his Presidential vote for Gen. William H. Harrison. In April, 1827, the young people settled on a farm in Cecil township, and the following children were born to their union: Jane Ann (deceased in 1866), Margaret (widow of John Ralston, of Cecil township), Phoebe (deceased in youth), John M. (living in Wayne county, Ohio), David (whose sketch follows), Eliza Jane (widow of William Stewart, of Canton township), Samuel (living in Canonsburg) and Phoebe (widow of John McLaughlin, of Chartiers township). The parents were members of the Seceder Church at Chartiers. The father died in 1871, having been preceded in 1863 by the mother.

David White, whose name opens this sketch, was born May 30, 1832, in Cecil township, receiving his education in the schools of the neighborhood. On January 7, 1864, he selected as his life companion Anna E. Anderson, a native of Chartiers township. She was a daughter of John and Ann (White) Anderson, the former a native of Ireland, and the latter born in Chartiers township, where their married life was passed. He died in 1868, and his widow lived several years afterward. Two children were born to the union of David and Anna E. (Anderson) White: James R. (who married Anna Scott, and lives in Cecil township), and Annie Bell, who died in infancy. The mother died December 15, 1866, in Chartiers township, where they had resided after their marriage. In 1869 Mr. White moved to Cecil township, and was married November 11, 1869, to Lizzie E., daughter of Joseph and Martha (Anderson) Reed. Joseph was a son of David Reed, who was born and reared in Lancaster county, Penn. David Reed was married in early life, and brought his bride to the farm in Mt. Pleasant township, where they remained until Gen. Washington had proven his title to this tract of land. The famous General took dinner one day with Mr. and Mrs. Reed, and is said to have declared that he would allow the settlers no rights or compensation for improvements, but would take possession of the land, offering, however, to sell it at an exorbitant price. Mr. Reed harvested his crop, and September 22, 1784, bought and moved upon a place in Cecil township, this county. He died in 1824, his widow surviving him until 1840.

Joseph Reed was born April 30, 1796, on the home farm in Cecil township, where his boyhood was passed. He was first married to Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Alexander, who died six months after the wedding, and for his second wife Mr. Reed was married to Anna, daughter of Rev. David McLean, of Ohio. She bore him four children, viz.: Margaret (deceased wife of Robert Henderson, resided in Chartiers township), Mary (deceased wife of John Nesbit, Chartiers township), David (a leading physician of Cedar Rapids, deceased in 1878) and Jane Ann (wife of John B. Moy, Venice, this county). The mother of these children died, and he was afterward married to Martha Anderson, who was born October 2, 1816, in Chartiers township. They settled on the old homestead where children were born to them, as follows: Elizabeth (Mrs. David White), John (deceased September 21, 1863, in Indiana. He was minister in the U. P. Church), Matthew Anderson (living in Allegheny City, Penn.), Thomas Alexander (living in Pasadena, Cal.), George Murry (a U. P. minister of Cumberland county, Penn.), Julia Ann (wife of Alonza F. Hemphill, Houstonville, Penn.) and Liddie Campbell (living in Cecil township). Mr. Reed was always identified with the interests of Cecil township. He possessed a strong constitution and lived to be ninety eight years of age, dying in October, 1885, his wife having gone before in October, 1882. In 1877 David White bought his present farm in Cecil township, containing 110 acres of good land, and moved upon it the following year. Two children have blessed his second marriage: Joseph A., a graduate of the Iron City Commercial College, at Pittsburgh, and Elva Minetta (deceased in 1889, in her thirteenth year). Politically Mr. White is a Prohibitionist. He was formerly a member of the U. P. Church at Venice, but he and his wife are now connected with the Canonsburg Chartiers Congregation.

WILLIAM S. GRIMES. When young men of culture, intellect and education deliberately choose a peaceful rural life in preference to the glittering show and ceaseless din of a metropolis, it augurs well for progressive agriculture. No profession is more free from petty annoyances or more conducive to mental and moral as well as physical growth, than is that of an intelligent farmer. The youth of to-day realize this fact as never before, and the illiterate farmer from the rural districts will soon be a legend of the past, for his place is even now filled with men who are equally able to take their places in college halls or harvest fields, and among whom is the family of William S. Grimes.

William S. Grimes is a grandson of Isaac Grimes, who was born in Washington county, Penn., and followed the blacksmith's trade in early life. When a young man he was married to Sarah Pool, a native of this county, and they were the parents of four children, viz.: William (deceased), Joshua N., Mary (deceased), and one that died in infancy. Both parents died on the old place in 1871.

William Grimes, father of subject, was born June 19, 1823, in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn. He learned and followed the blacksmith's trade when a young man, and in 1851 was married to Margaret A. Springer, who was born in 1831, in East Pike Run township, this county. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Grimes located on the home place, where he followed farming and stock raising. He took an active interest in the Republican party, and served in local offices; in religious faith he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church at Coal Centre, Penn., of which he was an elder about thirty years. Their children were as follows: William S.; Leroy C., a farmer of Stark county, Ohio; Anna L., wife of C. Miller, a physician of Fayette county, Penn., and Mary B., deceased wife of Townsend Theakston. The father died November 22, 1880, the mother having "gone before" in February, 1877.

William S. Grimes was born October 11, 1852, on the home farm in East Pike Run township, this county. His elementary education was secured at the district schools, and he then attended the Southwestern State Normal School, at California, several terms. After completing his studies he taught for some time, and finally settling on the homestead, has since devoted his attention to agriculture. On March 25, 1871, he was united in marriage with Lizzie Dorsey, who was born September 1, 1855, in East Pike Run township, this county, a daughter of George and Martha (Phillips) Dorsey, also natives of this county, who were the parents of nine children, of whom three are now living: Cassius A., Charles L. and Lizzie. Mr. and Mrs. Grimes are living on the old homestead, consisting of 114 acres of well-cultivated land, upon which he carries on practical farming with signal success. Good buildings have been erected on the place, and the stone part of the house was built over one hundred years ago. He votes with the Republican party, and in religion he and his wife are members of the Taylor M. E. Church, of which he is a trustee. The names and dates of birth of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Grimes are as follows: Nora E., August 8, 1875; Elva L., October 23, 1876; Margaret A., April 22, 1878; George D., August 15, 1880; William C., July 20, 1884; Mattie R., March 24, 1886, and Mansell F., December 14, 1891. Mr. Grimes is the present auditor of West Pike Run.

SYLVESTER HERTIG, a prominent farmer and wool-grower of Donegal township, is a son of John G. Hertig, who was born in 1804, in the Canton Neufchatel, near the beautiful city and lake of the same name, the country being at that time an annex of the French Empire. The Hertig family were ardent admirers of the world-renowned Napoleon, and Charles (the eldest son of the family) though a youth of barely twenty years, had already won the epaulets of a subaltern officer, in the sanguinary battle of Waterloo, where he received a severe wound. The father of this family was a battle-scarred veteran, and had then been placed on the retired list.

John G. Hertig was to have been educated for the church in accordance with his parents' desires, but the ideas of the youth did not agree with the expressed wishes of the family. He had no taste for the life of a churchman, but secretly determined to secure as good an education as possible, and then flee to America, whose free institutions imparted so roseate a tint to his boyish dreams. Quitting school at the age of sixteen years, with the reputation of being a prodigy in scholarship, he gained the consent of his parents to go to Holland, as the fall of Napoleon had given the then hated Prussians the control of his birthplace. He was limited in finances at this time, which fact prevented his coming at once to America, but it was only hope deferred. The long-cherished ambition was hidden for a time, but never once forgotten. John Hertig soon became tutor in a wealthy family, and giving them four hours daily of his time, received a liberal compensation. In addition to the luxuries of aristocratic life, which included unlimited quantities of the most elegant wearing apparel, he also received the annual sum of $300 in gold. But certain galling restraints were imposed, and his proud spirit, brooking no fetters, longed eagerly for absolute freedom. He must realize the dream of his life, naught else would satisfy, and at the end of two years he decided that the time for action had arrived. Having saved $1,000, the daring youth bid adieu to the family with whom he had been an honored guest (who entreated him to remain with them), and sending a farewell to his parents, looked his last on the shores of Europe. Perhaps a faint regret came over him as the banks of his sunny France faded from sight, and he realized that he was forever leaving all who loved him, to dwell a stranger in a strange land. But youth is buoyant, and seldom spends much time in vain regret; new scenes were before him, a new life lay just beyond. In 1824 the young man landed in New York, where he remained some time, then went to Uniontown, Fayette Co., Penn., entering in a partnership school with an American, who attempted to cheat the young foreigner. After discovering the treachery, young Hertig withdrew from the school, and began teaching in George township, Fayette Co., Penn. Soon afterward he was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Showalter, a farmer of the neighborhood, and eleven children were born to their union, of whom eight are yet living. Mr. Hertig passed many years of his life in Fayette county, Penn., and was one of the best-known and most popular men of the county. He possessed remarkable mathematical skill, and never saw or heard of a problem which he could not solve. He was a fluent scholar, speaking, reading and writing the English, French and German languages with perfect ease; translating Latin as a pastime; solving the most difficult mathematical problems readily as if but child's play; surveying lands, drawing plats, and drawing up all kinds of legal documents, with more ease than an average lawyer. Mr. Hertig was indeed a man of wonderful power and versatility. The latter years of his life were passed in Tennessee (where he owned some real estate), thinking that the balmy southern air might lessen the pain of the infirmities he was obliged to suffer, although not confined to the bed, and never accepting a physician's aid. He died August 24, 1885, at Cleveland, Tenn.; his widow still survives him.

Sylvester Hertig was born January 20, 1850, in George township, Fayette Co., Penn. He received a common-school education, and passed his boyhood on his father's farm. On February 19, 1880, he was married to Emma L. Eberhart, who was born March 25, 1861, daughter of Adolph and Sarah (Beatty) Eberhart, and she has borne him children as follows: Charles, Adolph, Hortense and John G. After his marriage Mr. Hertig resided some time in Springhill township, Fayette Co., Penn., and followed farming and stock raising. He then moved to Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., and located about six miles west of Washington. In 1888 he came to Donegal township, this county, locating on the "James Dickey" farm, which he now owns, lying about one mile and a half south of Dunsfort, near the line of West Virginia, where he is extensively engaged in wool growing. Mr. Hertig casts his ballot for the one he considers most capable of filling the position, regardless of political standing.

JACOB F. McDOWELL is a worthy representative of one of the early families of Mt. Pleasant township. The McDowells are of Scotch descent, the first settlement having been made in Lancaster county, Penn., in colonial days, by Thomas McDowell. He first settled near McConnell's Mill, Chartiers township, and in 1779 took a patent for 400 acres in Mt. Pleasant township, now in the McDowell and Miller name. He died in this county, and was buried in Buffalo village.

The grandfather, James McDowell, was born in Lancaster county, Penn., and when a young man came to Washington county, taking out a patent for land in Mt. Pleasant township. He was married in Chartiers township to Mary McKnight, a native of the last named place, and the young couple settled on the place in Mt. Pleasant township now occupied by their grandson, Jacob F. Mrs. James McDowell died in 1853.

John McDowell was born in 1811, on the old home place in Mt. Pleasant township, and attended the subscription schools during his boyhood. In 1838 he was married to Margaret Miller, who was born in Chartiers township, and they continued to reside on the old homestead, where he followed agricultural pursuits. In political opinion he was a Democrat, and in religion he and his wife were among the first members of the Presbyterian Church at Mt. Prospect. He died August 18, 1886, having been preceded by the wife and mother February 20, 1866. They were the parents of seven children, namely: James W., an attorney at Washington, Penn.; Jacob F., of whom a sketch follows; Margaret, wife of J. M. K. Donaldson; Rebecca, married to James Agnew, of Mt. Pleasant township; John, living at Canonsburg, Penn.; Sarah, residing on the home farm; and Lizzie, also at home.

Jacob F. McDowell was born June 3, 1843, on the old homestead in Mt. Pleasant township, receiving his education at the schools of the home district, and beginning life for himself on his birthplace. On January 29, 1874, he married Margaret Dickson, a native of Cecil township, this county, whose parents were early settlers of the same locality. Mr. and Mrs. McDowell have always remained on the old place, which contains eighty six acres of well cultivated land, and he is engaged in general farming and stock raising. He is actively interested in the success of the Democratic party, and has served two terms on the school board, and also as auditor of Mt. Pleasant township. In religion he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, in which he is a deacon. Three children have blessed their union, namely: Ida Margaret, Theresa Elizabeth and John Howard.

RICHARD M. FITZWILLIAM, a prosperous and popular citizen of Franklin township, whose fine farm of 240 acres is situated near the borough of Washington, was born June 28, 1825, in Rankintown, Washington Co., Pennsylvania.

His grandfather, William Fitzwilliam, was a native of County Down, Ireland, where he was married to Jane McCullough, and a few years thereafter they came to America, landing at Philadelphia, thence proceeding to Little York, same State, where they remained some time. During the "Whisky Insurrection" he volunteered into the militia, and was sent to Washington county, where he concluded to make his home, so brought his family and made a settlement in Franklin township. Afterward he moved to Mercer county, same State, where he remained some time; thence went to Ross county, Ohio, where he passed the remaining days of his busy life; his widow returned to Washington county, and here died in 1842. By trade Mr. Fitzwilliam was a weaver, which he followed both in Ireland and in this country. He was an adherent of the Episcopal Church.

Francis Fitzwilliam, father of subject, was born in Franklin township, this county, in 1801. While in Ross county, Ohio, he learned blacksmithing, and after serving his apprenticeship moved to Mercer county, Penn., where he remained one year, working at his trade; then located in Rankintown, this county, where he worked eight years. In 1832 he purchased the farm in Franklin township now occupied by his son Richard M. In 1824 Mr. Fitzwilliam married Mary, daughter of Richard Monnts, a member of one of the earliest families of the county, and the children born to this union were Richard M., Jane (widow of James H. Wheeler), Frank (who was educated at Washington and Jefferson College, was admitted to the bar, went to Kansas, and there died; he had married Eliza Clay Jackson, of Bowling Green, Ky., and they had four children: Mary, Lizzie, Frank and Romaine, all residents of Leavenworth, Kans.), and Mary (also deceased). The father was called from earth April 15, 1875, the mother having preceded him to the grave March 31, 1872. Francis Fitzwilliam was a self-made man in every sense, and won his own success unaided. He was, in his political predilections, first a Whig and Abolitionist, and afterward a Republican, and in church connection he was a thorough Presbyterian.

Richard M. Fitzwilliam, the subject of this sketch, passed his early life on his father's farm, and was educated at the common schools of his vicinity. On April 23, 1864, he was united in marriage with Ella, daughter of James C. Chambers, of Amwell township, and they at once settled on the home place where they yet reside. Mr. Fitzwilliam attends the First M. E. Church at Washington, and in his political sympathies is an active Republican.

JAMES McKEE is a well known and prosperous farmer of Chartiers township. His father, John McKee, was a son of Samuel McKee, the latter being a native of Ireland, who emigrated to America in about 1786, settling in Washington county, Penn., on the farm where he died.

John McKee was born in 1803, in Washington county, Penn., and on arriving at man's estate married Miss Nancy McNary, a native of Chartiers township, this county. The young couple first settled in Canton township, this county, and a few years afterward moved to the home farm, where Mr. McKee is yet living at the age of eighty-nine years. Five children were born to them, four of whom died in infancy. The mother died in 1844, on the farm in Canton township, and John McKee was afterward married to Leviah Irwin, daughter of John Irwin, an early pioneer of Washington county, and to this union were born three children, viz.: John T. (living in Mt. Pleasant township, this county), Elizabeth N. and Mary M. (both residing at home). This wife died in 1886.

James McKee, son of John and Nancy McKee, was born in 1836, in Canton township, being the youngest of his father's family. He was educated in the common schools of Chartiers township, and also attended a term or two in Mt. Pleasant township, this county. He has always followed farming and stock raising, making a speciality of good Shorthorn cattle. The farm consists of 100 acres of highly-cultivated land. James McKee is an active member of the Democratic party, and served as township supervisor for six years, also filling the positions of auditor and inspector. He and his sisters are members of the United Presbyterian Church, of which the father is also a member.

WILLIAM WOODBURN, a well-known and representative farmer of Independence township, is a son of Thomas, whose father, Thomas Woodburn, was a native of Ireland, and there learned the trade of a weaver. He afterward immigrated to America, locating in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., where he was married, and brought his bride to the log-cabin home, erected by his own hands. The young people were frequently obliged to flee to the neighboring blockhouse from the furious attacks of the blood-thirsty savages. Fourteen children were born to this pioneer couple, seven sons and seven daughters, all of whom lived to an adult age and two are yet living: Samuel, a resident of Tyler county, W. Va., and John, living in Burgettstown, Penn. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Woodburn passed their lives on the farm, where they died at an advanced age.

Thomas Woodburn, a son of Thomas Woodburn, the pioneer, was born about the year 1800, on the farm in Mt. Pleasant township, and received an education in the subscription schools of the neighborhood. When yet a boy he began working for the farmers in the vicinity, and in 1832 was married to Clarissa Jackson, who was born about 1800, in Ohio county, W. Va., and died in the year 1841, leaving the following children: James, William, Thomas and Martha (Mrs. Marshall Meredith, of Randolph county, W. Va.). For his second wife, Mr. Woodburn was united in marriage, in 1845, with Margaret McHenry, of Allegheny county, Penn., and the children born to this union were Nathan (a soldier in the late war, who was killed in the service), Sarah (deceased), James (deceased), John, Susan, Rebecca and Elizabeth. Of these children, the latter four are all residents of Tyler county, W. Va. Soon after his marriage Mr. Woodburn located in Allegheny county, Penn., where he engaged in farming, and in the latter part of his life moved to a farm in Tyler county, W. Va., where he died in 1869. Mr. Woodburn was a successful and respected business man. Politically he was formerly a Whig, and after the organization of the party became a Republican. He was a member of the U. B. Church. Mrs. Woodburn is now living in Tyler county, W. Va.

William Woodburn was born November 18, 1835, in West Liberty, Brooke Co., W. Va., and being left without a mother when but six years of age, he made his home with his paternal grandfather. He remained there six years, then went to live with his father in Allegheny county, Penn. At the age of twenty years he began to "paddle his own canoe," by working for different farmers. On August 18, 1862, he enlisted in Company C, Twenty-second Regiment, Pennsylvania Cavalry, and took part in all the engagements of that company. In the year 1865 he was honorably discharged, and returning home, began work upon the farm. On April 16, 1868, he was married to Sarah Meloy, who was born August 16, 1833, in Buffalo township, and they have had the following children: Nina E., Lee Anna B. and Jennie R., all of whom are yet living with their parents, the latter two being school teachers. The first years of married life were passed by Mr. Woodburn in German township, Harrison Co., Ohio, near Cadiz Junction. In the year 1875 he moved to his present home in Independence township, Washington county, locating near Mt. Hope. He is a farmer and stock raiser, and in politics is a Republican. He and his wife are both members of the Mt. Hope U. P. Church.

ROBERT D. CRAIG, one of the stirring, go-ahead young farmers of Hopewell township, Washington county, was born in 1867, on the farm where he now resides. He is a son of William Craig, who was a son of William and Susan (Leaper) Craig, the former a native of the North of Ireland, and the latter born in Pennsylvania.

William Craig, the grandfather, grew to manhood in Ireland, when the family sought a home in this country. William came to Washington county, Penn., and established himself on a farm near West Middletown, there residing until his death. His family consisted of the following named children: John, Walter, William, Jane, Rebecca, Susan, Catherine and Margaret. The father died in 1834, in his sixtieth year. His widow survived him until 1866, when she too passed away, at the advanced age of eighty years. With Mr. Craig came his two brothers—David (who resided at Middletown) and Walter (who lived at Cross Creek village).

William Craig, father of Robert D. Craig, was born on the home farm in Hopewell township, though the family residence was then in Independence township, this county. He was educated in the common schools of Independence township, attending whenever possible, and acquiring a good English education. When about twenty-three years of age he married Margaret McFadden, who died in October, 1861, leaving six children, namely: Alexander, William, John S., Susan, Margaret and Lucy, of whom Alexander, Susan and Margaret are deceased. In 1865 Mr. Craig was married to Margaret Dalzell, and a son and daughter were born to them: Robert D. and Lavina Jennie. The father was always a successful farmer, and was the owner of some excellent places. During the later years of his life he also dealt largely in stock, in which vocation he was equally successful, conducting a large business. His success was due to energy and industry, combined with economy and business foresight. In politics he differed from other members of his family, being an earnest advocate of the principles of the Republican party, but though always keenly on the lookout for the welfare of his county, neither sought nor desired public office. During the last years of his life he was a member of the United Presbyterian Church. He died October 3, 1890. Of the children of his family the following is a brief record: William Craig, the eldest living son, is married to Miss Ada Nuzum, of West Virginia, and is now residing in Independence township, this county (they have had two children: Eva Pearl, now about five years of age, and Anna, deceased); John, the second living son of William Craig, was married to Miss Kate Botes, who has borne him two children, Alvin and Mary Belle; Lucy, daughter of William and Margaret Craig, is married to James McMurray, and is living in Kansas City, Mo.; Robert D. (subject) and Lavina J. are unmarried, and reside with their mother on the old homestead. Like their father, the men of the Craig family are adherents of the Republican party.

SAMUEL J. MELVIN, a well known farmer and one of the representative citizens of Hanover township, traces the genealogy of the Melvin family to two brothers, Samuel and William Melvin, who came to America in early days with their parents, and located on a farm in Cecil county, Md.

Samuel Melvin was born March 28, 1772, in Ireland, coming with his parents to this country when a child. He grew to manhood in Cecil county, Md., and on December 31, 1795, was married to Tamar Miller, who was born August 5, 1774, in Maryland. Some time after their marriage they set out for the West, and in 1803 came to Washington county, Penn., locating on a farm in the territory now named Jefferson (then Cross Creek) township, where he began to clear away the forest and make a home. After a prosperous and industrious life he died March 17, 1826, having been preceded by his wife, October 13, 1821. They are buried at Bethel Church cemetery in Jefferson township. His brother William came to Jefferson township in 1808, afterward moving to Brooke county, W. Va., and in 1848 settled in Burgetts town, where he died in 1856. The following children were born to Samuel and Tamar Melvin: Ann, born February 21, 1797, Mrs. Edward J. Jones, of Jefferson township; John, died October 13, 1821, and was buried with his mother (he was born March 5, 1799); Henry, a merchant at Wells ville, Ohio, and other places, died at Wellsburg, W. Va., born April 29, 1801; Sarah, born April 2, 1803; William, whose sketch follows; Tamar, born August 23, 1807, wife of George Elliott, of Davis county, Iowa; James, a cabinet maker and undertaker at Pughtown, W. Va. (father of ex-Judge Thayer Melvin, of Wheeling, W. Va.), born March 9, 1810; Samuel, died when twelve years of age, born August 1, 1812; and Lydia, Mrs. James T. Jones, born November 9, 1816. Of this family none are now living.

William Melvin was born June 9, 1805, in Jefferson township, this county, and received a very limited subscription-school education, working on the farm. His elder brother Henry being a cripple, the greater part of the work fell on William. On June 14, 1827, he was married to Abigail Jones, a native of Maryland, daughter of Edward J. Jones, also a native of Maryland, who resided in Jefferson township, Washington county, at the time of their marriage. William and Abigail Melvin were the parents of the following children: Ann, widow of David Thorley, of Jefferson township; John, a farmer of Jefferson township; Tamar E., deceased wife of Robert Hamilton, of Davis county, Iowa; Mary M., widow of Cyrus M. Stephenson, of Eldersville, Penn.; Samuel J., our subject; Lydia, married Robert P. Cooper, went to Iowa, but died on the home place in Jefferson township, this county; and William, a farmer living on the home place. Mrs. Melvin died July 3, 1850, and was buried in the Bethel graveyard. For his second wife William Melvin married Susan Ann McKeever, a sister of the well-known Judge McKeever, of Hopewell township, who is the only member of her family now living. Mr. Melvin began his married life on the home farm, which was then considerably involved. But with untiring energy he labored (often making flour barrels after night, for sale) until the place was free from incumbrance, and various additions and improvements were made and paid for. He possessed abundant vitality, undergoing several accidents which would have resulted fatally to an ordinary man. He was over six feet in stature and well proportioned. He was a bitter enemy of slavery, and at one time the only Abolitionist in Jefferson township. In politics he was first a Democrat, then a Whig, next an Abolitionist or Freesoiler, and finally a Prohibitionist, casting his last ballot for Gen. Clinton B. Fisk for President—his last public act. He was a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church at Eldersville, Penn., and a zealous worker for the cause of the Master. When he passed away, December 23, 1888, Jefferson township lost one of her most worthy and valued citizens, and Methodism one of its most zealous supporters.

Samuel Jones Melvin (our subject) was born February 3, 1839, in Jefferson township, this county. His earlier education was supplemented by a two years' preparatory course at Adrian College, Adrian, Mich. where he was a student when the Civil war opened. He came home intending to enlist, but was persuaded by friends to remain at home, as his health was rather feeble. When Lincoln issued a call for ninety-day men, the name of Samuel J. Melvin was drawn, but rather than be drafted, he enlisted, October 21, 1862, as a volunteer in Company A, One Hundredth P. V. I. (Roundheads) at Eldersville, Penn. He served two years and nine months, and during that time was employed as clerk in different departments, from company to corps headquarters, his ability in this line having been discovered in the early part of the service. When drafted he was engaged in teaching school in what is known as Lee's School, Jefferson township, having completed one month of the term when the draft was made. While in the army he suffered from inflammatory rheumatism, chronic diarrhoea and typhoid fever. He was honorably discharged July 24, 1865, and returned to Washington county, Penn. Afterward he took a western trip, and, finally returning to his birthplace, began farming on the home place. On November 14, 1867, he was married to Helen M. Hanlin, who was born December 23, 1845, a daughter of Alexander and Margaret (Gracey) Hanlin, of Hanover township. The children of Samuel J. and Helen M. Melvin are as follows: Charles P., a pattern maker of Pittsburgh, Penn.; William Alexander, deceased at the age of seven years; Galbraith Stewart, Mary Gracey and Alice Gertrude, all of whom are living at home. Mr. and Mrs. Melvin remained on the old Melvin farm in Jefferson township until February 24, 1875, when they came to Hanover township and located on the Alexander Hanlin farm, part of which is now their home. He has made many improvements on the place and has erected a pleasant residence, which commands a fine view of the surrounding farms. He follows general farming and stock raising, and is also conducting a dairy business. He voted with the Republican party until 1884, since which time he has been a member of the Prohibition party. He and his wife are leading members of the Wesleyan Methodist Church of Eldersville, Penn., of which he is a trustee and class-leader. He has also, for a number of years, been superintendent of a Union Sabbath-school at Hanlin Station.

JAMES M. THOMAS. Among the leading families of Washington county, none have a better claim to prominent mention in the pages of this Biographical Record than the one of which the gentleman is a worthy member.

Edmund Thomas, grandfather of James M., is the first of the family in this county of whom there are any data. He was a native of eastern Pennsylvania, and when a young man came hither and made a settlement in North Strabane township, where he carried on farming to the end of his busy life, becoming one of the leading citizens, ever in the van of all progressive movements. He was here married to Rhoda, daughter of David Leonard, of Washington county, a resident of near the village of Bentleyville, and the children born to them were Sarah, Mary, Rebecca, Ann, Phoebe, Lydia, Rhoda, Nancy and Liverton. Mr. Thomas early united with the Presbyterian Church, in after life serving for many years as a trustee and an elder. Politically he was a zealous Democrat.

Liverton Thomas, father of subject, was born in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., May 12, 1809, and his education was received at the schools of his district, which he enhanced by much after study. In 1834 he was married, in Ohio, to Miss Mary A. Glandou, who was born in Maryland, October 2, 1813, and moved with her parents to Harrison county, Ohio, and the results of this union were nine children, eight of whom are yet living, viz.: Edmund, in Saline county, Neb.; William, a farmer in Chase county, Neb.; James M.; Rhoda L., wife of John Hodgens, in Des Moines, Iowa; Liverton G., a physician in Philadelphia, Penn.; Belle M., wife of James C. Matthews, a farmer and undertaker in North Strabane township; A. J., also a farmer in North Strabane township; and Ida M., wife of William Kettle, of Rush county, Kans.; Caleb F. died in infancy. The mother died December 10, 1873, and the father then went to live with his daughter, Mrs. John Hodgens, in Des Moines, Iowa, where he now is. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, of which he has always been a liberal supporter, and was the donor of the land on which the Fairview church now stands, having materially contributed toward its erection, and has been an elder from its organization. Politically, he is a lifelong Democrat, and has been in his day a hard worker for the party's interests.

James M. Thomas was born December 29, 1838, in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., and received a thorough common-school training, which, being a diligent student and apt scholar, he turned to the best account. He assisted in the duties of his father's farm until 1866, in which year he embarked in general mercantile business in the village of Thomas, inclusive of the buying and shipping of all kinds of farm produce. He is one of the heaviest wool dealers in his locality, and has justly earned the confidence of every one with whom he has had dealings. His first store was a 16x20 room, which was soon enlarged to 16x40, to meet the growth of his business. In 1876 he erected his present business block in the same village, 24x70, two stories and a basement. The store is finished in natural wood, and is one of the finest country stores in the county. Mr. Thomas carries full lines of all classes of goods, dealing heavily in produce, and his success is entirely of his own making. On September 20, 1859, James M. Thomas was united in marriage with Mary J., daughter of Alexander Hamilton, of Nottingham township, and the children born to them are Carrie B., Howard N., Cora B. and Clyde B. The mother of this family died July 10, 1885, and December 28, 1886, Mr. Thomas for his second wife married Mrs. Anna Hodgens, daughter of Dr. Murray, of Canonsburg. The family are members of the Presbyterian Church at Fairview, in which Mr. Thomas is an elder and has held various offices. His political predilections are Democratic, but of late years he has preferred to vote for the best man, irrespective of party claims, at all times having first in view the best interests of his township, county and State.

DAVID A. BROWNLEE is a representative of one of the most prominent pioneer families of Washington county, and traces his lineage back through the generations to a hardy, robust Scotch "lad and lassie."

Archibald Brownlee was born and reared in Scotland, and was there married to a Miss Hamilton, who bore him the following children: James, William, John, Archibald, Thomas, Jane (Mrs. John Allison), and Hugh (who died when the family were crossing the ocean). About the year 1765 he immigrated to America, first locating in Lancaster county, Penn., where he remained some time, and in 1775 purchased a farm in Canton township, Washington county, which became their permanent home. James Brownlee, a brother of Archibald, also settled in Washington county, where he resided until 1800, since which time the family have all removed from the county. Archibald was first a member of the Scotch Presbyterian Church, and afterward united with the Seceder Church. He followed agricultural pursuits all his life, and died in Canton township.

James Brownlee was born January 4, 1745, in Lanarkshire, Scotland, and after coming to America learned the trade of a millwright, which he followed several years in eastern Pennsylvania. He then settled on a farm in Canton township, Washington county, where the remainder of his life was passed. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Jane Leman, a member of a pioneer family of Washington county, who had emigrated from Ireland, and to this union came the following children, their names and dates of birth being given: John, October 15, 1777; Archibald, February 28, 1779; James, September 27, 1780; Hugh, July 23, 1782; Elizabeth (Mrs. Daniel Browlee), May 17, 1784; William, January 13, 1786; Thomas, December 1, 1787; Samuel, August 9, 1789; Joseph, August 8, 1791; Jane (wife of Kenneth McCoy), April 20, 1793; and David, April 8, 1797. The home of Mr. Brownlee was situated two miles west of Washington borough. He was a member of and ruling elder in the Seceder Church at North Buffalo, and in politics he was a Whig. He died in 1822, and was buried beside his wife, who had preceded him to the grave.

Joseph Brownlee was born in Canton township, Washington Co., Penn., passed his early life on the home place, and was for some time engaged in hauling goods from Philadelphia. He married Esther, daughter of John Templeton, of Washington county, and in 1819 the young couple settled on a farm in Independence township, where their lives were passed and the following children born: Ann, James H. (living in Knoxville, Tenn.), John T. and Jane (Mrs. Robert Y. Meloy). Mrs. Brownlee died December 8, 1832, and Mr. Brownlee, May 15, 1834, married Jane Auld, of Washington county. Of this union were born: David A., Joseph W. (residing in Cross Creek township), Sarah M. (Mrs. Samuel Donaldson), Esther H. (Mrs. Samuel L. Moore, of Independence), and Martin B. (a minister of the U. P. Church in Iowa). Mr. Brownlee was an energetic man, exerting a marked influence on the lives of the surrounding people. He was a member of the Mt. Hope U. P. Church, in which he was an elder forty years. Politically he was formerly a Whig and an Abolitionist, afterward a Republican, and always took an active part in all questions of public interest. He died November 23, 1867, and was buried by the side of his wife in the cemetery at Mt. Hope.

David Auld, grandfather of subject, was born near Coleraine, in the North of Ireland, came to America at an early day, and settled in the southern part of Washington county. Toward the beginning of the present century he was married to his cousin, Mary Auld, by whom he had the following children: James, Jane (married to Joseph Brownlee), John, David and Mary, all now deceased. The mother of these children died March 11, 1819, and April 12, 1821, he was married to Sarah Jackson, who survived him. He was a Whig, a member of the Associate Church, and a farmer in Buffalo township.

David A. Brownlee, our subject, was born February 9, 1835, on the home farm, situated two and a half miles northeast of Independence, in Independence township. On October 15, 1868, he married Jane Ann Templeton, who was born January 13, 1838, daughter of Alexander Templeton. Alexander Templeton was reared in Cross Creek township. He married Margaret M. Gabby, (daughter of James Gabby), by whom he had the following children: John (who died at the age of thirteen years from the kick of a horse), Dr. James G. (in Pittsburgh), Thomas B. (deceased, was a member of Company A, One Hundredth Pennsylvania Infantry, and died after the battle of the Wilderness), Jane Ann (Mrs. D. A. Brownlee), Hugh A. (deceased), Esther M. (Mrs. John Scott), Mary E., Alexander Brown (deceased). Mr. Templeton was a Democrat in politics, and in religion was a member of the U. P. Church. In 1855 he moved to New Wilmington, Penn., and died there in April, 1861; his wife died in April, 1874, and they are buried in the cemetery at New Wilmington. Mr. and Mrs. Brownlee have one child: William T., born July 3, 1869, now a well-educated and prepossessing young man. After his marriage our subject lived with his widowed mother until her death, which occurred April 7, 1883 (she was buried in Mt. Hope cemetery), since which time he has owned and managed the home place. Mr. Brownlee has been very successful in business, and has erected a large and commodious dwelling upon his farm. Politically he is a Republican, and has been elected to various township offices, in which his efficiency has been ably demonstrated. He and his wife are members of the Mt. Hope U. P. Church, in which he is an elder. They have recently taken a very nice little girl named Anna, born September 18, 1881, and intend to raise her as their own child.

JAMES JONES, a well-known undertaker, living at St. Cloud, Somerset township, is the youngest son of Perry Jones, whose father, Abednago Jones, came to New York in an early day and worked at his trade, that of a tailor. He afterward moved to Washington county, there making a permanent home.

Perry Jones was born in 1783, in New York, and when yet a boy learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed all his life. In early manhood he married Susanna McCelvy, who bore him four sons and four daughters, of whom are yet living: William A. (a carpenter of Wayne county, Ohio), Isabel and James. Mr. and Mrs. Jones were members of the Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek. He died October 8, 1852, having been preceded by his wife February 9, 1848.

James Jones (whose name opens this biography) was born September 28, 1825, in Somerset township, this county, and when but a small boy learned the trade of carpentry with his father. In 1860 he opened an undertaking establishment which he is yet conducting. On October 21, 1851, he was united in marriage with Rachel P. Craig, who was born September 22, 1821, in Allegheny county, daughter of John and Ann (Larimer) Craig; her father was born on the ocean while his parents were crossing from Ireland to America. Mr. and Mrs. Craig both died in this county. To the union of James and Rachel P. (Craig) Jones the following children were born: Sarah B., born October 12, 1852, died March 6, 1858; Austin H., born January 1, 1855, died April 3, 1856; Anna (wife of William Leyde, a farmer of Nottingham township, this county), born August 18, 1856; John P. (a farmer of Nottingham township), born August 17, 1858; William A. (a Presbyterian minister of Knoxville, Pittsburgh, Penn.), born November 27, 1860; Hanford M., carpenter, born October 20, 1862; James A. (a carpenter of Somerset township), born December 30, 1861; and Nannie A. (living at home), born February 3, 1866. Mr. and Mrs. Jones are members of the old Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church, in which he was ruling elder many years, also acting as first deacon, and he was superintendent of the Sabbath school four years. On August 1, 1881, he was appointed postmaster at St. Cloud, which office he is now filling; he also served as director of the poor. In politics he was formerly a Democrat, but is now a Prohibitionist.

S J. CROTHERS was born in Mt. Pleasant, Jefferson Co., Ohio, June 25, 1812. In 1834 he located on the farm in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., now owned by Samuel Blayney. On March 4, 1835, he was married to Miss Jean Brownlee, daughter of William Brownlee, one of the earliest pioneers of western Pennsylvania. On that farm Mr. Crothers remained until 1845, when he removed to the one now owned by L. M. Crothers, his youngest son, which he had bought some years before. He remained on this farm until his death, which occurred July 20, 1889.

Mr. Crothers was known as one of the most thorough agriculturists of the county. He was very public spirited, taking an active and special interest in every movement tending to the welfare of his neighborhood. His characteristics, which were strongly pronounced, and as unchangeable and firm as a rock of adamant, may be summed up in a few words: He thought for himself, he said exactly what he thought; and he did exactly what he said.

WILLIAM T. ARNOLD, a well-to-do farmer of Hanover township, is the lineal descendant of an old Irish family, the first of whom to come to America was his grandfather, Samuel Arnold. The latter was born in Ireland, about ten miles from Newry, and the same distance from Banbridge, County Down.

When Samuel Arnold was a young man he was there married to Margaret Glass, who bore him the following children in Ireland: Nancy (married to William Anderson); Mary (died of "king's evil"). Some time during the latter part of the eighteenth century this family came to America, and made their first permanent location in Allegheny county, Penn., where other children were born, namely: John (of whom a sketch follows); Margaret (wife of John Stewart, Noblestown, Allegheny Co., Penn.); Jane (Mrs. John Moore), and Elizabeth (married to Hugh Glenn, died in Richland county, Ohio). Samuel Arnold and his wife died in Allegheny county, Penn.

John Arnold (the father of our subject) was born August 19, 1800, in Allegheny county, Penn. He received a meager education in the schools of that period, and worked on his father's farm until he was a boy of sixteen or seventeen. He then began to learn the trade of a saddler (which at that time was a very lucrative one), working under his brother-in-law, John Stewart, at Noblestown, Penn. In 1821 he was married to Mary Cavitt, who was born in 1805, in Allegheny county, daughter of George Cavitt, a native of Franklin county, whose father, Patrick Cavitt, was born in Ireland. After his marriage John Arnold located ten miles west of Pittsburgh, along the Pittsburgh & Steubenville pike. He finally secured a small tract of land, to which, by patient industry and toil, he added. They remained in Allegheny county twenty-five years, and in 1846 removed to Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn., along King's creek, where he continued to follow farming. In politics, John Arnold was a Whig and a Republican. At an early age he made the good confession in the Union Church, and in 1854 was elected elder of the King's Creek Associate Reformed Church, which position he held until his death, November 20, 1863. His widow survived him until January 29, 1880, when she was laid by his side in the Frankfort cemetery. She also was connected with the same church as her husband, and when the United Presbyterian Church was organized, united with that Society. They were the parents of the following children: George C. (a U. P. minister), born February 19, 1825, deceased December 1, 1863; Margaret (wife of Robert Ramsey, Beaver county, Penn.), born November 1, 1826; Samuel, born October 11, 1829, deceased December 2, 1849; John (living in Cedar Rapids, Iowa), born February 23, 1832; William T. (whose name opens this sketch); Agnes (Mrs. B. F. Mevey, of Allegheny, Penn.), born June 24, 1836; J. G., born November 9, 1839, deceased June 5, 1857; Cyrus G., born September 5, 1842; and J. Lee (living in Chicago), born January 3, 1850.

William T. Arnold was born December 22, 1833, in Allegheny county, and attended the country schools of his vicinity. He was reared on the farm and performed the usual duties of agricultural life. On October 24, 1860, he married Ann Eliza Ramsey, who was born November 4, 1835, in Hanover township, Washington county, daughter of Mitchell and Ann (George) Ramsey. The following children have blessed this union: Thomas G., a resident of Cedar Rapids, Iowa; John, deceased in youth; James M.; Anna Mary; William C., and Charles S.; the last four are living at home. After his marriage William T. Arnold located on the farm in Hanover township, this county, adjoining the Beaver county line, where he has ever since resided, following farming and stock raising. He has also dealt in agricultural implements. Although not a wealthy man, Mr. Arnold enjoys the world and takes life cheerfully, doing his duty day by day. In politics he is an enthusiastic Republican, taking a warm interest in the success of his party. Mrs. Arnold is a member of the King's Creek U. P. Church.

NER O. BROWNLEE is descended from one of the oldest pioneer families of Washington county, Penn. Archibald Brownlee, the earliest known ancestor, was born near Glasgow, Scotland, and passed his early youth in his native land. When a young man he emigrated to America with his wife and family, and locating in eastern Pennsylvania resided there many years previous to the Revolution, and there reared a family of children, three of whom were: Thomas (born in Scotland), James and William. The Indians becoming hostile drove settlers (mentioned) back to eastern Pennsylvania. The Revolution breaking out, Thomas enlisted under General Washington, and was one of his ferrymen crossing the Delaware. He was also one of Washington's select marksmen, and was a man of great muscular power, weighing from two hundred and fifty to three hundred pounds.

Thomas Brownlee, son of Archibald, grew to manhood, and was married to Martha Shearer. After taking up his claim and after the Revolution the young man came farther west, locating in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn. He there entered 600 acres of land, nearly half of which tract is still in the possession of his descendants. His brothers, James and William, and his cousins, James and John Brownlee, each took up 600 acres. The following children were born to Thomas and Martha Brownlee: Hamilton, Archibald, David, Margaret, Jane and Martha; all of whom are now deceased. The mother of these children died, and after several lonely years, Mr. Brownlee was united in marriage with Elizabeth Muncy, who bore him four children: William T., Elizabeth, Rachel and Susan, all of whom are deceased. Of these children, William T. Brownlee was killed in Missouri, by a neighbor with whom he had some trouble.

Archibald, son of Thomas and Martha (Shearer) Brownlee, was born January 12, 1795, on the farm in Buffalo township, Washington county. He was one of the first Abolitionists, and took an active part in smuggling slaves, being interested in the underground railway, which was made to assist the fugitive negro in escaping to Canada. Mr. Brownlee was married to Keziah, daughter of William, and descendant of Archibald Brownlee, and the following children were born to their union: Joanna (residing in Kansas), Ariel (living in Buffalo township, Washington county), Ebenezer (a minister in Blue Earth City, Minn.), Margaret (living in Washington county), Keziah (deceased), Martha, Elizabeth and Jonathan (residents of Washington county). Of the above family, Ariel Brownlee was born July 16, 1829, on the property in Buffalo township, which he now owns. He received a common-school education, and was reared to farm work. He enlisted in Company A, Eighty-fifth P. V. I., under Capt. H. J. Van-Kirk, and took part in the engagements of Fair Oaks, Deep Bottom and numerous skirmishes. Receiving his discharge, he returned to the farm, upon which he has since resided. Politically he is a Republican, and in religion a United Presbyterian.

Jonathan Brownlee, son of Archibald and Keziah Brownlee, was born in Buffalo township, Washington county, and passed his youth on the farm, where he received a fair education, and afterward taught eight terms of school. On November 28, 1854, he was married to Catherine Anderson, daughter of Benjamin Anderson, Donegal township, Washington county, and to them the following children have been born: Anderson (a minister (U. P.) living at Martin's Ferry, Ohio), Alvin (deceased), Nettie, Ner O., Carrie, Jennie, Melvin (deceased) and Hervey (deceased). Mr. Brownlee has a farm of 136 acres and is engaged in stock raising, giving especial attention to breeding hogs, sheep and cattle. In politics he is an active Republican, having filled various township offices.

Ner O. Brownlee, born March 3, 1861, son of Jonathan and Catherine (Anderson) Brownlee, received a fair education, to which he has added much valuable knowledge, making stock raising a special study. On October 29, 1886, he was married to Beatrice, daughter of Thomas Noble, of Wheeling, W. Va. This lady died November 28, 1892, leaving two children: Thomas Owen, born January 4, 1888, and Louisa C., born July 16, 1889 (died June 20, 1891). Like his father Mr. Brownlee is a Republican, but not an active politician. In religion he is connected with the United Presbyterian Church at Claysville.

EBENEZER BUCHANAN, a retired farmer of West Alexander, Penn., was born July 7, 1815, in Ohio county, W. Va. He is a son of John Buchanan, whose father was a native of Ireland, and the first of the family to emigrate to America. He located in Pennsylvania, where his son John was born, who there grew to manhood, and was united in marriage with Catherine Blayne, of Ohio county, W. Va.

After his marriage, Mr. Buchanan remained in Ohio county some time. In 1816 he moved to Champaign county, Ohio, becoming a pioneer of that county, where he died in the following year. He had seven children, only three of whom lived to an adult age, namely: George (deceased at the age of seventy years), Ebenezer (subject of this sketch) and Martha (living on the home farm). After the death of her husband, Mrs. Buchanan and her three living children removed to Belmont county, Ohio, where she lived for some time, thence proceeded to her native place in Ohio county, W. Va. She died in 1870, at the age of eighty-six years, and is now buried in the U. P. graveyard, at West Alexander.

Ebenezer Buchanan is the youngest of a family of seven children. He was but a small boy when his father died, and at the age of twelve years he began to learn the tanner's trade at Taylorstown, Penn. After serving his apprenticeship, he began business for himself in 1836, at Good Intent, Washington county. In the year 1838 he was married to Jane Templeton, who was born November 12, 1818, in West Finley township; she is the daughter of Alexander Templeton, a pioneer. Alexander Templeton was born in 1786, one mile east of Washington, Penn., of Irish parentage. He married Charity McClain, of Pigeon Creek, in 1816, settled on a farm in West Finley township, and to them were born two sons and four daughters. Their sons became Presbyterian ministers. Samuel M. married Margaret, daughter of Rev. James Diekey, and died in 1867. Milo married Agnes Rentoul, of Montrose, Scotland, and died in 1863, both leaving families. The daughters are all married, and are still living.

Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan have had the following children: Maryina C. (Mrs. William Henderson, of Ohio Co., W. Va.), John Alexander (whose health was wrecked in the Civil war, is an apiarist of Holiday's Cove, Hancock Co., W. Va.), Elmira J. (deceased at the age of ten years), Theresa C. (deceased at the age of twelve years), Caroline V. (also deceased in her twelfth year), George Milton (deceased when seven years of age) and Ellsworth (a groceryman of Claysville, Penn.). After his marriage Mr. Buchanan farmed in Marshall county, W. Va., until 1847, when he removed to Ohio county. In the year 1865 he came to Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., and located on the borders of West Alexander. Since the town has increased in extent, Mr. Buchanan has practically become a citizen. In 1885 he retired from active life, and with his wife is now enjoying the fruits of fifty five years of toil. He is an enthusiastic member of the Republican party, but though nominations have been tendered him, he prefers to give his time to his private business. Both Mr. Buchanan and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at West Alexander.

SMITH FRY. The Fry family, of whom this gentleman is a prominent member, are numbered with the earliest and most progressive citizens of Washington county.

The first of the name to settle in Pennsylvania was one Samuel Fry, who was born in 17-- in Virginia, and was there married to Christina Speers, also a native of Virginia, born in 1752. They came overland to Washington county, Penn., in an early day, and July 19, 1792, took a "tomahawk right" to a large tract of land in Fallowfield township. Samuel Fry was a famous hunter, and also worked on his farm, remaining in the fort at night, for protection from the Indians. He died in 1814, being survived by his wife till November 9, 1841, when she too passed away.

Abraham Fry, son of Samuel and Christina (Speers) Fry, was born in 1792, on the home farm in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn. He received a subscription-school education, and in early life was married to Isabella Ringland, a native of Washington county. She bore him eleven children, namely: Samuel (living in Allen township, Washington county), John (also living in Allen township), Christina (Mrs. Abraham Colvin, of Fallowfield township), Abraham (who entered the United States service in Washington county, and is now living near Nashville, Tenn.), Henry, a resident of Sumner county, Tenn., on the Cumberland river), Noah (who died in Fallowfield township), Sarah (wife of Thomas McGowan, Lock No. 4, Fallowfield township), Jackson, living in Cowley county, Kans. (he enlisted in the Civil war, was taken prisoner, and was confined in Andersonville prison eleven months), Clarissa (who married Alexander Allman, and died in East Pike Run township), Smith (of whom a sketch follows) and Isabelle (wife of Elgy Van Voorhis, of Kansas City., Mo.). After their marriage Abraham and Isabelle Fry settled on the upper part of the old homestead in Fallowfield township. He was actively interested in public matters, and first affiliated with the Democratic party, then becoming a Whig and Republican. He died December 11, 1866, followed by his widow April 12, 1881, she having lived to see her youngest daughter the mother of twelve children. Both parents were members of the Church of Christ.

Smith Fry was born March 4, 1836, on the old homestead in Fallowfield township, and is the tenth child in order of birth. He attended the district schools, passing his boyhood on the farm, and March 21, 1861, he married Mary Ann Mitchell, a native of Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn. Her parents were Mark and Lucinda (Burgan) Mitchell, natives of Washington county, Penn., and members of the Church of Christ. James and Elizabeth (Smock) Burgan, natives of Westmoreland county, were among the early pioneers of Washington county, and members of the Church of Christ. He was remarkably well versed in the Scriptures, and it is said of him that he could recite entire chapters without prompting. He served in the war of 1812. Mr. and Mrs. Fry began wedded life on the old place, where he owns 136 acres of good land, and is giving considerable attention to stock raising, especially heavy-draft Clydesdale horses. In his political preferences he votes with the Republican party. His wife is a member of the Church of Christ. Their children are Harvey J. Fry, living in Fallowfield township, married to Miss Maie Reeves, January 12, 1888; Lucinda Isabella, wife of Joseph Nutt; Charley Smith; Abram Elgy; Clara Estella, and Cora Oella.

JOHN MAHAFFEY RUSH, a prominent farmer and stock raiser of Hopewell township, is of Irish descent, his father, Patrick Rush, having been born December 25, 1797, in County Tyrone, Ireland. Patrick's parents were John and Mary Rush, natives of County Tyrone, where they resided during their entire lives.

Patrick Rush evinced a desire to come to America, and when but fourteen years of age, joined a party of friends, named Miller, who were about to emigrate. His parents pleaded with him to remain at home until he reached manhood, but with the impetuosity of youth he determined to sail immediately, and was permitted to accompany his friends on board the vessel, where he concealed himself until out of port. His friends paid for his passage, and he promised to work for them after reaching America until he could repay them. The Miller family came to Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and began clearing land. After working out his debt, young Patrick Rush hired to Mr. Miller by the year, remaining in his employ for several years. On Christmas Day, 1829, he was married to Sarah Mehaffey, a native of Ireland, born September 18, 1799, in County Down, Ireland. She was the daughter of John and Nancy Mehaffey. The latter family came to America and settled in Chartiers township, when Sarah was thirteen years of age, locating near Cross Roads Church, where Mr. Mehaffey was killed September 25, 1825, by a falling tree, while cutting timber for the church. After his marriage to Sarah Mehaffey, Patrick Rush rented a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, upon which he remained for thirty years. He purchased two farms, which he sold, and in 1849 removed to Hopewell township, where the subject of our sketch is now living. Five children were born to Patrick and Sarah Rush, namely: John M., Nancy (wife of James Bigger, of Muskingum county, Ohio), Mary Jane (wife of Matthew Knox, of Guernsey county, Ohio), Robert (lieutenant of the Ringgold Battalion, Pennsylvania Cavalry, killed at Rodney, Va.) and Sarah (married to Samuel Armstrong, of Guernsey county, Ohio). The mother died in October, 1886. She and her husband were members of the United Presbyterian Church. In politics Mr. Rush was a Democrat, but aside from attending election, took no active part in political affairs. He was a man of keen perceptive faculties and good judgment. Beginning life for himself when so very young, he had no opportunity for getting a literary education, yet he was in every sense of the word a successful man, and accumulated a handsome property. He died in August, 1880.

John M. Rush was born October 22, 1830, in Mt. Pleasant township, and was sent to a subscription school, which he attended during the winters until seventeen years of age. He has a vivid recollection of the schools of that time, which were in sharp contrast to the present school system. The rude log schoolhouse with its primitive furniture familiar to every pioneer was the "temple of learning" where he received his education. The course of study pursued at that time included such text-books as "Cobb's Speller" and "U. S. Speller," "Western Calculator" and "English Reader." Quill pens were used, and the "copies were set by the master." Primitive as were the methods employed in those days, it was in such schools and by such methods that many of the most intellectual and able men of our day laid the foundation of their education. The training Mr. Rush then received has served well in his successful business career. At the age of seventeen years he left school and engaged in wagoning between Hickory and Pittsburgh, hauling grain and merchandise, driving four or six horses to a great "Conestoga" wagon. He followed that business nine years, and in 1856 took charge of his father's farm, having since pursued the occupation of farming and stock raising. In 1857 he was married to Nancy, daughter of Charles and Elizabeth (Fronacker) Stoolfire, of Donegal township, and to them were born five children: Albert Stoolfire, Eudora Winona, Lillian, Sallie M. and Herbert. Mr. Rush is residing on his farm two miles southeast of West Middletown. He is a Democrat, but seeks no political prominence. Mrs. Rush and her daughters (all of whom are living at home) are members of the Disciple Church at West Middletown. Mr. Rush has no church affiliations.

Albert S. Rush, son of John M. and Nancy (Stoolfire) Rush, was born August 20, 1860, and was reared on his father's farm in Hopewell township, this county. He received his early education at the district school known as Tartown school, attending there until about eighteen years of age. He then followed farming, working with his father until twenty-two years of age, when he entered Duff's Commercial College at Pittsburgh, Penn., where he remained about three months, when sickness compelled his return home. On June 6, 1883, he was married to Miss San Jacinto Duvall, daughter of Louis Duvall. Their children are Albert John, Mary Nila and Stanley Oklahoma. In addition to managing a large farm, Mr. Rush does an extensive business in breeding, raising and selling pure blood Poland-China pigs, Shropshire sheep, and Jersey cattle, all registered. His exhibits of stock raised on his farm during the last three years have excited the comment and admiration of fine stock fanciers throughout western Pennsylvania. His business is growing, and his sales book holds orders from Ohio, New York, Maryland and Virginia, besides different localities in his own State. He possesses in an eminent degree those qualities which form a first class citizen, and is a credit to his community, enjoying the esteem of his neighbors. He leaves to others the business of politics, caring nothing for the allurements of office-holding, but voices his sentiments at every election by his ballot, being liberal in local elections, supporting the most suitable candidate. In national elections he supports the principles of pure Democracy. Mr. and Mrs. Rush are members of the Dutch Fork Disciple Church, and by precept, practice and financial support, perform their duty toward sustaining and promoting the cause of Christianity in the community.

JOHAN McMANNIS, one of the most prominent native born agriculturists of Washington county, is a son of William McMannis, who in very early days had settled in what is now Canton township, this county, having come, when a young man, from eastern Pennsylvania, where he was born in 1787.

William McMannis was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Patrick Burns, a native of Ireland, and the children born to this union were John, William, James, Ann, Elizabeth and Hannah. The father of this family died in 1849, the mother in 1873. Mr. McMannis removed from Canton township many years ago, and took up his residence in Strabane township until 1830, in which year he came to Buffalo township and settled on a farm in Rural valley. In his political preferences he was an Old-line Whig.

John McMannis, the eldest son of this honored pioneer, was born February 4, 1817, in Canton township, where his boyhood and youth were spent alternately in working on the farm and in attending the subscription schools of the locality. On February 26, 1840, he was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of John Irwin, a farmer of Buffalo township, where he was reared, and where he was married to Elizabeth Anderson, who bore him the following named children: Thomas S., Leviah (wife of John McKee), Mary (wife of John McMannis), Matthew A., Sarah (wife of John P. Gamble), Elizabeth M. (wife of John Williamson) and John. Mr. Irwin was a member of the Seceder Church, and in politics an uncompromising Whig. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. McMannis resided three years on the farm with his father. He then located on a rented farm in Buffalo township, situated about one and one-half miles from Taylorstown. This place he afterward purchased, and it was on this farm that the first oil well in the township was sunk. The names of the children born to them are Elizabeth (wife of J. R. Littell), Anna, Catherine (Mrs. William H. Torrence), Myra, and Tilla (wife of W. S. Richey). The mother of this family departed this life December 21, 1871, in her fifty sixth year, a devout member of the U. P. Church. Mr. McMannis was originally a Democrat, but since 1856 he has been a Republican; for twenty-four years he was a school director, and from 1865 he served as a justice of the peace for ten years, or, in fact, till he declined to serve longer, even when re-elected.

In the summer of 1889 Mr. McMannis retired from active business life, and having sold the farm to the Washington Oil Company, he moved into the village of Taylorstown, where he now resides enjoying in the sunset of his life the fruits of his earlier labors. He is well known among the old residents of Buffalo township, and has always been identified with its advancement. He is a representative self-made man, one who from small beginnings has by industry, economy and sound judgment accumulated an ample competence. He has never used tobacco or liquor in any form, and is hale and hearty, universally respected and esteemed.

ALLEXANDER McCONNEL is one of the leading agriculturists and stockmen of Chartiers township. His grandfather, Alexander McConnell, was born July 10, 1755, in Charlotte county, Va., and in early manhood married Esther Reed, who was born May 16, 1756. She died November 30, 1786, and on April 28, 1789, Mr. McConnell was united in marriage with Elizabeth McCrory, who was born February 26, 1767. They settled near Carlisle, Penn., and a few years later came to Cecil township, this county, where he took a patent of land. He died many years ago, and his wife survived him several years. To them were born the following children: Alexander, David (deceased in Cecil township), born October 5, 1791; Jean, born October 11, 1793; Prudence, born November 14, 1795 (wife of James Oram, of Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn., deceased at Washington, Iowa, in 1890); Nancy, born September 26, 1797; and Matthew, born October 25, 1799.

Alexander McConnel, father of subject, was born February 2, 1790, on the home farm in Cecil township, where he grew to manhood, and was married to Ann Berry, a native of this county. The young people first located in Allegheny county, Penn., then moved to Cecil township, this county, and six years afterward settled on a farm in North Strabane township, carrying on a mill in connection with farm duties. Mr. and Mrs. McConnel were the parents of the following children: Alexander, Elizabeth, Jane (first married to Daniel Boyles, and is now living in Washington, the widow of Mr. Collins), Mary A. (living in North Strabane township, widow of Richard Fife, his third wife), Isabelle (deceased wife of Dr. Vail, of Rochelle, Ill.), John (married, living in North Strabane township, on the old homestead), David (who died about 1856), William (a United Presbyterian minister, licensed in June, 1856, first called to the church at Hanover, Beaver Co., Penn., and in 1858 came to West Newton, Penn. He married Miss Anna McClurkin, of Pittsburgh, and died July 18, 1866, in Allegheny, Penn.), Matthew (deceased in 1886), James (married, living in Houstonville, this county) and Anderson (deceased in 1884). After the mother of these children died, Mr. McConnel married a Miss Torrence, who survived him about one year. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, in politics was first a Whig, then a Republican, and a strong opponent of slavery. He assisted in the organization of the Society which is now the Greenside United Presbyterian Church, of which he was an elder from the first organization of the body, holding that position until his death. He resided in North Strabane township for more than sixty years, then moved to Peters township, this county, where he died about two years afterward.

Alexander McConnel, whose name opens this sketch, was born December 20, 1816, in Allegheny county, Penn., being the eldest in his father's family. When but three years of age he came with them to Cecil township, this county, and when he was nine years of age, the parents settled on the home place in North Strabane township, where Alexander completed his education in the subscription schools. He learned the trade of a millwright, and in 1847 came to Chartiers township, erecting a flouring-mill known as McConnel's Mill, on Chartiers creek, which business he followed fifteen years, also working at his trade. On December 8, 1853, he was united in marriage with Eliza McKnight, of Chartiers township, daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Anderson) McKnight, the father a native of Cecil county, Md., and the mother a native of Ireland. After their marriage the young people settled on the farm in Chartiers township which is their present home. Four children have blessed their union, viz.: Alexander Anderson (who died July 6, 1862), born April 8, 1856; J. M., born September 14, 1858; John O., born August 24, 1860; and one deceased in infancy. Of these children, John graduated in 1883 from Westminster College, read medicine one year, and was then educated for the ministry at Allegheny, Penn., finishing at Xenia (Ohio) Seminary, and was licensed to preach. He was ordained in the Westmoreland Presbytery at Ligonier, Penn. In 1889 he married Mary, daughter of Rev. J. H. Timmons.

Mr. McConnel owns a fertile and well-cultivated farm of 230 acres, and, since coming to Chartiers township, has devoted his time to its improvement and management. He was formerly a Whig, but since the organization of the Republican party has voted the latter ticket, and has served four terms as township supervisor. He and his wife are earnest members of the United Presbyterian Church at Cross Roads, in which he has been a ruling elder for many years. In his youth Mr. McConnel joined the Spear Spring Church, now known as the Greenside Church.

At Dr. Martin's store in Canonsburg, the second attempt was made to build the Chartiers Railroad. Wesley Grier, David Houston and Alexander McConnel were talking with others about the great benefit that the building of this road would be. The three at once subscribed $1,000 apiece, and got others at the store to subscribe smaller amounts. These three men also raised more money; Mr. McConnel raised $8,000 within four miles of his home; the start thus made secured the road, and Mr. McConnel took $1,800 worth of stock.

JAMES R. STEWART. Prominent among the many families of Irish descent who have added so greatly to the improvement of America, ranks the one of which this gentleman was an honored member. As early as 1795 John and Mary Stewart emigrated from Ireland, bringing with them their four children, and made for themselves a new home in what was then an undeveloped country. Mr. Stewart died, December 18, 1836, when eighty-six years old; his wife preceded him to the grave February 12, 1836, being at the time eighty-five years of age.

The eldest son, Archibald Stewart, married Rebecca Reed, a native of Pennsylvania, and after his marriage settled in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., where he engaged in farming and also carried on the blacksmith's trade. He was an elder in the Associate Reformed Church and in the United Presbyterian Church at Cross Roads. Politically he was a Republican. His death occurred June 5, 1862, after he had attained his seventy fifth year, and on May 3, 1857, his wife passed from earth in her sixty fourth year. Their children were: James R., who married Elizabeth T. Miller; Mary, Mrs. Samuel Griffith, of Hickory, Mt. Pleasant township, Washington county; Jane, Mrs. William S. White, who died in 1883; Joseph, who was married in Illinois, and died there; William, who lives in Villisca, Iowa, and is married; Margaret, who married David Miller, and died in 1872; Sarah, Mrs. Andrew Miller, of Mt. Pleasant township, and John, who first married Miss Eliza McLaughlin, and afterward Miss Elizabeth Slemmons. He died in 1886, in Donegal township, Washington county.

James R. Stewart was born June 9, 1812, on the farm where his widow now resides. His educational advantages were very limited, the schools of that time being only rude huts, and the teachers being but indifferently prepared to impart knowledge. However, he learned the blacksmith's trade thoroughly under the tutorage of his father, and afterward followed it in connection with farming. On May 23, 1839, Mr. Stewart married Miss Elizabeth T. Miller, a daughter of Jacob and Jane (Filston) Miller, and after their marriage the young couple resided on the home farm, where Mrs. Stewart is now living, and where Mr. Stewart died, May 22, 1880. He was sincerely mourned by the numerous friends who appreciated his sterling worth and strict integrity. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart were earnest church workers, and devoted much attention to deeds of charity. Their union was blessed with two children: Jacob M. (of Chartiers township, who married Miss Rebecca Todd, and after her death married Miss Lizzie Grounds) and Rebecca, who married, October 20, 1864, William H. Thompson, who was born in Canonsburg, May 17, 1837. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Thompson located in Canonsburg, where he engaged in wagon-making, and then moved to Hickory, where he died February 1, 1873, at the age of thirty-six years. He was an active worker in the Republican party; and was a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg. The children born of their union were: a son who died in infancy; Stewart J., a farmer by occupation, who owns the valuable farm on which he lives; Joseph H., a graduate of Duff's Commercial College, Pittsburgh, Penn.; Elizabeth Emma (deceased) and Millie R. Mrs. Thompson has given her children superior educations; she now makes her home with her children on the farm.

Jacob Miller, father of Mrs. Stewart, was born in eastern Pennsylvania, and there married Jane Filston, also a native of that section of the State. Soon after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Miller moved to Washington county, locating near McConnell's Mill, in Chartiers township, and a few years later took possession of the property, now known as the "Col. Robert Miller" farm, where the following children were born: Rachel, Mrs. Thomas Sproat, of South Strabane; Mary, Mrs. Samuel McNary (she and her husband have each been married before); Nancy, Mrs. John Boon; Jane, Mrs. Richard Sproat, of Ohio; Samuel, who married Miss Mary Ann Cockins, and lives in Mt. Pleasant township; Catherine, Mrs. James McDowell, of Mt. Pleasant township; Jacob, who married and moved to Ohio; Margaret, Mrs. John McDowell, Mt. Pleasant township; Robert, who first married Abbieah Cundal, and afterward made Elizabeth Glen his wife (he died in October, 1891); Elizabeth T., Mrs. James R. Stewart; Sarah, Mrs. James Patterson; and Sophia, who has never married. Mrs. Elizabeth T. Stewart is the only member of the Miller family now living, and is a worthy representative of her highly respected ancestors.

CLARK PRESTON, an honored citizen and representative agriculturist of Somerset township, is a native of the same, having been born October 16, 1837, a son of John Preston and grandson of Bernard Preston.

Bernard Preston was born April 29, 1754, in Maryland, and was reared on the home place in his native State. On May 7, 1776, he was united in marriage with Mary Preston, also a native of Maryland, born March 19, 1759. He followed farming, and in 1784 moved to Pennsylvania, purchasing a large tract of land in Washington county, where he and his devoted wife remained the rest of their lives, rearing the following children: Sarah, Nathan, Jacob, Samuel, Anna, Elizabeth, Daniel, Jonathan, Silas, Bernard and John. The parents of this family were members of the M. E. Church, the old church building of that denomination being on the farm now owned and occupied by our subject.

John Preston, the youngest son of Bernard and Mary (Preston) Preston, was reared on the home farm, and early in life was married to Margaret, daughter of Robert and Jane Clark, the latter of whom died in 1866. To this union were born five children, viz.: Mary J. (deceased wife of Dr. W. L. S. Willes, of Washington county, Penn.), Clark (subject of sketch), Loammi (deceased), John F. (living in Neosho county, Kans.), and Lacy A. (unmarried), a resident of Monongahela City, Penn. The father died September 24, 1881, the mother in 1851, the former a member of the M. E. Church, the latter a Presbyterian.

Clark Preston

Clark Preston grew to manhood on the home farm, receiving a common school education. In 1862 he enlisted in Company D, Ringgold Battalion, P. V. C., was honorably discharged, and is now drawing a pension. On September 18, 1867, he was married to Catherine C. Teeple, who was born September 22, 1844, in Washington county, Penn., daughter of Isaac and Margaret (Williams) Teeple, both also natives of Washington county, and who had nine children: Thomas (a farmer of Neosho county, Kans.), Theodore (a farmer of Carroll township, Washington county), Catherine C. (wife of Clark Preston), Sarah (unmarried), Emma S. (married to A. J. Hess, a farmer of Fallowfield township, this county), Adda T. (wife of Robert McKee, deceased farmer of Allegheny county), and Josephine T. (wife of Thomas Edgar); the others died in infancy. The father died in 1881, a member of the Presbyterian Church; the mother passed away in 1868, an adherent of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Clark and Catherine C. (Teeple) Preston have had the following children: Clyde A., born July 27, 1868; Harry A., born September 26, 1869; Metta M., born July 19, 1871; Theodore A., born March 17, 1873; Isaac C., born February 28, 1875; Vance L. G., born October 28, 1876, and Cooper M., born August 27, 1879. Mr. Preston is not interested in political questions, but votes the Republican ticket, and takes an active part in all matters pertaining to church or school; he has served fifteen years as school director. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church. The home farm consists of 140 acres of land, in a high state of cultivation, upon which is erected a comfortable two-story dwelling, also a commodious barn and substantial outbuildings.

WILLIAM PATTERSON, a worthy representative of an old pioneer family, is a son of William Patterson, whose grandfather, James, was the first of the family to settle in America. Of the children of this James Patterson, William was born in 1733, and in 1758 was married to Rosanna Scott, of Cecil county, Md. She died April 5, 1769, and on April 10, 1770, he was married to Elizabeth Brown, who bore him ten children. In the spring of 1778 he and several of his sons secured 350 acres of land in Cross Creek township, this county, upon which he settled in the fall of same year, dying there in 1818.

Thomas Patterson, a son of William and Rosanna (Scott) Patterson, was born October 1, 1764, and passed his boyhood on the home farm. In 1794 he bought some of his father's land, erecting a grist and flour mill upon it, and also purchased additional property from Mary Patterson. On October 6, 1795, he was married to Elizabeth Findley, daughter of Hon. William Findley, of Westmoreland county, Penn. The young people began house-keeping in a log cabin, which was formerly used as a store, and in this pioneer home eleven children were born: William, James, Samuel, John, Thomas, Findley, Moses and David, and Mary, Elizabeth and Rosanna. Thomas Patterson, Sr., was a major-general in the militia. He was a member of Congress from 1817 to 1825, and of the Electoral College in 1816. He died of apoplexy November 17, 1841.

William Patterson, son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Findley) Patterson, was born September 25, 1796, and at an early age was entrusted with the care of the farm and mills, during his father's absence on political business. In 1812 his father established a fulling mill, of which William took charge as soon as he was competent. In 1819 he was united in marriage with Margaret, daughter of Hon. Aaron Lyle, a resident of Cross Creek township, this county. William Patterson was a prominent officer in the militia, and organized and commanded the Union Volunteer Battalion; was also major on the staff of the brigadier general of militia. In 1828 he was elected to the State Legislature, serving four consecutive terms, and during the last term was Speaker of the House. He took a very active interest in all educational matters, secured the erection of an elegant schoolhouse near his home, contributing liberally to the expenses, and serving most efficiently as director. While in the Legislature he obtained $8,000 from the State to erect a new building for Jefferson College. In 1844 he became a member of the Electoral College, and in 1859, retiring from a brilliant public career, he passed his last days in quiet. The children born to William and Margaret Patterson were Lysander, Mary, James, Robert, Aaron Lyle, Caroline, William, Margaret, Thomas A., and Samuel Findley. The father died in April, 1879, the mother in March, 1883.

William Patterson, son of William and Margaret (Lyle) Patterson, was born January 4, 1832, in Cross Creek township, this county, and received a common-school education, assisting at the same time, his father on the farm and in the mill. On January 8, 1856, he was wedded to Sarah Margaret Jackson, who was born December 22, 1838, in Jefferson county, Ohio, daughter of James Jackson. They have had the following children: Mary (Mrs. Eli Sheets, of Ashland county, Ohio), Sarah Ella (wife of Newton Simpson, of Hill Grove, Hardin Co., Ky.), James J. (deceased in youth), Margaret (a school teacher), Jennie, Lewis Cass, Annie, Robert Lee (deceased in youth), Elvira B. and William B. Mr. Patterson farmed in Independence township for some time after his marriage, then moved to Ashland county, Ohio, remaining there several years, but again came to this county. He afterward located near Springfield, Ohio, but in the fall of 1875 returned to his native home, settling about two and a half miles south of Independence, this county, adjoining the West Virginia line, where he has since resided. He is engaged in farming, stock raising and in fruit and vegetable culture.

He enjoys a reputation for integrity and veracity, as well as that of being an independent thinker, untrammelled by any creed, dogma, superstition, preconceived or inherited notion. He is not a member of any religious or secret organization, but claims the right to investigate all questions (both secular and religious) for himself, subject to no dictator except instructed reason. He believes that faith without knowledge is a delusion and a snare. His motto, expressed in the language of the poet, is:

New occasions teach new duties,
Time makes ancient creeds untruth;
He must upward then and onward,
Who would keep abreast of truth.

Tempora mutantur, et nos mutantur in illis.
(The times change, and we change with them.)

WILLIAM S. RUSSELL was born February 12, 1843, in Smith township, this county. He is one of the leading agriculturists of the vicinity, and a lineal descendant of Abraham Russell, who was born in Ireland, and, coming to America soon after the war of the Revolution, was married in this country. He became one of the earliest settlers of Smith township, this county, at a time when the Indians made fearful slaughter among the white pioneers. He was a successful farmer, and served his country in the war of 1812, dying at an advanced age, and leaving the following children, who also lived to advanced ages: William (mentioned below), James and John (twins, the latter of whom died in Allegheny county, Penn.) and Nancy (wife of Jacob Drake, a farmer of Armstrong county, Penn.).

William Russell, eldest son of Abraham Russell, was born in the latter part of the last century, in Smith township, this county, receiving a somewhat imperfect schooling, as the opportunities of those days were very meager and primitive. In 1798 he was married to Nancy Strain, whose parents were early settlers in Smith township, and in about 1800 Mr. and Mrs. Russell, with their infant son, removed to Portage county, Ohio, residing there until the close of the war of 1812, in which William was a soldier. Being dissatisfied with the country, he returned about 1815 to Smith township, and located near the line of Cross Creek township, where he continued to follow farming until his death. In politics he was a Democrat. His wife died several years before her husband, and left the following children: Abraham (deceased in this county at the age of eighty-five; he never married), Sarah (deceased wife of James Fulton, formerly of Cross Creek township, then moved to Hanover township, this county), John S., Samantha (who cared for her father in his old age and died unmarried) and James (deceased in Columbiana county, Ohio).

John S. Russell was born February 14, 1806, in Portage county, Ohio, on the home farm, where he was initiated into the mysteries of agricultural life. On February 12, 1833, he was married to Jane Simpson, who was born September 3, 1815, daughter of James and Ellen (Stewart) Simpson, old and early residents of the township. The children born to this union were as follows: Ellen (living in Burgettstown, Penn., unmarried), Cynthia (unmarried, also residing in Burgettstown), Margaret (wife of James Dunbar, of Smith township), Ophelia (Mrs. Hugh Wilson, of Hanover township, this county), William S. (subject of our sketch), Agnes (an unmarried lady of Burgettstown, Penn.), James C. (an agriculturist of Smith township) and David A. (deceased farmer of Smith township). Mrs. Russell died July 23, 1851, and for his second wife Mr. Russell married Mary A. Vincent, who was born February 20, 1818, daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Rea) Vincent, of Mt. Pleasant township, this county. Two children were born to John S. and Mary (Vincent) Russell: John (who died in youth) and Jane (Mrs. D. W. Smith, of Smith township, this county). After his first marriage Mr. Russell settled on a farm one mile west of Bulger, Smith township, where his life was passed successfully in agricultural pursuits. Year by year his possessions increased, until, by dint of careful management, business sagacity and good financiering, he became among the most extensive wool growers and largest landholders of the township, at the time of his death owning nearly six hundred acres of valuable and productive real estate. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church, which he served as an elder. He died September 15, 1879.

William S. Russell was born on a portion of the farm in Smith township, where he is now living, and was reared to rural life. On April 7, 1870, he was united in marriage with Miss Mary McBride, who was born March 5, 1842, a daughter of John McBride. The following children have blessed this union: Eva J., John M., Holland S., Annie S., Clement K., Cynthia S., Walter S., Luella and Dwight M. William S. and Mary (McBride) Russell settled on the "Old Simpson farm," one mile west of Bulger, where his maternal grandfather resided in early days. He devotes a considerable portion of his time to general agriculture and stock raising, and also conducts a small dairy. He was formerly a Democrat, afterward uniting with the Prohibition party, and in religion he and his wife are consistent members of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church, in which he is an elder.

DAVID M. PRY is a substantial and progressive citizen of Burgettstown, Penn. His grandfather was married in Virginia to a Miss Barnes, who bore him children as follows: John, Abraham, William L., Eliza (Mrs. John Powelson), Elizabeth (wife of Samuel Pascal, of Cross Creek township) and Mary. The father of this family was a Democrat in politics.

Abraham Pry, father of David M., was born November 10, 1813, in Hampshire county, W. Va. The father died when the son was but four years of age, and the child was left to struggle through the perplexities of boyhood unaided, but he secured an education by dint of perseverance and energy, and when about twenty-two years of age came to Washington county, settling in Cross Creek township. In 1840 he was there married to Rachel, daughter of David McClurg, of the same township, and the young people then settled on the farm where they are yet living. The following children have been born to their union: David M., Catherine J. (deceased), John W., William H. and Joseph M. (twins, the latter of whom is deceased), Abraham, Cynthia J. (deceased), Anna M. (deceased), Ambrose (living in Iowa) and Francis H. (deceased). The father of this family was originally a Democrat, then a Whig, finally uniting with the Republican party, whose principles he now supports. He attends the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church, contributing liberally to its maintenance.

David M. Pry, eldest son of Abraham and Rachel (McClurg) Pry, was born June 16, 1842, on the home farm in Cross Creek township, and remained with his parents until about twenty years of age. He enlisted in Company K, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., serving throughout the Civil war. He was wounded at Spottsylvania, being shot in the leg by a musket ball, and was sent to the "Finley" hospital at Washington City. He remained there until mustered out of the service August 16, 1865, then returned home and engaged in farming. On October 5, 1865, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of John Rea, of Cross Creek township, this county, and the children born to them were Nora L., Jennie O., Mary G., William R. (deceased) and Edwin B. After his marriage Mr. Pry followed farming for two years, and in 1868 opened a general store in Burgettstown, Penn. In 1884 he was elected recorder of the county, and served in that office until 1887, then returned to Burgettstown, resuming his former business. Mrs. Pry died in September, 1877, and was buried in the Presbyterian cemetery at Burgettstown. On February 5, 1885, Mr. Pry was united in marriage with Mary D., daughter of Robert Lee, of Jefferson township, this county. In politics Mr. Pry is a Republican, and has always been active in promoting the welfare of his party, being prominent in the county conventions, and has twice represented his county in the State conventions at Harrisburg. He has been five times appointed, by the Governor of the State, a notary public, serving in that capacity sixteen years, and on February 21, 1893, was elected a justice of the peace in the borough of Burgettstown. He is also enrolled as agent or attorney, and admitted to practice before the Department of the Interior in Washington, D. C.; he has secured many pensions for disabled soldiers, widows, orphans and dependent parents of the late Civil war. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown, and has held the office of elder since 1874. He was a delegate from the Washington Presbytery to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, which met in Chicago in 1877.

J. C. CROUCH, farmer, is a prosperous citizen of Peters township. The first ancestor of his family, concerning whose history there is any record, was one Robert Crouch, a native of Maryland. This pioneer left his native State, and many years ago settled in Nottingham township, Washington Co., Penn., where he received a Government patent for land, and passed his life in tilling the soil. His children were William, John, and two daughters, whose names are unknown.

William Crouch, son of Robert, was born in Lindenfort, Penn., and reared to manhood in Nottingham township, Washington Co., Penn. In early life he married Miss McIlvaine, and settled on a farm in North Strabane township, this county, where ten children were born to them, namely: George, Robert, John, Joseph, Isaiab, Watson, Daniel, Sarah, and two whose names are unknown. Mr. Crouch was an elder in the Presbyterian Church.

Watson Crouch was born in 1819, on the farm in North Strabane township. When a young man he was married to Agnes, daughter of James Crawford, of Peters township, and she died leaving two children: an infant (deceased), and J. C., whose sketch follows. For his second wife Watson Crouch married Deborah, daughter of David Wells, and she has borne him eight children. In 1858 the family moved to Marshall county, W. Va., where they are yet living.

J. C. Crouch, son of Watson and Agnes (Crawford) Crouch, was born March 11, 1844, in North Strabane township, this county. In 1862 he enlisted in the Twelfth Regiment, W. Va. V. I., and served in the army of the James river. He remained until the contest was ended, and was present at Lee's surrender, then coming home resumed work on the farm. On December 17, 1869, he was married to Mary, daughter of William McMurray, of Peters township, and six children have blessed their home, viz.: William J., Harvey W., Thomas B., Frank M., Charles M., and Ross Emmett, all of whom are living under the parental roof. The farm contains 160 acres of land. Mr. Crouch is actively interested in the success of the Republican party, and has held many township offices. He is a member and trustee of the United Presbyterian Church at Peters Creek.

JAMES and LEANDER McCORMICK. John McCormick was born in Scotland, and after landing in America came to Pennsylvania.

About the year 1775 he located on a farm situated on the boundary line between Allegheny and Washington counties. He was married in this country to Elizabeth McMillian, a native of Scotland, who bore him six children, namely: John, James, Samuel, Griselda, Elizabeth and Mary, all of whom are now deceased. The father was a Revolutionary soldier, and returning home after the war, died on the old place.

John McCormick, son of John and Elizabeth McCormick, was born in 1787, in eastern Pennsylvania. He was there married to Margaret Johnston, who was born in 1789, daughter of Robert Johnston, a Revolutionary soldier, and the following children were born to this union: John, Mary, Robert, James, Samuel, Agnes, Elizabeth, Margaret and George. Of this family James, Samuel and Margaret are yet living.

James McCormick was born October 14, 1814, in Allegheny county, Penn., and passed his boyhood on the home place. He then learned the carpenter's trade, following the same for nineteen years, when he came to his present farm in Peters township. On December 14, 1843, he was married to Jane Wright, and their children were as follows: John, Leander, Jane, Margaret, Almira and Elizabeth. Those now living are John, Leander and Margaret. The mother died in 1859, and for his second wife James McCormick married on May 3, 1861, Elizabeth Monek, who bore him two sons, William and James. This wife was laid to rest December 16, 1883. Mr. McCormick began life with no financial aid, and has accumulated a good property. He has eighty acres of fine land, upon which a good house has been erected. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and has held many township offices. He has been a member of and elder in the United Presbyterian Church for thirty years.

Leander McCormick was born March 9, 1857, on the farm near Bower Hill, Washington county, Penn., where he remained during his minority. He then taught school three years in Chartiers, Peters, and Nottingham townships, and in 1881 opened a store at Venetia, same county. On November 7, 1882, he was united in marriage with Angie, daughter of Amos Caseber, a resident of Nottingham township, this county. Leander McCormick was appointed the first postmaster of Venetia, and retained that office until 1886, when he was removed, owing to a change in the administration. In 1889 he was reinstated by President Harrison, and has since filled that position in connection with his store. His property consists of two houses and lots in the town, the store room and a fine dwelling now in process of erection. Politically, he is a staunch Republican, and has served in various township offices; in religion he is a member, trustee, and treasurer of the Presbyterian Church at Finleyville. Mr. and Mrs. McCormick have three children: Eva J., Elmer L. and James Benjamin Harrison.

J. W. DONALDSON is an enterprising young farmer of North Strabane township. He is a son of John Donaldson (who was a son of James), who passed his youth on the home farm in Westmoreland county, Penn., where he was educated. He was married to Margaret Salisbury, a resident of Red Oak, Brown Co., Ohio, who bore him children, as follows: Josephine (who died at the age of fourteen), Thomas W. and Margaret (Mrs. William H. Jones). For his second wife Mr. Donaldson married Rebecca VanEman, and their children were Mary E., J. William, Jennie R. and Alexander B. Mr. Donaldson was a Whig, and an ardent partisan. He served many years as justice of the peace in Brown county, Ohio, to which State he removed from Pennsylvania six months before his first marriage, where he was engaged in coach building and afterward in farming. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he was an elder for years. He died in Brown county, Ohio, and the family then removed to Washington county, Penn., first locating near Canonsburg.

J. W. Donaldson was born September 13, 1853, in Brown county, Ohio, and came to Pennsylvania with the family when but a small boy. His education was principally obtained by self-study, as he was obliged to earn his living at a very early age, working at any employment he could secure. On January 1, 1880, he was united in marriage with Mary B., daughter of T. H. Lyon, and their union has been blessed by the following children:

Mary L., Arthur V., Bertha B., Nellie J., Annie Grace and William Harvy. After his marriage, Mr. Donaldson purchased a portion of the Linn farm in North Strabane township, where he remained several years, and then bought and moved upon his present home in the same township. He has, by enterprise and perseverance, achieved his own success, and is a liberal supporter of all public enterprises. He takes an active part in church work, serving in the Presbyterian Church as trustee nine years, and holding the office of ruling elder for the past six years. The Society of which he and his family are members is known as the "Dr. McMillan Church." In politics he is an active and valued member of the Republican party.

JOHN CONRAD. Among the prominent citizens and successful agriculturists of Fallowfield township, this gentleman is prominent. He is a son of John Conrad, who was born in 1795, in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and grew to manhood on the home farm. When a young man he selected a life companion in the person of Catherine, daughter of Robert Ferguson, a farmer of Somerset township, Washington county, and to this union were born the following named children: William, Hannah, Margaret, Jane, Elmira, John, Catherine, David and Elizabeth. The latter two are numbered with the dead. The father always followed agricultural pursuits; he served the township in various offices until he died, in 1868. He was followed to the grave by the mother in 1869.

John Conrad was born November 12, 1830, in Fallowfield township, and there received his early education. On attaining the age of maturity he took charge of the home place, consisting of 180 acres of fertile land, lying five miles from Monongahela City. He now owns 105 acres of land adjoining the village of Lock No. 4, where he deals in stock. Of the village of Lock No. 4 Mr. Conrad platted a part, a portion of the village being at one time part of the farm. He is the owner of a handsome modern dwelling and nicely decorated grounds. He votes with the Democrat party, and has served as judge of election and filled other offices. In religion he is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Conrad is yet unmarried.

ULYSSES S. WHEELER, one of the most enterprising farmers of Jefferson township, is a son of John Wheeler, whose father, Thomas Wheeler, came from Maryland to West Virginia, locating near Steubenville. Thomas Wheeler was married in Maryland to Miss Honor Donovan, who bore him eleven children, as follows: James, John, Thomas, William, Zacha-riah, Andrew, David, Benjamin, Honor, Sarah and Nancy.

John Wheeler was born August 18, 1812, on the home place in West Virginia, and assisted in the duties of the farm until about twenty years of age, when he learned tailoring. In connection with his trade he carried on a general store in the town of Eldersville, for twelve years, and then bought the farm which is now in the possession of his son Ulysses. John Wheeler was united in marriage in 1839 with Hannah Sharp, who was born March 9, 1817, in Washington county, Penn. The young couple afterward moved to Eldersville, where their six children were born: Amanda, born March 28, 1840; Ulysses S., born June 8, 1841; Jasper, born March 16, 1844; Lorenzo, Henrietta and Loretta (triplets), born July 26, 1848. Of these children, the last four died in infancy, and Amanda (Mrs. Dr. McCullough) died May 25, 1881. John Wheeler died February 1, 1867, and Mrs. Hannah Wheeler, August 30, 1877.

Ulysses S. Wheeler (the subject of this sketch), the only living representative of his family, came to the farm in Jefferson township when about thirteen years old, which has since been his home. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company K, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., and served in the First Brigade, First Division, Second Army Corps, under Gen. Hancock, during the whole war. Ulysses Wheeler was engaged in thirty-two battles and skirmishes, among the more important of which were Cold Harbor, Spottsylvania Court House, Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. Mr. Wheeler was slightly wounded at Chancellorsville. In the year 1865 he received an honorable discharge, and returned home. In the following year he was united in marriage with Frances, daughter of B. M. Sharp, an undertaker of Steubenville. She was a student and graduate of the Steubenville Female Seminary. Ulysses S. and Frances Wheeler have two children, both of whom are living with their parents on the farm. In politics Mr. Wheeler is an ardent Republican, and although his township is strongly Democratic, he has been elected to several official positions, having been tax-collector nine years, and was census taker in the year 1890. He is honored by all his acquaintances, and is a devoted husband and father.

G GAYMAN. In the van of Washington county's prominent farmers and progressive men stands this gentleman. He is a native of the county, born March 11, 1830, in West Bethlehem township. His father, Isaac Gayman, was also born, in 1804, in West Bethlehem township, where he was reared and educated. He was twice married; first to Elizabeth Greenlee, by whom he had children as follows: Olivia, G. G., Caroline, Samuel, Daniel (deceased) and Mary Ann. The mother of these children died at the age of twenty eight years, and Isaac Gayman then married Amanda Wyszwaner, by which union there were three children: Isaac, Emeline and Barbara. The father departed this life in 1879. He was a Democrat in politics. In religious matters he worshiped at the Disciple Church.

At the common schools of his district the subject of this sketch received a fairly liberal education, and was reared to agricultural pursuits on the home farm. In the spring of 1856 he moved into East Bethlehem township, where he owns a fine farm of 107 acres, situated on one of the most pleasant sites in the township, and having thereon a commodious residence and splendid outside buildings. In addition to general agriculture, he devotes a portion of his time to the raising of fine bred sheep. In 1890 he and his son invented a device for curing foot-rot in sheep, said to be most wonderful in its success, and they have now an extensive factory for the manufacture of same, at Clarksville, Greene Co., Penn., which gives employment to several hands. They have salesmen and agents distributed through different parts of the Union; and although their invention is but a few years old, it has already attained a high reputation, having in every respect proved most satisfactory to all who have tried it, as evidenced by the numerous testimonials received from all parts of the country. On December 27, 1855, Mr. Gayman was married to Miss Elizabeth Barnard, and two children have been born to them: Samuel and Emma. Of these Samuel married Ella Buckingham, who died in 1890, leaving two children: Cora and Clyde (the last named being now deceased), and he then took, for his second wife, Jessie Matthews, by whom he has one son, Glen. Emma married William K. Buckingham, and they have two children: George and Grace. Politically Mr. Gayman is a Democrat. He is descended from one of the oldest and most prominent families of Washington county, his grandparents having settled here when it was a wild, uncleared region.

GEORGE W. OSBURN, retired merchant, of Burgettstown, is descended of Irish ancestry, his father and grandfather having been natives of the Emerald Isle.

James Osburn (grandfather of subject) was married to a Miss McCutcheon, of his locality, and they soon afterward emigrated to America, landing at New York. Proceeding to Westmoreland county, Penn., they there made a permanent settlement, and reared a family of children, as follows: James, Jane, Robert, George, Margaret, Catherine, Martha and John. Mr. Osburn was a Democrat in politics, and in religious faith a member of the M. E. Church.

James Osburn, father of George W., was reared and educated in Westmoreland county, Penn., and was first married to a Miss Johnston, who bore him two children, Thomas and Jane. For his second wife, he was united in marriage with Martha, daughter of Adam McKennet, a native of Ireland, and a member of the M. E. Church. Mr. McKennet settled on a farm in Robinson township, this county, in the early part of the present century, and there passed the remainder of his days. After his second marriage James Osburn settled on the McKennet farm, where he died in 1843. Politically Mr. Osburn was a Democrat, and in religion an adherent of the M. E. Church. Martha, wife of James Osburn, survived him until the year 1885, when she died on August 5, leaving three sons, James J., George W. and Robert C.

George W. Osburn, whose name opens this sketch, was born June 9, 1836, and passed his youth on the home farm in Robinson township, receiving a common school education. On October 20, 1859, he was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of James Hastings, of Allegheny county, Penn. She was a very estimable lady and model wife, whose demise occurred January 5, 1865. As a result of this union three children were born, of whom two died in infancy. The surviving child, Martha J., was born January 19, 1861, and was reared on the home farm under Presbyterian influences. She was educated in the common school. She married R. C. Cassidy, November 18, 1884. As a result of this marriage the birth of Ora R. Cassidy occurred on April 17, 1888. Mr. Osburn continued to reside on the home farm until 1888, in which year he came to Burgettstown, where he formed a partnership with R. C. Cassidy in the grocery business, which they conducted until 1891, when Mr. Osburn retired. He is an active Republican, and has held various public offices.

JS. WALTZ, a leading citizen of West Alexander, was born at Washington, Washington Co., Penn. He is a son of Abraham, whose father, Daniel Waltz, was united in marriage with Margaret Bedillion, of Fayette county, Penn. Daniel Waltz was a painter and chair maker by trade, and followed that business all his life. Soon after his marriage he moved to Washington county, where eight children were born and reared, and where the remainder of his life was passed. In politics he was a Jacksonian Democrat, and took an active interest in the welfare of his party.

Abraham Waltz passed his early life on the home farm in Washington county, where he received a common-school education and where he began to learn his father's trade of painter and chair maker, which he afterward followed. He was married to Margaret B., daughter of John Peters. Mr. Peters was born and reared in Massachusetts, and was married to Margaret Saladay, of Fayette county, Penn., where five children were born and reared. Mr. Peters and his wife passed the remainder of their life in Brownsville, Penn., and were buried there. Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Waltz were active members of the M. E. Church at Washington, he being class-leader several years. He affiliated with the Democratic party. The death of this man occurred in 1841, and he was buried in the cemetery at Washington.

J. S. Waltz, the only child of Abraham and Margaret (Peters) Waltz, was reared and educated at Washington, Penn. He has been an extensive reader and instructor in vocal music. At the age of eighteen years he began to learn the cigar trade, remaining four years with Thomas McKean, of Washington. He then began business for himself in the "Black Factory," where he continued two years. In the year 1858, Mr. Waltz came to West Alexander, Penn., and there conducted a dry-goods and grocery store for three years, when he opened a cigar factory, which he now carries on in connection with the insurance brokerage business. He was married to Nannie J., daughter of Isaac Post, of Donogal township, September 24, 1862. There were three children born to this union: Linnette M. (a music teacher, died March 24, 1890), Harry P. (a bookkeeper and musician in Wheeling, W. Va.), and Isaac N. (a bookkeeper), graduated from the business college at Wheeling, W. Va.; he is also a musician. The mother died June 24, 1890. Mr. Waltz was formerly a Democrat, but is now a Republican. He has been administrator and executor of several estates. When the borough of West Alexander was organized he was elected the first justice of the peace, and on the expiration of his term was re-elected, serving in all ten years. He has also served as burgess, has been a member of council, and a school director, and was again elected justice of the peace, his commission dating from May, 1892, to serve five years. During his long service as justice of the peace he joined in marriage several hundred couples, representing every State in the Union, who look upon West Alexander as a western "Gretna Green." In church connection he was formerly a Baptist, but afterward united with the U. P. Church at West Alexander, Penn., in which he has for years been leader of the choir. During the building of the church he served both as trustee and treasurer, and has ever taken an active part in the support of that Society.

The Waltz family are descendants of Frederick

Reinhart Waltz, whose posterity now numbers several thousands, and they are residents of almost every State in the Union. The American pioneers of the family emigrated from Switzerland to America in the year 1731.

ANDREW RUSSELL (deceased). The family of which this gentleman was a representative is descended from prominent early pioneers of Washington county, Penn., and the blood of Scottish patriots flows in their veins. Andrew Russell and his wife (the grandparents) were born in Scotland and emigrated to this country many years ago, first locating near Oxford, Chester Co., Penn. In 1782 he purchased and moved upon a part of the Crawford-Neville Military Patent, in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., also purchasing another farm on the north branch of Chartiers creek. A log cabin was erected, which in due time was supplanted by a more commodious residence, their original home being afterward used for a blacksmith shop. Seven daughters and three sons were born to this couple.

Andrew, son of Andrew Russell, was born in 1777, in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., and in early life was married to Anna McClelland, who bore him eleven children, viz.: James (married to Miss McElroy, living in Unionport, Ohio), Andrew, Alexander, Robert, John, William, Jane, Isabella, Ann, Eliza and Nancy, of whom William and Ann are living. The father died in 1862.

Andrew Russell was born December 31, 1814, on the farm now owned by his brother John, where his boyhood days were passed. On April 18, 1839, Andrew Russell was united in marriage with Jane, daughter of Andrew and Sarah (Steele) Miller, who came from Ireland in 1810. Andrew and Jane Russell reared a family of ten children, of whom the following is a brief record: Sarah Jane was married to Sampson Smith, and they reside in Allegheny City, Penn.; of their six children, Jennie L., Anna R. and Clara S. are living. Andrew J. was first married to Margaret McBurney, who bore him one son, Andrew Lyle (now attending the Philadelphia Medical College); the mother died in October, 1884, and for his second wife Mr. Russell married, August 4, 1886, Alice M. Smith (he is station agent and merchant at Bulger, Penn., and is an elder of the U. P. Church). James H. Russell died when twenty-one years of age. Thomas A. died in infancy. Letitia A. gave her hand in marriage to Ezra McBurney, and was the mother of five children, three of whom are living, namely: Jennie D., Mary L. and Mattie L. Isabella M. Russell was the wife of Matthew Brown, and bore him eight children, namely: David Andrew, John Edmund, Anna Doret, William Ralph, Joseph McElroy, Walter Earl, Robert Russell and Jennie Miller. William M. married Annie J. Agnew, to whom one son, Johnson Miller, was born. Robert A. was married to Nettie Berryhill, who bore him one daughter, Jennie Gertrude. Doret M. married Homer J. Willison, January 4, 1883; to them were born two sons, Howard Linford and Knowlie Clark, the latter died of pneumonia January 7, 1892. Mr. and Mrs. Russell began their married life in a room sixteen feet square, but by patient industry soon accumulated a good property, and owned some very fine stock. He was school director and supervisor, being always interested in all movements tending toward progression, and in religious faith was an earnest member of the United Presbyterian Church. He died April 25, 1891, leaving many warm friends to mourn his loss, who gave to the bereaved family their heartfelt sympathy.

JOSEPH SHAW is one of the most prosperous agriculturists of Chartiers township, giving especial attention to the raising of fine stock, and is a representative of one of the oldest pioneer families of Washington county. He is the second son of John Shaw, and a grandson of Joseph Shaw, the latter of whom was born in the North of Ireland, and married a Miss Sankey, finally settling in Chartiers township, Washington county.

John Shaw (a son of the above-named couple) was born in 1804, on the pioneer farm in Chartiers township, this county. In 1832 he was married to Sarah Harsha, a native of the same county, and they settled on the home farm, where the following children were born to them: Esther Ann and Jane (both deceased in infancy), William D. (who enlisted in Company A, Eighty-fifth Regiment, P. V. L., serving three years, two months and ten days; married Sarah Bancroft, have two sons and one daughter, and is now living in Adams county, Iowa), Joseph, John H. (deceased at the age of fourteen years), an infant and James (twins, the latter of whom was a veteran of Company B, First Virginia Cavalry; married Mary Boyce, who died, leaving four sons and three daughters; he then married Rella St. Clare, by which union there is one son now living in Guernsey county, Ohio), Sarah Jane (who married J. L. Henderson, and died leaving four sons and one daughter), Harrison Marshall (who died of typhoid fever, at the age of seven years), Thomas (residing on the old pioneer farm, married Hannah Grounds, who died leaving one son, and he then married Jennie W. Agnew, by whom he has one son and two daughters), Rebecca Agnes (deceased in youth), Robert Theodore (a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College, now a physician and surgeon at Silver Plume, Colo., and who has served twice as a member of the Legislature from his county) and Harriet (married about the year 1878 to David Bedow, to whom she bore a son; she died in March, 1880). The mother of this family died of apoplexy in 1869. She was a daughter of John Harsha, whose parents were early pioneers of Washington county, of Scotch-Irish ancestry. John Harsha was a hunter in Kentucky in the days of Daniel Boone, but in his younger life he had learned the trade of chair maker in his native State. He married Esther Ann McMillan, a native of Chartiers township, also a member of an early pioneer family. They died in this county. John Shaw was a Democrat until 1840, when he became a Whig, and upon the organization of the Republican party, he joined its ranks; he was an enthusiastic worker with them, and one of the most patriotic of men, universally respected. In church relationship he was a member of and elder in the United Presbyterian Church of Cross Roads, in Chartiers township. He died in February, 1879.

Joseph Shaw (whose name opens this biography) was born August 10, 1837, on the home farm in Chartiers township, this county, and was educated in District No. 2, that township. On September 13, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, Eighty-fifth Regiment P. V. L., for a term of three years, or during the war, and was assigned to the army of the Potomac under Gen. McClellan. The army of the Potomac then lay encamped from Fortress Monroe to Newport News, and commenced movement on May 4, 1862. The enemy evacuated his position at Yorktown the night before, and upon discovering this the Union army began a hot pursuit, overtaking them at Williamsburg, where a terrible fight ensued, lasting till night, when the Confederates retreated. The regiment then followed, taking part in a few skirmishes, and finally halted at Fair Oaks. From here, after a fierce battle, they were forced to retreat to Harrison's Landing, the retreat including what is termed the Seven Days Fight. The army soon afterward evacuated Harrison's Landing, proceeding to Fortress Monroe and Hampton Roads. At this juncture, Companies A and F were detailed to guard the hospital at Point Lookout for three months. Companies A and F received orders to join the regiment at Suffolk, Va., and while there had a skirmish with the enemy at Blackwater. In the latter part of January, 1863, they were sent to St. Helen's Island, on a fleet comprising about fifty wooden and iron-clad vessels. They landed February 8, 1863, and saw the engagement which took place at Charleston Harbor, many vessels being engaged, also the bombardment of Ft. Sumter by Dupont. The Union troops were then in possession of Folly Island. A battery was there ambushed which enabled them to take Morris Island, and then followed the siege with Forts Wagner and Gregg, which were protecting Charleston. Joseph Shaw assisted in building the "Swamp Angel," after the siege. The regiment was then transferred to Hilton Head, where it remained until April 23, 1864. An expedition was then sent to Bermuda Hundred, being the first regiment to land under Gen. Ben. Butler, and afterward took part in the bloody battles near Petersburg. Leaving there they went to Turkey Bend, thence to the Gap, where a heavy fight ensued on Chapman's Farm, at Deep Bottom. In this engagement the Eighty-fifth Regiment captured two stands of colors, but nearly half of those heroic men fell martyrs to the Union cause that fearful day, and Mr. Shaw received a flesh wound. From there they went to Norfolk on duty, and on November 22, 1864, Joseph Shaw received an honorable discharge at Pittsburgh, Penn., and he immediately returned to Washington county. On December 5, 1865, the wedding bells proclaimed the union of Joseph Shaw and Helen Jane McBurney, a native of Canton township, this county, reared and educated in Washington. She is a daughter of Ebenezer and Mary (Maxwell) McBurney, natives of South Strabane township, descended from Scotch ancestors, members of the U. P. Church. The mother died in 1888, and in 1889 the father passed away, while residing at Antelope Gap (his ranch near Goldthwaite, Mills Co., Texas).

Mr. and Mrs. Shaw passed the first years of their married life on the place known as the Samuel Morgan farm, which he sold, and in 1881 he purchased the farm of over 127 acres which he now owns in Chartiers township. Five children have been born to them, viz.: Dr. John H. (a dentist of Pittsburgh, Penn.), Harry McBurney (a farmer), Mary, Florence and Margaret E.; the daughters all attend the Washington Female Seminary. Mr. Shaw has given special attention to raising English Shropshire sheep. He and his wife and family are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Houstonville, and they are now living in that village. Politically Mr. Shaw votes with the Republican party.

JOSEPH McDOWELL is a representative of one of the early families of Mt. Pleasant township. The McDowells are of Scotch-Irish descent, the first settlement having been made in colonial days by Thomas McDowell, in Little Britain township, Lancaster Co., Penn.

The great-grandfather, Thomas McDowell, was born there, and in 1773 came to Washington county, first settling near the mouth of the north branch of Chartiers creek, in Chartiers township, taking out a patent for 400 acres of land. In 1787 he purchased a patent of 899½ acres in Mt. Pleasant township, from John Neiper, the assignee of Robert Downing, which was patented in John Neiper's name January 3, 1788, described as lying near the headwaters of Chartiers creek, and named Long Meadow. In a will made by Thomas McDowell and his wife Jennet, the following named daughters are mentioned: Hester Miller, Rachel Steel, Dina McKnight, Jane Clarke, Rebecca, Martha, Abigail, and sons: William, John, James and Joseph, and the grandson: Benoni Stulbs. Thomas McDowell died in the year 1797, and was interred in the Buffalo Presbyterian church burying ground in Hopewell township.

James McDowell, son of Thomas and Jennet, was born in Lancaster county, Penn., and moved with his father's family to Washington county, where he married Mary McKnight, a native of Chartiers township. They settled on the farm in Mt. Pleasant township, James having in the year 1796 bought of his father 160 acres of the original John Neiper patent, paying in consideration therefor the sum of £100 current money of Pennsylvania. The following children were born to them: Eleanor Nesbit, Rebecca Smith, Jane McElroy, and James and John. James McDowell, the grandfather, died June 21, 1827, his wife surviving him a number of years. Both lie in the Cross Roads U. P. Church burying ground.

James McDowell, the father, was born on the farm of his father, James, on June 21, 1804, and in the year 1828 married Katharine Miller, of Chartiers township, who was born also in 1804, and was a sister to Col. R. W. Miller. They settled on part of the farm, it having been willed to him and his brother John to be divided between them. He followed farming, stock raising and hunting as an occupation, and was considered in his day a great marksman and hunter. When about fifteen years of age he, with a flint lock rifle, went hunting, taking along with him a young fox-hound. Before he was off their own farm, he came up to a black bear. The young hound would not leave him, but with his tail down and bristles up, kept a sniffling. He finally discovered the bear standing up on its haunches and on firing, the powder flashed in the pan, causing the gun to hang fire. In the meantime the bear had got down on all fours and ran about a rod before the gun discharged the ball. This bear was the last one seen in these parts and was a few days afterward killed near what is now the village of Hickory, in Mt. Pleasant township. When dressed the bear weighed 300 pounds. James McDowell's political views were Democratic, his first vote being cast for Andrew Jackson for President. He voted for all the Democratic nominees down to his last vote, which was cast for Grover Cleveland in 1884. Although not a member of any church, he was never known to speak disrespectfully of the Christian religion, and all that is known of his religious belief is what he said to the minister on his death-bed which was: "when Christ died He sent the Holy Ghost as a Comforter." Catharine McDowell, the mother, was a member of Mt. Prospect Presbyterian Church by certificate, having joined the First Presbyterian Church of Washington before marriage. She was a kind mother and a conscientious Christian. The following children were born to them: Mary, Jane, James (died in youth), Rachel, Jacob, John (died in youth), Samuel (now living in Miami county, Kans.), Robert (died in Miami county, Kans., March 30, 1889), Joseph and Katharine. The mother died February 16, 1881, and the father July 10, 1886. Both are buried in Mt. Prospect cemetery.

Jacob McDowell, son of James and Catharine, volunteered in the year 1861 and served as a cavalryman in the First Pennsylvania Reserve Cavalry, Company K, until honorably discharged in 1864, having served for three years. He died in 1875, from the effects of a wound on the left cheek bone received while in the army.

A J. GREGG. Among the early settlers of Washington county, whose deeds are an undying monument to their memory, were the ancestors of the well known family, represented here by the gentleman whose name here appears.

In the year 1790 three brothers—Henry, William and John Gregg—left Ireland, the country of their birth, and crossed the ocean to America. After a voyage of sixteen weeks they all came to Washington county, Penn., and settled in East Pike Run township, where Henry secured a tract of 349 acres called the "Burning Mine," and now owned by a Mr. Duvall. Henry Gregg served as justice of the peace in 1796. He was married to Jane Dowler, and of their children whose names are given are John, Henry, Thomas, Edward, Seth and William. The parents died in 1834 in West Pike Run township. The second brother of the three who emigrated from Ireland was William Gregg, and he was married in the old country to a lady who bore him the following children: Henry, John, William, Andrew, Robert, Christina (wife of John Crow) and a Mrs. Jackman.

Robert Gregg, son of William, was born in Ireland, and was about twelve years of age when the parents and uncles came to America in 1790. He attended the subscription schools of Washington county, Penn., and in early manhood was married to Ann, daughter of John Robison, a native of Ireland, where he was married. Coming to America in an early day, he opened the first tavern on the old Washington road in Pennsylvania. His children were Joseph, John, William, Susan, Sarah and Ann (Mrs. Gregg).

Robert and Ann Gregg resided on the home place until his health failed, when they moved to Greenfield (now Coal Centre), where he died. He was a pilot on the Monongahela, Ohio and Mississippi rivers. In politics he was actively identified with the Democratic party, and served for years as supervisor, as well as in other township offices. The children of this family were born as follows: John R., William, Mary, Jane (wife of Daniel Williams), Andrew J., Ann (married to Thomas Huggins) and Matilda. Of these Andrew J. and Ann are yet living. Robert Gregg helped to build the first steamboat launched on the Monongahela river. His son, John R., started the first general store in Greenfield in 1835, which he kept for fifty years. He, in partnership with Hiram Smith, loaded the first coal boat there, and ran it by hand to Cincinnati. Boats in those days were loaded three feet deep, and were sixty-five feet long, and he lived to see his son W. H. Gregg load boats six and seven feet deep and 165 feet long, and towed by steamboats.

Andrew J. Gregg was born in November, 1817, in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and attended the pioneer schools of the period. On July 6, 1852, he entered matrimonial life in company with Mary A., daughter of James Ailes, who was a son of Amos Ailes, whose father was Stephen Ailes, a native of Chester county, Penn. Amos Ailes was born in 1751, and grew to manhood in his native county. In early life Amos Ailes was married to Ann, daughter of Joseph Brown, a farmer of Chester county, Penn., and soon after their marriage they came to Washington county, locating on a tract of land in East Pike Run township, which had then been in the possession of Joseph Brown for about two years. At the time Amos Ailes settled upon it, the place was an unbroken wilderness, inhabited only by wild animals and wandering Indians. Two young girls named Scott were killed by the Redskins about this time, and Mrs. Ailes shot a deer in the doorway soon after their arrival. In this wild forest home children were born to these pioneers, and reared, as follows: Joseph, Stephen, Aaron, Mary (wife of Eli Gause), James, Sarah (wife of John Waites), Isaac and Amos. Mr. Ailes was a Whig in politics, and in religion a member of the Society of Friends. He died in February, 1835, and was buried by the side of his wife in the Westland cemetery, in East Bethlehem township, Washington county. Mr. and Mrs. Gregg resided on the home place for three years after their marriage, then purchased and moved upon an adjoining farm. They finally settled on the Ailes homestead, and in 1889 erected their present residence.

In addition to general farming, Mr. Gregg has conducted a gristmill for the past few years. In politics he is a staunch Democrat, and has held various local offices. He is a member and ardent supporter of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

DANIEL SHELLER, a well-known citizen of Claysville, was born February 1, 1816, in Donegal township. He is a son of Samuel Sheller, also a native of that township, whose father, William, was born in Germany, from which country so many of the best and most intellectual citizens of America are descended.

William Sheller, grandfather of our subject, passed his youth in his native land, and there married a German lady, who bore him children as follows: William, Henry, John, Samuel, Mary (Mrs. Jacob Ruple), Catherine (Mrs. Benjamin Stephen son), Mrs. Beckley and Mrs. McKee. This family emigrated from Germany, and settling in Washington county, were among the earliest pioneers of Donegal township. Indians were still numerous, and when the settlers attended church, which they did usually in a body, the men of their number carried their guns with them. In politics Mr. Sheller was a Federalist; in religious faith he was one of the founders of the United Brethren Church, with which he was connected.

Samuel Sheller, father of Daniel, always lived in Donegal township, and was educated in the German language. He was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Christopher Winter (of whom special mention will presently be made), and their children were: Daniel, Elizabeth, Christopher (living in West Alexander), Catherine (Mrs. John J. Clemmens), Mary, Susanna (Mrs. Alexander Noble) and Lucinda (Mrs. Alexander Blair). After his marriage, Mr. Sheller settled on the farm where the remainder of his life was passed. He was a member of the United Brethren Church, and in politics he was an active worker in the Old-line Whig party. He died January 1, 1838, his widow surviving him until 1860, when she, too, passed away.

Daniel Sheller, the subject of these lines, remained on his father's farm in Donegal township during his early years, and was educated chiefly in the German language, attending the English school but three months. On May 20, 1847, he married Rachel, daughter of Joshua Stoolfill, and their family consists of two sons and two daughters, viz.: Samuel M., Margaretta (Mrs. Samuel Blayney), Joshua S. and Ida F., all now deceased. After his marriage Mr. Sheller settled in Buffalo township, this county, where he remained until 1878; then came to his present home in Claysville, where he is living a retired life. His original farm comprised ninety acres, but he has added to it until he now owns 228 acres of excellent land. Politically he was formerly a Whig, and is now a member of the Prohibition party. In church relations he is connected with the United Brethren Church at Zion Chapel.

Christopher Winter, our subject's maternal grandfather, was a native of Rhinepfalz, Germany, whence, when a young man, he came to America, and to Washington county, where he purchased a tract of land in Donegal township, before the beginning of the present century. He married Katharine Schaffer, a lady of German descent, born in Washington county. They remained in Donegal township until their deaths, and they now lie at rest in the cemetery at Zion Chapel. They were among the early pioneers of the township. The country at the time of their settlement there was a wilderness, inhabited by wild animals and Indians; and when on the Sabbath the pioneers walked through the forest to the little log building, used both as a schoolhouse and church, they would carry their trusty rifles with them for protection.

Samuel M. Sheller, son of Daniel and Rachel Sheller, was born in Buffalo township, educated in the State Normal School at California and taught school for several years. For some time he was engaged in mercantile business at Claysville. In March, 1879, he married Jennie D., daughter of Thomas McLeary, Esq. To this marriage were born Elmer E., A. Garfield, Ida F., Margaretta A. and Mary K. He then followed agriculture on the home farm, and became one of the most successful breeders of fine stock. Mr. Sheller was a member of the United Brethren Church, and in politics was a strong Prohibitionist. His death took place March 22, 1892, and he was laid to rest in the Claysville cemetery.

ALLEXANDER C. CHAPMAN, retired farmer and now a leading citizen of Claysville, is a native of the county, having been born March 5, 1823, in Donegal township, of stalwart Scotch-Irish descent.

His grandfather, Richard Chapman, a native of Ireland, was there married to Sarah Patterson, and had a numerous family, the names of the four sons being: Richard, Alexander, Andrew L. and Robert, and of the two daughters: Jane and Mary. The family emigrated to the United States in about the year 1781, landing in New York, whence, the same year, they moved to Washington county, Penn., where grandfather Chapman kept a hotel near Washington some years, then purchased a farm and resided in the county until their deaths.

Andrew L. Chapman, a son of the above pioneer, came with his parents from Ireland to this country, where he received his education. While quite a young man he was married to Nancy, daughter of Elder Thomas Campbell, of whom further mention will be presently made, and the children born of this union were: Jane (wife of Daniel Mooney), Sarah (deceased wife of Jacob Mooney), Selina (deceased), Nancy (deceased wife of Rev. Walter Russell), Phoebe (deceased wife of David Odenbaugh), and Alicia (deceased wife of Thomas McFadden), Alexander C. (subject), Dr. Andrew L., Thomas (deceased), Cornelius (deceased), and Dr. Campbell (deceased). Mr. Chapman was an active member of the Whig party, a warm friend of education and a public-spirited, progressive citizen. He was one of the early teachers of the schools in his township. A prominent member of the Christian Church at Dutch Fork, he was one of its most liberal supporters, and was for many years an elder in same. As a successful farmer he had no superior in his section, and in addition to general agriculture he was for a long time engaged in sheep raising. He died in this county in 1845.

Elder Thomas Campbell, grandfather of subject (a descendant of Archibald Campbell, Duke of Argyll, Scotland), was born February 1, 1763, in County Down, Ireland, where in June, 1787, he was married to Jane Corneigle, a descendant of the French Huguenots. In an early day (1807) he came to this country, making his home near Washington, Penn., finally removing to Bethany, W. Va., where he died at the advanced age of ninety-one years. The following is a brief record of his children that grew to maturity: His eldest son, Alexander, while in Ireland became a student of theology, concluding his education at Glasgow, Scotland. He and his father were eminent ministers of the Seeder Church. In 1809 he joined his father in this country. In the meantime they both became dissatisfied with the divided state of Christendom, and proposed a remedy by inviting all Christians to unite with them "on the Bible and the Bible alone." And thus Thomas and Alexander Campbell inaugurated the "Reformation of the Nineteenth Century," forming churches on this basis, known as "Churches of Christ," or "Disciples," which have attained high standing among the religionists of the world, and to-day numbers 1,000,000 members in the United States. Alexander also founded Bethany College, Bethany, W. Va., of which he was president until his death in 1866. The second son, Thomas, was a leading physician in this county. Archibald was also a prominent physician, as well as an able preacher. Dorothy became the wife of Joseph Bryant, Nancy (mother of subject) became the wife of Andrew L. Chapman. Alicia became the wife of Mathew Clapp, and Jane, the wife of Mathew McKeever.

Alexander C. Chapman received his education at the subscription schools of his native township, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. On April 13, 1847, he was married to Julia A., daughter of Richard Chapman, of Washington county, Penn., and the children born to them were: Agnes (deceased wife of Dr. Mont. Linville), Dorothy (deceased wife of Dr. James Bemis), Kate (deceased), Selina (deceased), and Lizzie B., Grafton K. and Campbell A., who are now living. The mother of these children dying in 1874, Mr. Chapman married, for his second wife, Mrs. M. Hodgens, widow of John Hodgens, of this county, she dying in the spring of 1889. In politics Mr. Chapman was a Whig until that party ceased to exist, after which he became a Democrat, and of late years he has voted the Prohibition ticket. In 1875 he was elected to the office of justice of the peace, which he filled with credit. He remained on the farm until 1889, when he retired from active life, and located at Claysville. He still owns 280 acres of fine land in Donegal township. While engaged on the farm he was recognized as one of the leading citizens of that section; was for years engaged in buying wool, and took particular pride in fine stock, and the production of fine wool; he is regarded as competent authority on sheep and wool. Mr. Chapman has been for years a consistent member of the Christian Church at Dutch Fork, and is looked upon as a brainy, well balanced man, and an able debater.

RH. CRAWFORD, a prominent and prosperous farmer of East Bethlehem township, is a grandson of Elijah Crawford, a native of Fayette county, Penn., who in his lifetime was a Democrat of no small repute. For a long term of years he held the office of justice of the peace, and in his religious faith he was a member of the Society of Friends. He married Christina Oase, of Philadelphia, who bore him children as follows: Lee, Levi, Josiah, Jacob, James Sidwell, Cassie and Elizabeth, who married Johnson Craft, and is now a resident of one of the Western States.

James Sidwell Crawford, father of subject, was born July 25, 1809, in Fayette county, Penn., where he received a fairly liberal education and was reared to agricultural pursuits, which became his life work in connection with distilling. On April 14, 1836, he married Sarah Hawkins, daughter of Richard and Cynthia Hawkins, of Washington county, and the young couple then settled on the farm now occupied by their son, R. H. He was successful as a farmer and stock raiser, and made many substantial improvements on his property, among which may be mentioned the handsome and comfortable residence erected in 1845, a fine commodious barn and various outbuildings. At the time of his death he had by energy, perseverance and judicious economy accumulated a handsome competence, his farm comprising no less than 322 acres of superior land. In his political preferences he was a solid Democrat, but not an active one, his farm interests occupying his entire time and attention. He departed this life April 3, 1869, his widow in 1883, in her seventy-second year. Their children were R. H., Mary Emma, Sarah Melissa, James Josiah and Edwin Elijah. The last mentioned participated in the Civil war, serving under Col. William J. Palmer in Company K, Fifteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and died in Nashville, Tenn., February 12, 1863, aged twenty-two years four months nineteen days. James Josiah died July 29, 1862, aged thirteen years ten months fourteen days; Sarah Melissa married Robert Hawkins, and now resides at Newton Falls, Trumbull Co., Ohio; Mary Emma is the wife of Elmer R. Deems, of Washington, Penn.

R. H. Crawford was born October 28, 1837, on the farm he now owns in East Bethlehem township, and in his boyhood attended the common schools of his district. He was reared to farm work under the able instruction of his father, and became, like him, one of the most successful agriculturists of the county. On January 3, 1884, he married Miss Anna E., daughter of Casper and Sarah Ann (Griffith) Wyland, of Washington, Penn. Mr. Crawford is a Democrat to the backbone, but in minor elections votes for the best man, regardless of party interests; he and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church. His farm covers 150 acres of prime land situated near the center of East Bethlehem township, where he carries on general farming, including stock raising—buying and selling—and has continually on the place a flock of about 150 sheep.

SAMUEL WALKER. The earliest record extant of the Walker family, to which the subject of this memoir claims relationship, is of one David Walker, a native of New Jersey, who married Elizabeth Elliott, of the same State. About the year 1772, the young couple settled near a little town called Burnt Cabins, Huntingdon Co., Penn. Ten children were born to them, viz.: Alexander, John, David, James, Martha, Sarah, Mrs. Cree, Susan, Polly and Isabelle, all now deceased.

Alexander Walker, eldest son of David, was born May 10, 1773, in Huntingdon county, and passed his boyhood on the home farm. In 1795 he came to Washington county, and located in Jefferson township, on the farm now owned and occupied by his son. Here he met Miss Elizabeth Norris, who was born December 19, 1778, in this county, and October 26, 1800, they were married. They settled on the home farm mentioned, and Mr. Walker also managed a still-house, which was, at that time, as important an industry as a mill of the present day. The names and dates of birth of the children born to them are as follows: Elizabeth, February 22, 1802; John, June 8, 1803; David, September 19, 1804; James, January 1, 1807; John N., June 24, 1808; Susanna, December 22, 1809; Alexander, June 21, 1811; Mary Ann, February 7, 1814; David S., July 6, 1816; Isabelle, November 17, 1818; Drusilla, February 16, 1821; and Samuel, April 18, 1823. The father died September 8, 1854, the mother on December 17, 1855. They were Presbyterians. Mr. Walker was a Democrat.

Samuel Walker was born in the house where he is now living, and was reared to agricultural pursuits, attending the common schools of the neighborhood. On September 2, 1844, he was married to Miss Elizabeth H. Jerome, born June 10, 1825, in Ohio county, W. Va., daughter of John Jerome, a pioneer of that neighborhood. After marriage they settled on the home place, and cared for his aged father. After his death, the son became the legal owner of the 200 acres of productive land which is his present home. The names and dates of birth of the children born to Samuel and Elizabeth H. (Jerome) Walker are as follows: Thomas P., July 22, 1845; Ophelia A., September 21, 1848; W. Scott, August 8, 1852; James J., September 6, 1855; Harriet Bell, April 9, 1858; and Alexander, February 16, 1862. In politics Mr. Walker was first a Whig, and afterward a Republican. He attends the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church, to which he gives a liberal support.

WILLIAM S. GREGG. Among the early settlers of Washington county, Penn., whose deeds are an undying monument to their memory, were the ancestors of the well-known family, of which the subject of this memoir is a worthy representative.

In 1790 three brothers—Henry, William and John Gregg—left Ireland, the country of their birth, for the shores of Columbia. After a voyage of sixteen weeks, they all came to Washington county, Penn., and settled in East Pike Run township. Of these brothers William was the great-grandfather of our subject, and his son Henry secured a tract of 349 acres called "the Burning Mine," in East Pike Run township, now owned by a Mr. Duvall. This Henry Gregg served as a justice of the peace in 1796. He was married to Jane Dowler, and they had children as follows: John, Henry, Thomas and Edward. The parents of this family died in 1834, in West Pike Run township. John Gregg, the youngest of the three who came to America in 1790, was twice married, his second choice having been Miss Nancy Gregg, a native of Ireland, to whom he was married in 1794. Their children were James, born August 8, 1795; Eleanor, born May 22, 1797; Andrew, born April 8, 1799; Mary, born September 8, 1801; Henry, born April 28, 1804; Sarah, born September 8, 1806; Ann, born November 9, 1808; John, born January 23, 1811; Margaret, born February 8, 1813; and Elizabeth, born February 11, 1815. The father died July 20, 1811, followed by the mother April 14, 1814. She was a member of the M. E. Church. The three brothers who first settled in America were all members of the M. E. Church, and in politics affiliated with the Whig party.

William Gregg, another son of the pioneer William, married Ruth — , who bore him the following children: Henry, John, William, Andrew, Robert, Christina (wife of John Crow), and another daughter (who became the wife of a Mr. Jackman).

Robert Gregg, son of William and Ruth Gregg, was born in 1808, in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn. He lived on the home farm during early life, and February 8, 1821, was married to Mary West, who was born in 1812, in this county. They were the parents of six children, namely: William S., West J., Robert J. (living in Coal Centre, this county), Matilda, Francis and Ruth A. The father was a practical, energetic farmer. In politics he affiliated with the Democratic party, and held various township offices. He died in 1874, and in 1890 the wife and mother was laid beside him. They were members of the Presbyterian Church at Coal Centre.

William S. Gregg was born July 4, 1817, in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., where his boyhood was passed. In 1872 he married Sarah J. Lutes, who was born in 1852, in Washington county, a daughter of Joseph and Mary A. Lutes, representative of an old family. Four daughters were born to this union, namely: Nora, Estella J., Laura (deceased) and Mary A. (deceased). The mother, who was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Coal Centre, died in 1886, and in 1891 Mr. Gregg married Mrs. Mary E. (Wright) Newman, daughter of Isaac Wright. Her father was born in 1813, in Washington county, Penn., and was married to Mary J. Long, a native of this county, born in 1818. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wright: Eliza (deceased); William H., a resident of Fayette county, Penn.; Luke, living in East Pike Run township; Samuel; Lizzie, wife of Samuel Worrell, a farmer of East Bethlehem township; Mary E., wife of William S. Gregg; Melissa; Matilda; Mary C.; Joseph; Thomas J. and John. Of this family the six last mentioned are deceased. The father passed his life on the home farm, where he died in 1885, having been preceded by the mother in 1859. In politics he is a Republican. In 1878 Mary E. Wright was married to John Newman, a native of Washington county, Penn., and they settled in Beallsville, same county, where he carried on a general merchandise business, and died in 1885. Mrs. Newman was afterward married to William S. Gregg, and to the latter union one son, Harry, was born July 21, 1892. Mr. Gregg owns fifty-seven acres of highly cultivated land, and conducts a general farming business. He is a member of the Coal Centre Presbyterian Church, while his wife is identified with the M. E. Society, at Coal Centre.

CARSON, SMITH and JEROME G. Thomas Carson, great grandfather of the subjects of this sketch, was born and married in Ireland. Coming to this country, he located in Maryland, whence a few years afterward he moved to Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., where he died on the farm now owned and occupied by Henry Carson. His children were Joseph, Thomas, William and John.

Thomas Carson, grandfather of subjects, was born in eastern Pennsylvania, and coming to Washington county many years ago was married January 25, 1791, to Mary Gibson, a native of Kentucky. They settled on the farm in Fallowfield township, still owned by their descendants, and here he carried on agriculture, and followed shoemaking; also served as justice of the peace several terms. At one time, being pursued by Indians, he traveled seventy-five miles in one day, carrying his rifle, and thus escaped. He died in 1848, leaving the following children: Elizabeth (wife of James Young); Thomas G. (married to Elizabeth Scott); Mary (wife of John Grable); James S. (married to Dorcas Redd); John B. (married to Sarah Scott); Ann (wife of John Grable); Charlotta (wife of John Carson).

John B. Carson (father of subjects) was born April 25, 1802, on the old home place on Pigeon creek, Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., where he grew to manhood. He was married to Sarah Scott, who was born December 6, 1813, a daughter of Parker Scott, Esq., a farmer by occupation, and owner of 700 acres of land; in addition to general agriculture, he was a heavy dealer in sheep and horses. Mr. Carson after marriage located on the Pigeon Creek farm, now occupied by his son Smith, but in the spring of 1816 he moved to Maple creek, on the farm his son, Jerome G. now lives on. He died January 27, 1872, and September 17, 1887, his wife passed away, leaving the following children: Newton (who was a real estate dealer, also founder of West Belle Vernon, and died December 24, 1888), Mary (wife of Jackson Carson, of Fallowfield township), Smith (a farmer living on Pigeon creek), Lewis (living in West Pike Run township), John B. (who resided in Allen township until the spring of 1893, when he moved to Ohio), Jerome G. (on the home farm), and Sarah J. (now deceased). Mr. Carson voted the Democratic ticket, and served in various offices. In religion he and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. He served as major in the old-time militia.

SMITH CARSON was born October 16, 1836, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn. He remained on the place up to the time of his marriage, which occurred in May, 1873, with Miss Amanda McMillan, who died on March 6, 1877, leaving three sons: Charlie M., Barkley M. and Mack R. She belonged to the M. E. Church. Mr. Carson married, October 17, 1880, for his second wife, Miss Elmira, daughter of William Blythe, and they are living on the old homestead, where they are engaged in farming and stock raising. The Carsons are generally Old-school Baptists and Democrats.

JEROME G. CARSON was born November 19, 1852, on the ancestral acres in Fallowfield township, and is the youngest son in his father's family. He attended the common schools during boyhood, and has always followed farming and stock raising. On November 4, 1875, he was united in marriage with Isabelle Fry, daughter of Noah and Lydia (Hill) Fry, the former of whom was a native of Fallowfield township, the latter having been born, reared and married in West Pike Run township. Noah Fry died in 1884, having been preceded to the grave by his wife several years. Mr. and Mrs. Carson began married life on 100 $\frac{3}{4}$  acres in Fallowfield township, where they are yet living. He has erected a good residence on the place, and does a profitable business in general farming, including stock raising. In politics he affiliates with the Democratic party, and in religion he is a member of the Disciple Church, of which his wife is also an adherent. Children have blessed their union as follows: Lydia May, Joel (deceased in 1885), Alonzo, Val and Norman F.

COLONEL JAMES T. KIRK, who was born at Canonsburg, Penn., September 21, 1825, died at Washington, same county, December 7, 1886. He was reared and educated at Canonsburg, and there established a merchant tailoring house, which he carried on successfully until 1851, when he moved to Washington, and opened a similar business there, in a store which occupied the site of the present A. B. Caldwell store. Prior to the outbreak of the Civil war, he was a member of the "Jefferson Light Guards," of Canonsburg, which disbanded in 1860, or early in 1861. The call of April 15, 1861, for troops, led to the reorganization of the guards, and as Mr. Kirk was a lieutenant in the old command, so now he was elected captain of the new organization. Gov. Curtin accepted the company, and confirmed the selection of Mr. Kirk as captain; but on the arrival of the men at Pittsburgh, April 27, 1861, the quota of Pennsylvania was filled, and the guards were ordered to return. On May 7, following, the command was again ordered to Camp Wilkins, and there, on June 19, the members enlisted for three years, and the name "Jefferson Light Guards" was lost in that of Company D, Tenth Regiment of the Reserve Corps, which was mustered into State service June 19, and organized June 21, 1861, the date on which Capt. Kirk was promoted to lieutenant-colonel. On July 1 the regiment occupied Camp Wright, on the Allegheny river, proceeded to Harrisburg on the 18th, was received into the United States service on the 21st, moved to Baltimore on the 22d, and to Washington, D. C., on the 24th. On August 1 the advance to Tenallytown, Md., was entered upon, and from that date to muster-out, on June 11, 1864, the regiment participated in all the brilliant affairs of the brigades to which it was attached. On the resignation of Col. McCalmont, Lieut. Col. Kirk was commissioned colonel May 15, 1862, and gallantly led the command from Mechanicsville, June 26, 1862, to Fredericksburg Church, April 30, 1864. Before the regiment was ordered to the Peninsula, the people of Canonsburg presented their first citizen with a sword and horse in recognition of his services in the army. During the battle at Newmarket Cross Roads, Col. Kirk received a sunstroke; at the second Bull Run, the Colonel was shot through the side, while commanding the Third Brigade, and at Gaines' Mills he was also wounded. After being sunstruck he returned home, but was again with the command at Manassas Junction the night before the battle. Owing to his wounds and the poor condition of his health, he resigned October 18, 1862, and retired with honor from the service. On returning to Washington, Penn., he served as assistant provost-marshal until the close of the war.

Resuming a business life, Col. Kirk and his brother George became landlords of the old "Mansion House," on Main and Chestnut streets, which they conducted for several years. Subsequently he established a gents' furnishing and notion store, on Reed's corner (now occupied by the Pittsburgh Dry Goods Store), and carried on that business until 1876, when he sold his interests therein, and, practically retired from mercantile life. During the decade preceding his death he worked at his trade occasionally. He was the first captain of Company H, Tenth Regiment, Pennsylvania N. G., and that company turned out to take part in his funeral on December 9, 1886, which was carried out under direction of William F. Templeton Post, G. A. R., No. 120, the burial ritual being observed, Major Vankirk delivering the eulogy. Col. Kirk married Miss Mary Jane Swan, a sister of Editor William Swan, and both made their home at Canonsburg. The children born to that marriage are as follows: William M. (deceased); George W., residing at Tyrone, Penn.; James C., a resident of Washington, Penn.; Samuel W., residing at Johnstown, Penn.; and Edwin T., a resident of Pittsburgh, Penn. The mother, now seventy years old, resides with her son, James C., in Washington.

George A. Kirk, the father of Col. Kirk, was the pioneer of the family in Washington county. To his marriage with Jane Bell Thompson eight children were born, of whom the following named are living: Harriet, now Mrs. Boyd Cramrine, in Washington; Mary and Lizzie, also in Washington; Robert T., in Canonsburg, and William H., a physician of Doylestown, Penn. Each member of the family fills a place in the history of the State, while the late Colonel fills one in the history of the Nation. The American ancestor of the family was married in Londonderry, Ireland, in 1796, came to the United States shortly thereafter, and after a stay east of the mountains, arrived in Washington county and settled on the Pentecost lands. In 1811 he moved to Canonsburg, where he purchased a house and lot. In 1813 he and two neighbors went East with a band of horses, and at the "South Mountain House" disappeared. Some days after his body was found in the mountains; but it will never be known whether he was lured thither by robbers, or met death while pursuing his journey in the night time. One of his sons, George Kirk, was postmaster at Canonsburg, Penn., from 1851 to 1859, when he died.

JNO. C. BANE was born in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., on Wednesday, the 6th day of November, 1861. He is the oldest son of Aaron and Mary W. Bane. He has one brother, Albert G. Bane, and one sister, Edith Bane. His father is a farmer. His ancestors were Scotch Quakers, and the first branch of the family to come to America settled in Pennsylvania, before the Revolutionary war.

The early life or boyhood days of Bane were spent upon his father's farm. During the winter seasons he attended the public schools of the district, completing his common-school education in March of 1876. On the 22nd day of May, 1876, he began a course of study at Hoge's Summit Academy, at that time taught by Prof. John C. Messenger. He rode on horseback, six miles across the country, from his home, to attend this school, for a period of four years, completing his studies there in the early part of the year 1880. He obtained at this school the rudiments of a classical and scientific education.

In September, 1880, he entered Washington and Jefferson College, where he took a special course, completing his studies in that institution, with the class of 1882. Between the years 1882 and 1886 he spent his time upon his father's farm, devoting his leisure moments to reading and the study of shorthand. On the 23rd day of November, 1886, Bane was registered as a student at law, at the Washington County Bar. He devoted the succeeding three years to the study of his chosen profession, supporting himself in the meantime by the practice of shorthand, in which he is an expert.

On Monday, the 13th day of January, 1890, he was admitted to the bar. He at once commenced the practice of his profession in Washington. He has, from the very beginning of his practice, met with well merited success. He is to day one of the leading young lawyers at the Washington County Bar.

Bane is an enthusiastic Democrat. Ever since his admission to the bar, he has been conspicuous as an ardent and successful party worker. He was elected Chairman of the Democratic County Committee of Vigilance, of Washington County, in 1891, and re-elected in 1892. Washington County, at the time he was first elected Chairman of the Vigilance Committee, was one of the strongest Republican Counties in Pennsylvania, but by his perseverance, and his abilities as an organizer, Bane has placed it among the doubtful counties. His skill as a political manager is recognized by his own party, and feared by his opponents in the opposing party. This fact has made him the most prominent among the politicians of the county. Beyond local politics, he has figured extensively in the politics of the State. He has been several times a delegate to State Conventions of his party, where he has always taken an active part. Bane is a member of the Jacques de Molay Commandery, No. 3, Knights Templar.

WHITE H. WILSON is a worthy representative of a pioneer family of Washington county. He is a son of James Wilson, whose father, Thomas, was a son of Thomas Wilson. The latter was of Irish birth, and in 1719 located on little Chartiers creek, Washington county, Penn. He was married to Hannah Brown, who died in 1830; he died in 1833.

Thomas Wilson, son of Thomas and Hannah (Brown) Wilson, was born in 1787, and was a farmer and stock dealer. In 1810 he married Esther McCorkle, who was born in eastern Pennsylvania, and they became the parents of nine children, namely: James, Mary (wife of Leonard Weaver, a resident of Beallsville, Penn.), Margaret (wife of Samuel Graves, both deceased), Hannah (wife of White F. Hopkins, both deceased), Jane (deceased),

Your truly
H. H. Wilson

Esther (deceased wife of Samuel Thompson), Elizabeth (wife of George L. Thompson, both deceased), Thomas C. and Robert (both deceased), whereby it will be seen that James and Mary are the only survivors. The father of this family died in 1859, followed by the mother in 1864; both were members of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics he voted with the Democratic party.

James Wilson, the eldest son of Thomas and Esther (McCorkle) Wilson, was born February 26, 1811, in Washington county, Penn. He attended the schools of the neighborhood, and was reared to farming. In 1831 he was united in marriage with Mrs. Elizabeth (Horn) Falconer (who was born in 1801, in Washington county, Penn.), widow of Samuel Falconer, to whom she had borne two children: Thornton (deceased) and Eliza J. (wife of Thomas H. Howden, a farmer of West Bethlehem township). Mrs. Falconer was a daughter of David and Anna (Black) Horn, early settlers of this county. To the union of James and Elizabeth (Falconer) Wilson children were born as follows: Esther A., wife of George Kinder (deceased), who was a farmer of West Bethlehem township; Charlotte W., widow of G. W. Campbell, since married to A. J. Buffington, of Salem, Henry Co., Iowa; Jacob, a farmer of West Pike Run township; Asenath, wife of J. P. Wilson, of La Salle county, Ill.; Thomas H., a farmer of Clay county, Ind.; White H., whose name introduces this biography; David, deceased; Elizabeth, married to Valentine Crumrine, of East Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn.; and Margaret, married to Joseph K. Horn, living in Portage county, Ohio. The mother died May 7, 1887, at the age of eighty-six years; she was a member of the M. E. Church. The father is yet living in West Pike Run township, at the age of eighty-two years; he has always voted with the Republican party.

White H. Wilson was born October 12, 1839, on the home place in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn. He attended the public schools, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. On December 24, 1863, he was married to Maria Deems, who was born in 1840 in West Pike Run township, a daughter of Mark F. and Margaret (Baker) Deems, the former of whom was a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Deems were the parents of the following children: Joshua (a farmer in Colorado), G. W. (a resident of Beallsville, Penn.), Samuel P. (living in Nebraska), Elizabeth (wife of Joseph Hawkins, a farmer of Somerset township) and Maria (wife of White H. Wilson). The mother died in 1864, followed by the father in 1880. Both were members of the M. E. Church. To the union of White H. and Maria (Deems) Wilson four children have been born, namely: Samuel C., a grocer of Allegheny, Penn.; Clara, wife of John T. Baker (they have one child, Lewis V.); Lelia D., wife of J. F.

Yorty (they have two children, Mand E. and Paul A.), and Maggie D., still at home. Mr. Wilson in 1892 was elected a justice of the peace in West Pike Run township for the term of five years. He and his wife are members of the Oak Grove Presbyterian Church, of which he is a trustee.

MARTIN RANKIN is of Hibernian ancestry, his grandfather, John Rankin, having been born near Belfast, in County Down, Ireland. He was married in the old country, where his only son, John, was born and reared to manhood. The latter was married to Miss Kate Martin, a native of the same place, and the young people (accompanied by the elder Rankin) then immigrated to America. John and Kate (Martin) Rankin located on a farm of eighty acres in Allegheny county, Penn., where children were born to them as follows: Mary J., Charlotte, Ellen, William, John A., Andrew, Edward, Joseph and Martin.

Martin Rankin, whose name introduces this sketch, was born June 17, 1835, on the pioneer farm in Allegheny county, Penn. He was married to Appalonia, daughter of Jerry Stillely, a resident of Allegheny county, and they settled on a farm near Gill Hall, in that county. In 1876 he purchased 181 acres in Union township, this county, where they are yet living, and in addition to general farming he conducts a profitable dairy, keeping about twenty cows. Politically he is an earnest advocate of the principles embodied in the Republican party. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Martin Rankin: Albert, Edward, Sarah, Linnie, Lewis, George, John and William.

MATTHEW F. McCONNELL (deceased), son of Matthew and Ann (Merchant) McConnell (a record of whom appears on page 1022, this volume), was born September 4, 1827, in Hanover township, this county, on the old McConnell homestead, situated near Raccoon creek. He remained on his father's farm during boyhood, and received his first education at the country schools, which was supplemented by several terms at Florence Academy. After leaving school he successfully followed the profession of school teaching in Washington, Beaver and Allegheny counties, Penn., working on his father's farm during the summer. He finally abandoned school teaching, and gave his entire attention to agricultural pursuits. On April 4, 1873, he was married to Sarah Ann Hutton, who was born August 1, 1851, a daughter of C. D. and Mary Jane (Pugh) Hutton, of near Pughtown, W. Va. The grandfather of Mrs. Hutton was the founder of Pughtown, and was an early settler of Hancock county, in the same State.

Two children were born to the union of Matthew F. and Sarah Ann McConnell: Samuel F. F., born December 30, 1875; and William A., born July 3, 1877, both of whom are assisting their widowed mother in the management of the farm. Mr. McConnell passed his whole life on his birthplace, and followed general farming until the time of his sudden demise, March 8, 1891, which was caused by heart failure; he was buried in Cross Roads cemetery, at Florence, Penn. In politics he was a lifelong Democrat, and in religion a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church at Florence, of which he was a trustee. Since his death Mrs. McConnell has been living on the old place, which she conducts with the assistance of her two sons. Before her marriage she was a member of the Robinson United Presbyterian Church, since which time she has been identified with the Cross Roads Presbyterian Church.

M B. MERCER (deceased), a well-known resident and successful merchant of Florence, Penn., was a son of William Mercer, who was born near Canonsburg, Penn., in 1797.

William Mercer was educated in the subscription schools of the day, and in 1815 entered the store of Robert Bowland, Esq., of Burgettstown, Penn., as a clerk, being a most trusted employe. On March 28, 1821, he was married to Eliza Bowland, who was born September 27, 1801, in Canonsburg, daughter of his employer. In 1824 Mr. Mercer entered business in Florence, Penn., which he successfully conducted until his retirement from active life in 1848. He then removed to the edge of the town and erected a very pleasant brick residence on a nice tract of land, there living a retired life. On March 28, 1871, Mr. and Mrs. Mercer celebrated their golden wedding. He died at the advanced age of eighty years. His venerable widow, although a sufferer for twenty years, survived him until March 12, 1877, when she too passed away. In politics he was a Whig, and later a Republican, taking an interest in the success of his party. In 1829 he was appointed postmaster of Florence, which office he filled for many years. For over sixty years he was a member of the Presbyterian Church, with which he united in 1816. In 1853 he was chosen ruling elder in the Florence Presbyterian Church, and held that office until his death, being a strong pillar in the church. Both he and his wife were buried in Florence cemetery. Seven children were born to this union, namely: Elizabeth, the wife of Hon. Lecky Harper, of Mt. Vernon, Ohio, proprietor and publisher of The Banner; Robert B., a farmer of Hanover township; Martha, wife of Dr. J. W. McCabe, died in 1857; William B., a druggist of Mansfield, Ohio; Harriet, married to Seaton Walker, a woolen manufacturer of Allegheny county, Penn.; M. B., our subject, and Gaylord. Of these children Elizabeth is the only one yet living.

M. B. Mercer was born February 23, 1839, at Florence, Penn., and being an apt scholar and close student at the common schools, completed his education at the higher institutions of learning. When a young man he entered the drug store of his brother, William B., at Mansfield, Ohio, remaining there some time, and then entered Bocking's drug store at Wheeling, W. Va. He finally began business for himself in Allegheny, Penn., where he was established on Beaver avenue. Here he married Mary E. Hollins, July 7, 1869, who was born February 20, 1849, in Allegheny county, Penn., a lady of English parentage. Her father, George Hollins, was a native of Staffordshire, England, and her mother, Elizabeth (Green) Hollins, was born in Gloucestershire, England. After his marriage Mr. Mercer opened a drug store in Pittsburgh, corner of Wylie and Washington streets, and was among the prominent pharmacopologists of the "Smoky City." In 1875, owing to the failing health of his aged parents, he disposed of his interests there, and removed to Florence, Washington county, where he continued to care for them until they died. In 1878 he opened a drug store in Florence, this county, on the site where his father won success. Here he remained until heart failure caused his death, while on his way to Pittsburgh, January 14, 1891. Mr. Mercer was very popular socially, an efficient druggist, and an enterprising citizen. He was a Democrat, serving as postmaster during Cleveland's administration, and was assistant postmaster at the time of his death. He was an active member and trustee of the Presbyterian Church, also serving in other capacities. He was also a member of Cardville Lodge, No. 407, I. O. O. F. Since his death his widow has been living in Florence, surrounded by her many friends.

JAMES SCOTT, one of the foremost business men of Smith township, is a native of the same, having been born December 27, 1827, on his father's farm. He is a son of Finley and grandson of Abraham Scott. Abraham Scott was born and reared in Maryland, and when a young man came to Pittsburgh, Penn., afterward settling in Washington county, with his brother Alexander. He purchased a wild tract of land near Raecoon postoffice, Robinson township, where his life was passed in agricultural pursuits. He was married to Jane, a sister of John Finley (the founder of Finleyville), and reared the following children: Rachel (Mrs. James Russell), Mary (wife of Thomas Fletcher), Ann (married to James Kerr), Jane (wife of David White), Elizabeth (Mrs. William Scott), Susan (married to John McBride), Abraham, Finley, Holland and Samuel. The father was a Democrat in politics, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church at Raceoon.

Finley Scott was born in 1800, in Robinson township, and educated in this county. In 1822 he selected, as his life companion, Margaret, daughter of James Stephenson, of Smith township. The young people first settled on a farm in Robinson township, this county, remaining there a few years, when they rented a neighboring farm, afterward purchasing a place in Smith township, where they lived twenty years, and finally moved to the home where the remainder of their lives was passed. The children of this couple were: Ann, Robert K., James, Samuel, Finley, John, Levi, Jane F. (Mrs. William Cowen) and Margaret (wife of Thomas Ackleson). Mr. Scott was the architect of his own fortune, and owned 450 acres of land at the time of his death, which occurred in 1879. He was a Democrat, and held various township offices. In church connection he was first a member of the U. P. Church at Burgettstown, this county, afterward uniting with the Associate Reformed Church, in which he was an elder. Both he and his wife are buried in the U. P. cemetery.

James Scott received a common school education, and followed agricultural pursuits on the home farm until 1852. He and his brother Finley then joined the throng of gold seekers bound for California, first going to New York, then sailing in the steamer "Eldorado" to Aspinwall, thence crossing the fever haunted Isthmus, partly by water, partly by rail, the rest on foot, and at length, after tramping some twenty-one miles, they reached Panama. One of the men was there taken sick with the fever prevalent in that locality, and the entire party was detained a few days. When he had partially recovered, they took passage for San Francisco on the steamer "J. L. Stevens," proceeding on their journey until opposite San Pedro bay, in California. The ship then became disabled, and they were obliged to lay to until assistance could be brought from San Francisco. They had barely reached their destination when the sick companion, William Shields, succumbed to the fever and passed away. James Scott followed the life of a miner in El Dorado county, but not realizing his expectations of success returned to Washington county the following year, by the same route as on the outward journey. He then took charge of the "Old Egypt Mill" at Midway, conducting that business for several years. On June 12, 1855, he was married to Lizzie Galbraith, who was born in 1831, daughter of William Galbraith, of Smith township. They have had the following children: Finley S. (deceased, married to Anna Riddile), William G. (a machinist of Wellsville, Ohio), Harry C. F. (living at home), Samuel G. (a blacksmith of Cross Creek village) and George R. (living with his father). The mother of this family died in 1873, and on August 20, 1878, the father was united in marriage with Lizzie E. B., daughter of John Gregg, who has borne him one son, John G. After his marriage Mr. Scott located on a farm situated about two miles east of Burgettstown, this county, where he resided until 1859, then located on his present home, which is one mile and a half south of that borough. Mr. Scott was engaged in the agricultural and implement business for three years, having since followed farming and stock raising. He is well and favorably known in the township, and in politics was a Democrat before the war, having since voted the Republican ticket. He is not an active politician, but has held various township offices. He and his wife are both consistent members of the U. P. Church.

I SAAC N. SPRINGER is descended from Swedish ancestry, and traces his lineage to one Charles C. Springer, a nobleman from Stockholm, Sweden, who landed in this country about 1689. He settled where Wilmington, Del., now stands, where in time he owned an extensive plantation. He was a prominent member of the Swedish Church. His son, Jacob Springer, assisted in the erection of the first church in the colonies, known as the Swedish Church of Wilmington, Del. In 1770 the ground where is now the city of Wilmington, Del., was leased for a term of ninety-nine years, and the lease or deed is still in the possession of the descendants of the Springer family.

John G. Springer was born August 6, 1785, a son of Jacob Springer, Jr., was reared and educated in Wilmington, Del., and came to Washington county, Penn., many years ago. On February 1, 1810, he was married to Miss Jennie Newkirk, of this county, and they first located on a farm in East Pike Run township, moving in 1826 to a property in West Pike Run township. He was a Whig in politics, and served repeatedly in an official capacity. He was sergeant in Robert Kerr Company, Ninety-ninth Regiment of the Pennsylvania Militia, which was noted in the war of 1812-14. In religion he was one of the first trustees of the old West Church, located in West Pike Run township. His children were Newton (deceased), Henry N., Rhoda (wife of David Knight), Nancy (Mrs. McJunkins), Elmira (deceased wife of James Morton), Mrs. John Taylor, John and Jane (deceased).

Henry N. Springer, son of John G. Springer, was born August 19, 1817, in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and attended the primitive subscription schools of the day. In 1844 he was united in marriage with Phoebe Hill, daughter of Joseph Hill, of West Pike Run township, and their children are Helen, H. Ed., Isaac N., Elmira (wife of Isaac Morris), Catherine (wife of Samuel Morris), and Joseph J. A. Mr. Springer was formerly a builder and contractor, and in his business experience erected many of the buildings in the eastern part of the county. In 1844 he moved to West Brownsville, and there engaged in ship building, a business he followed until 1855, when he retired to the farm. In political opinion he was a Whig until the organization of the Republican party, since when he has been identified with the latter. He is a member of the M. E. Church at Newkirk's.

Isaac N. Springer, son of Henry N. and Phoebe (Hill) Springer, was born September 5, 1855, in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn. He attended the neighborhood schools, remaining on the farm until 1877, when he bought a photographic car, and traveled through western Pennsylvania. On May 14, 1881, he was united in marriage with Ellen M., daughter of Jacob and Helen French, of California, Penn. (Jacob French died in 1866, in Jefferson, Greene Co., Penn.). After his marriage he opened a store at Garwood, this county, of which place he was appointed postmaster in March, 1884. In the fall of 1884 Mr. Springer's life was endangered through robbers entering his store and dwelling at Garwood. Mr. Springer has been very unfortunate in this respect, as burglars have entered his place of business three times, but he has always had them apprehended and brought to justice. In 1887 he bought out the store of James Herron, at California, in partnership with whom he conducted the business until 1891, since which time he has been sole proprietor. Mr. and Mrs. Springer have one son, H. Earle. Our subject is a Republican, and has served as auditor and school director at California. In religion he is a member of the M. E. Church, of which he is a trustee, and was one of a committee of three chosen to erect a parsonage, which is a credit to the town.

JOHAN B. HAYS is one of the representative citizens of Smith township, and comes of an eminent pioneer family, of whom one David Hays, on September 13, 1787, purchased land in New Jersey, where children were born to him and reared as follows: John, Thomas, David, Joseph, William, James and Moses, and five daughters, whose names are unknown.

Moses Hays was born in the State of New Jersey, and after partially learning the blacksmith's trade was drafted, at the age of sixteen, into the Continental army, and with five brothers of his he served through the war as regimental blacksmith, and during the contest his brother John, who was a lieutenant, received a wound which afterward caused his death. In 1783 Moses was married to Jemima Peterson, a native of New Jersey. Soon after the close of the Revolutionary war, Moses, with his wife and brothers, went West, settling on 1,000 acres of land about three miles southeast of Burgettstown, this county, on Raccoon creek. The brothers divided this tract, and Moses made a permanent home upon his share, which is still owned by Alex Hays, where the following children were born to him and reared: Thomas (moved to Jackson county, Ohio, where he died), born October 5, 1784; Edith (wife of David Hays, of Ohio), born February 27, 1786; John (deceased near Moorefield, Harrison Co., Ohio), born February 3, 1789; William (killed by accident), born April 7, 1791; James (deceased in Allegheny county, Penn.), born June 11, 1793; Alexander, born November 11, 1795; Mary (deceased in youth), born December 25, 1797; Eleanor (deceased wife of James Todd, of Allegheny county), born November 15, 1799; Joseph (deceased on the home farm), born February 15, 1801; David (deceased farmer of Smith township, married to Martha Fulton), born May 7, 1803; and Ann (deceased in youth), born June 23, 1805. Moses Hays possessed a remarkably retentive memory, easily recalling incidents of the Revolutionary war fifty years after the conflict. Anything once seen or heard he never forgot, and easily brought it to mind whenever the subject arose. He was a prominent and successful farmer, and in religion was a member of the Raccoon Church during the ministry of Rev. Moses Allen, who was a personal friend of Moses Hays. The latter passed away in 1836, being followed a few days thereafter by his wife.

Alexander Hays was born November 11, 1795, on the farm of his father in Smith township. His literary attainments were acquired in the primitive log-cabin schoolhouse of the day, the instruction being as limited as the furniture, but Alexander Hays soon gave evidence of unusual mechanical ability, readily learning both the carpenter's and blacksmith's trades. In 1824 he made choice of a wife in the person of Ann Stevenson, who was born in 1802, daughter of James Stevenson, an extensive landowner of Smith township. The children born to this union were as follows: One deceased in infancy, James S. (whose name opens this sketch), Jemima (deceased in infancy), John B. (a farmer of Smith township) and Joseph (a lawyer in Pittsburgh, Penn.). Alexander and Ann (Stevenson) Hays began married life on a part of the old Stevenson tract, lying about one mile and a quarter west of Burgettstown, Penn., where they passed all of their wedded life. He was an industrious, kind-hearted man, possessing many friends. In politics he was a staunch supporter of Democratic principles, and filled several township offices to the entire satisfaction of his party. He died in 1846, and in 1881 his widow was laid to rest beside him.

John B. Hays (a son of Alexander and Ann (Stevenson) Hays) was the fourth child in his father's family. He was born on the farm in Smith township, this county, where he is now living, and attended the rate schools during his boyhood. He cherished a youthful ambition to become a lawyer, and to this end took a practical course in Washington College, but owing to the failing health of his parents, he soon returned to the farm. During the "gold fever" excitement he went to California, remaining three years, then returned to his widowed mother, and was afterward employed as a dry-goods clerk in the store of his uncle, J. B. Phillis, of Burgettstown, this county. John B. Hays was a soldier in the Civil war, being promoted for bravery and efficient service to the rank of captain. At the close of the war he returned to the home place, and September 30, 1875, was united in marriage with Mary A. Scott, who was born January 20, 1840, daughter of Josiah N. and Rachel (Vance) Scott, of Jefferson township, this county. Mr. and Mrs. Hays are the parents of the following children: Ernest B., George P., John W., and Joseph (deceased at the age of three years), the living children all residing at home. Mr. Hays has been extensively engaged in the dairy business, but has been more active in political than agricultural life. He is one of the leading advisers and workers of the Republican party in his vicinity, and has held various township offices, in which he has always given perfect satisfaction. He was a justice of the peace for fifteen years, first elected in 1859, and in 1890 was appointed by President Harrison to the position of Government gauger and storekeeper in the District of Washington, Greene and Westmoreland counties, Pennsylvania.

WILLIAM W. PAUL, of Amwell township, is a descendant of William Paul, who was born in 1615, emigrated from Gravesend, England, June 10, 1635, in the ship "True Love," of London, and in 1637 located in Taunton, Mass.

William Paul, a descendant of this pioneer, was born in Washington county, Penn., and afterward located in Amwell township, south of Amity, where he purchased the farm now owned by J. Fulton Bell and Philip Swart, which he owned until his death. He was married to Hannah Slaughter, who bore him the following named children: James, Huston, Nathan, Sarah (Mrs. Abel McFarland), Rosa (Mrs. Christopher Vennum), Andrew, Daniel M., Lavinia (Mrs. Michael Schuler), John, William, Philo, and Adaline (Mrs. Thomas Reese). The father of this family died in Ohio; the mother died near Lone Pine, Penn., aged eighty-two years.

Philo Paul was born in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., March 26, 1824, and passed his early youth on the farm with his father. In 1841 he purchased a farm in West Bethlehem township, where he lived until August, 1862, when he enlisted in the war of the Rebellion, in Company D, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I.; he was killed at Spottsylvania Court-house. He was married to Miss Sarah Hughes, of Amwell township, and they had nine children: William W., James M., John A., Daniel W., Alexander H., David C., Benjamin Franklin, Abraham Lincoln and Laura Jewell Day.

William W. Paul, son of Philo and Sarah Paul, was born December 26, 1843, in Amwell township, this county; he received his education in the common schools, and was afterward a student for some time at Pleasant Valley Academy. He lived in West Bethlehem township and worked on a farm, but when twenty years of age removed to Amwell, afterward carrying on a sawmill for his father, which he finally bought. He continued in that business twenty years, and then engaged in mercantile business at Lone Pine. On November 24, 1864, Mr. Paul was united in marriage with Phoebe Jane Egly, and to this union have been born three daughters, viz.: Sarah Lillian, born in 1868; Nora Jewell, born in 1873, and Dale W., born in 1879, all of whom are attending school and living at home. Mr. Paul is a Republican in politics, and now fills the position of postmaster at Lone Pine. He and his family are members of the Christian Church at that place.

WILLIAM C. AIKEN. Among the eminent names connected with Washington county, none are more favorably known than that of this gentleman. He is a son of Joseph, who was a son of Joseph, the first of the Aiken family to locate in Smith township.

Joseph Aiken was born in 1760, east of the mountains. His birthplace is unknown, but Maryland was probably his native State. He was married to Nancy Wilson, who was born in 1764, daughter of William Wilson, and in 1794 the young couple made the long and difficult journey over the mountains, locating one mile south of Bulger Station, Smith township, this county. They first erected a rude log cabin, and began to improve the property with such primitive tools as were obtainable. But perseverance and industry will conquer almost any obstacle, and success at last crowned the efforts of these heroic frontiersmen. Five children came to bless the union of Joseph and Nancy Aiken, viz.: One deceased in infancy, William (killed by a falling tree), Martha (married to James Montgomery, of Allegheny county, afterward moved to Iowa), Nancy (deceased in Guernsey county, Ohio, married to Alexander Cowan, a blacksmith) and Joseph. The father was a Whig in politics, and a soldier in the war of 1812; he and his wife both died in the home where our subject now lives, the father on November 16, 1836, the mother in 1849. Both were members of the Seceder Church.

Joseph Aiken was born February 19, 1806, on the farm in Smith township, where his father had first located. His boyhood was passed on the home place, and he received a common-school education. On June 11, 1835, he was married to Margaret Mackey, who was born March 16, 1816, in Allegheny county, Penn., a daughter of William and Deborah Mackey, natives of Ireland, who came to Allegheny county in an early day, and moved to Spencer, Guernsey Co., Ohio, when their daughter Margaret was but four years of age. She grew to womanhood in Ohio, and was there married to Joseph Aiken, who located on the old Aiken place in Smith township, Washington Co., Penn., and four children were born to them, as follows: W. C. (whose name opens this sketch), Alexander W. (deceased, at one time a grocer in Allegheny City, Penn.), Fanny J. (deceased wife of Vance Smith, of Mt. Pleasant) and Joseph M. (a groceryman of Allegheny City, Penn.). The father was a Whig in politics, and in church connection a member of the Seceder Society, now the U. P. Church. He died February 24, 1840, and his widow has continued to reside on the home place with her son William C. Much credit is due this lady for the manner in which she has borne the double responsibilities of a widowed life so many long years. A faithful mother and Christian lady, she has inculcated the principles of honor and industry in the minds of her fatherless children, who have done credit to her training. She is a member of the U. P. Church, and a most highly esteemed lady.

William C. Aiken, the eldest son of Joseph and Margaret Aiken, was born March 27, 1836, on the old homestead where he is yet living. He received but a limited education, for, being the eldest son, when his father died he was needed to assist his widowed mother, with whom he has always resided. On October 21, 1868, he married Sarah C. McFarland, who was born August 12, 1842, a daughter of Samuel McFarland, of Smith township, and two sons were born to them: Joseph M. (living at home), born July 12, 1870; and Samuel A., born March 13, 1872, died March 20, 1874. The mother was called away April 3, 1872, and was buried in the Centre cemetery at Midway, this county. On May 1, 1879, W. C. Aiken was married to Sarah A. Tannehill, who was born February 3, 1847, a daughter of John and Margaret (McCahan) Tannehill. Three children have been born to this marriage, as follows: Oscar V., born January 22, 1880; Margaret C., born September 25, 1881, and Ida, deceased when nineteen days old.

William C. Aiken has always resided on the home farm, which he now owns, and has been a successful business man. In politics he is an active member of the Republican party, and has voted each year since old enough, his first vote being cast for Abraham Lincoln. He has served in various township offices, and was elected justice of the peace, but declined to accept that position. For twenty or more years Mr. Aiken has been in the dairy business, being the second shipper of milk from Bulger. They are members of the Centre United Presbyterian Church at Midway, and he has served as a member of the Session for over twenty years.

JOHAN DUNBAR. Foremost among the successful and progressive farmers of Smith township stands the name of John Dunbar, who represents an old and prominent family of Irish descent. James Dunbar (grandfather of our subject) was born near Belfast, County Antrim, Ireland, and being of an adventurous disposition, became a sailor in early life. He came to America and made a permanent settlement on Raccoon creek, Smith township, this county, being obliged to "grab out" a site for the first cabin which he erected, but his energy knew no discouragement, and success at length crowned his efforts. He was united in marriage with Mary McConnell, of Robinson township, this county, who bore him twelve children, namely: James, Jane, Thomas, Joseph, Robert, Martha, Elizabeth, John, Samuel, Mary, William, and an infant son (deceased). In the latter part of his life Mr. Dunbar lived for some time in Robinson township. Although beginning life as a poor sailor boy, he possessed the right spirit of perseverance, and at the time of his death was a wealthy man. He died in 1842, having been preceded by his wife many years.

James Dunbar (the eldest son in the above mentioned family) was born May 11, 1802, in Robinson township, this county, and assisted his father in agricultural duties during early life. He then learned the carpenter's trade, and followed it ever afterward. On February 15, 1827, he was united in marriage with Mary Elder, who was born October 26, 1806, daughter of David Elder, of Robinson township, this county, and their children were Mary J., born January 12, 1830, deceased August 15, 1852, wife of Samuel Seroggs, a merchant of Candor; Martha (wife of Samuel Castner, of Independence township), born March 2, 1832; John, born August 15, 1835; David E., born December 17, 1837 (went West and no tidings have been since received of him); James A. (deceased, a well-educated man), born April 1, 1839; Margaret (deceased wife of William McBride), born June 21, 1841; Robert (a traveler in California), born November 17, 1844; Ann Eliza (wife of William Waters, of Pittsburgh), born June 10, 1846; and Thomas J. (deceased in infancy), born January 23, 1848. Besides working at his trade, James Dunbar owned and partially managed a farm. He was a Democrat, and in religion he and his wife were members of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church. He died August 28, 1878, being followed by his wife June 25, 1880.

John Dunbar (the eldest son of James) was born August 15, 1835, on the same farm where he is now residing. As the eldest of the children, the greater share of the work fell to him, and in order to attend school in the daytime he was obliged to mine coal at night. On January 8, 1874, he chose a wife in the person of Ann M. Springer, who was born July 10, 1841, in Smith township, daughter of John and Mary (Spencer) Springer. The young people located on the home farm, upon which they have erected new buildings and made many improvements. In politics John Dunbar voted the Democratic ticket, taking an active interest in the success of his party. He and his wife are consistent members of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church.

GEORGE M. MILLER is a representative of a prominent pioneer family of Washington county, and is a grandson of Christopher Miller, who was married in Donegal township, this county, where his children were born and reared, as follows: Mrs. McConahy, John, Margaret, Jesse, Mary (wife of John Birch) and George.

George Miller, youngest son of Christopher, was born on the home farm in Donegal township, receiving an education at the public schools of the vicinity. He was married to Sarah, daughter of William Noble, and reared the following children: Isaac, Lucinda (deceased), Isabella (wife of J. P. McAdow), William H. (who enlisted in Company K, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., was killed at Gettysburg on the evening of July 2), George M., Rachel (married to William R. Noble), Mary, H. C. (deceased) and Ella. Of these children Mary, Ella and Rachel died of fever within two weeks of each other. Isaac enlisted in 1862, in Company K, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., attached to the army of the Potomac; he was wounded May 1, 1864, in the battle of the Wilderness, and remained with the Todd family for two weeks, when he was taken by the Confederates to Libby Prison. He was exchanged four months later, returned home, and is now a resident of McCune, Kans. The father was a shoemaker by trade. In politics he was first a Whig, then a member of the Know nothing party, and afterward an Abolitionist and Republican. He died in 1872.

George M. Miller was born June 7, 1847, in Donegal township, this county, and remained at home during his early life. When eighteen years of age he attended Claysville Normal School, teaching the Hore School in East Finley township the following winter. The next summer he again went to the normal, and taught the home school in the ensuing winter. He then began the study of medicine, and in 1871 entered into partnership with G. H. Miller in the drug business, in which he remained until taken sick. He then taught school until 1875, when he entered the employ of David Campsey, of Claysville, this county, remaining with him until March, 1880, when he opened out his present drug business in Burgettstown. In 1876 he was united in marriage with Anna, daughter of Samuel J. Ghrist, who died leaving him one daughter, Sarah E. Mr. Miller is a Republican, and in religious faith is an active member of and an elder in the Presbyterian Church.

JOHAN M. ENLOW, an enterprising business man of Claysville, was born September 6, 1845, in East Finley township, Washington Co., Penn., and is a great grandson of Abraham Enlow, who came to East Finley township in an early day, and patented 3,000 acres of land in the wilderness, to which he finally moved with his family, and there passed his remaining years. Abraham Enlow had ten children, seven sons and three daughters: two sons (whose names are unknown, went to Tennessee), Elliott, William, Michael, Luke, Henry, Mrs. Rachel St. Clair, Mrs. Jemima Hill and Mrs. Mary Post. When the parents died the land was divided among the children, each of whom settled on their respective farms, and made improvements. In politics Mr. Enlow was a Democrat, and in religion an enthusiastic member of the M. E. Church.

Elliott Enlow was born in Maryland, and when a small boy was brought to Washington county. In early life he was united in marriage with Martha Atkinson, a resident of East Finley township, and they had nine children, viz.: Henry, John, Gideon, Mrs. Mary Patterson, Mrs. Rachel Marshall, Mrs. Elizabeth Thornberg, Mrs. Eleanor Sprowls, Mrs. Jemima Patterson, and Martha, unmarried. His entire life was passed in farming. In religion Elliott Enlow and his brother Henry were instrumental in founding what was formerly called Enlow's Chapel, and now known as the Stony Point M. E. Church, of which he was for many years one of the most effective workers and liberal supporters. In politics he was an active Democrat, but never could be induced to accept any official position. His brother Henry was for many years a justice of the peace, and enjoyed a favorable reputation in the community.

John Enlow was born in 1802, in East Finley township, Washington county, and received his education in the home school. He was married to Nancy, daughter of Robert Woods, one of the oldest pioneers of the township, and the young people immediately settled on the home farm in East Finley township, which became their permanent abiding place. They had one son, who died when ten years of age. After the death of his first wife John Enlow married Jemima Post, and to this union were born seven children: Sarah, wife of Rev. J. W. Hill; Martha, wife of John Hopkins; Mary, wife of Amos Sprowls; Nancy, wife of S. E. Martin; John M.; Gideon and Eleanor, both of whom died before reaching maturity. Mr. Enlow was a prominent member of the M. E. Church which was founded by his father. In political views he was a Democrat. He died September 16, 1876, and was followed to the grave by his wife in May, 1880.

John M. Enlow passed his early life on the farm where he was born, and was reared to agricultural pursuits, receiving a common-school education. On November 7, 1877, he was married to Lizzie E., daughter of John W. Hill. He remained on the home farm on which his great-grandfather had located until 1888, when he came to Claysville, and in 1891 purchased his present stock of furniture and an undertaking establishment. The firm are Enlow & Noble. They do all kinds of cabinet work and embalma in the best and most approved manner, making a success of their business, as they are both energetic men. Mr. Enlow is a leader in the Republican party, and being a warm friend of education, has frequently served the township as school director. In religion he united in early life with the Stony Point M. E. Church, and ever took an active interest in the work of that Society, having held various offices in the church and Sunday-school, which he has filled to the satisfaction of all.

PM. MORRISON, a prosperous stock raiser of Nottingham township, is a son of Benjamin P. Morrison, who was born November 2, 1811, in Nottingham township, this county. On May 31, 1838, Benjamin was married to Rebecca Rea, who died April 21, 1849, leaving four children: Elizabeth J., Hamilton R., John D. and Sarah E. On April 17, 1851, he married, for his second wife, Mary McKown, a native of Allegheny county, Penn., who was born in 1814, near Bridgeville, Penn. One child was born to this marriage, P. M. Morrison, whose name opens this sketch. The father was a farmer and stock dealer. He died July 25, 1860, and the mother is yet living with her son.

P. M. Morrison was born October 7, 1853, on the home farm in Nottingham township, this county, where his early education was received. On October 10, 1872, he was united in marriage with a daughter of James Hamilton, who bore him five children, viz.: Lucy G., Maggie E., Della B., Viola J. and Lomau P. The mother died March 13, 1889, and on September 24, 1891, he made a second choice in the person of Mary, daughter of John Sleeth. Her parents resided near Hickory, this county, and she is a native of the county. One son has been born to this marriage, John M.

Mr. Morrison resides on the home farm, which consists of 177 acres, and devotes his principal attention to raising sheep and cattle, usually keeping from one to three hundred sheep, and making a specialty of Shropshire stock. The farm contains a rich vein of coal, which he sold recently for a good price. He also owns two acres of land fronting on the railroad, and two double dwellings in the village of Venetia, one containing twelve rooms and the other six. Politically he is an advocate of the principles embodied in the Democratic party, and has served as township auditor and supervisor. In religion he is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Fairview, and is leading the choir, having filled that position very acceptably for several years.

JAMES TUCKER, a representative of one of the pioneer families of Washington county, comes of English descent, his ancestors having emigrated to Virginia in the early part of the eighteenth century. They settled in the Shenandoah Valley, where James Tucker (from whom the present generation trace their genealogy) was born. In 1775 he came to Pennsylvania and secured a "tomahawk right" in Amwell township, Washington county, and the land remained in the possession of the family until 1891, when it was sold. At the early date he came here but one settler was in the vicinity, a Mr. Bane. Mr. Tucker was married to Elizabeth Bane, a resident of Virginia, and the following children brightened the rude pioneer home: Isaac, Tempest, Thomas, Joseph, James, Rachel, Ruth, Hannah, Elizabeth and Mary. Mr. Tucker was a member of the Baptist Church at Mt. Herman.

Tempest Tucker was born in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., April 1, 1776, and passed his earlier years on the farm of his father. In 1800 he was united in marriage with Sarah McClain, who bore him five children: John, James,

J. M. Tucker

Elizabeth, Phœbe (Mrs. Adam Weir) and Sarah. After his marriage Mr. Tucker built a grist-mill, which was one of the first water mills in Washington county, and was situated on Banc's fork of Ten-Mile creek. He remained on that farm until 1851, when he removed to the place now occupied by the subject of this sketch. Mr. Tucker accumulated a comfortable property, the result of his early toil. He was a member of the Baptist Church at Mt. Herman, and a liberal contributor to that Society. He died on the farm in February, 1854, his wife on August 30, 1851, and the remains of both rest in the cemetery at Mt. Herman.

John Tucker was born in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., May 23, 1803, and lived at home until about twenty years of age, when he served an apprenticeship of three years with Patterson Pollock, a leading wheelwright of Greene county, Penn. He then followed that vocation in Greene and Washington counties, until about the year 1853, when he retired to the farm, and built the grist-mill at Meadow Lands. On November 10, 1831, he was married to Isabelle, daughter of William McClenathan, and the following children were born to them: Sarah (Mrs. Stephen Post), William M., James and John (deceased). In 1841 Mr. Tucker purchased the farm of 200 acres upon which his father resided. In politics he was a Republican, and served several terms as school director. His wife passed away March 13, 1873, and he followed her March 15, 1875.

James Tucker, the subject proper of this sketch, was born September 7, 1839, in Amwell township, Washington county, and obtained his early education at the same school-house his father had attended. Mr. Tucker has ever been a zealous member of the Presbyterian Church, and in political opinion he is a Republican. His farm comprises 200 acres of land.

William M. Tucker (an elder brother of James) was born in Amwell township, Washington county, August 14, 1836, and received his education at the same school-house which his father had attended in his boyhood days. On October 18, 1860, William M. Tucker was married to Sarah, daughter of Thomas Weir, and they then settled on the home farm where they yet reside. Their children are Thomas Weir (married to Mrs. Mattie Crosgrey Thomas), John G., Ettie F. and William C. He is an active worker in the Republican party, and has been school director twenty-six years in succession. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Upper Ten-Mile.

BENJAMIN F. JEFFRIES. The well-known family, of which this gentleman is an honored member, have for many years been closely identified with the history and progress of West Pike Run township.

Joseph J. Jeffries was born of Irish parents in 1772, in Chester county, Penn., and in 1788 purchased the old farm in West Pike Run township, Washington county. In 1796 he married Betsey Robison, who was born in 1781 in Loudoun county, Va., and the young couple soon thereafter moved to the farm he had purchased. The place contained about two hundred acres of land, and here he carried on a profitable business in farming and stock raising. Joseph J. Jeffries died April 9, 1854, having been preceded by his wife June 16, 1833. The children born to them were as follows: Amor, John, Plessie, Mary, Benjamin and Job, all now deceased except the last named, who is now living in Lemont Furnace, Fayette county.

Amor Jeffries was born March 21, 1803, on the home farm in West Pike Run township, Washington county, was educated at the subscription schools of the neighborhood, and learned the trade of wool carder, which he followed during early life, afterward devoting his attention to milling and agricultural pursuits. On April 6, 1828, he was united in marriage with Sarah Gregg, a native of Washington county, born September 8, 1805. By this union were born the following children: Eliza, wife of Henry Gregg, a farmer of Greene county, Penn.; Joseph, landlord of a hotel at Centreville, Washington Co., Penn.; Anderson; Benjamin F.; Elizabeth, died February 18, 1875; Jacob, died May 16, 1883; John, died March 16, 1855; George W., died December 25, 1870; James J., died October 18, 1874; Eleanor, died October 20, 1876, and Jackman, died January 24, 1844. The father of these children was fond of literary pursuits, and in political opinion voted with the Democratic party. He died June 15, 1885, having been preceded by his wife June 9, 1880.

Benjamin F. Jeffries was born October 22, 1841, on the home place in West Pike Run township, Washington county, and attended the common schools of the home neighborhood. On August 26, 1875, he was united in marriage with Anna Pepper, who was born in 1846, in East Pike Run township, a daughter of William and Harriet (Nankivel) Pepper, natives of England, the former born in 1787, the latter in 1797. William Pepper, who was a butcher and farmer, immigrated to Pennsylvania many years ago, settling permanently on a farm in Washington county. He was an ardent supporter of the Democratic party, and held various local offices; he was also prominently identified with the religious and educational interests of his locality. Mr. and Mrs. Pepper reared a family of seven children, namely: William, an agriculturist of East Bethlehem township; Mary, wife of Alexander Moffitt, a resident of Washington, D. C.; Thomas; Anna, Mrs. Jeffries; James, John C. and Elizabeth, of whom the last three are now deceased. The father died October 9, 1879, having been preceded by the mother March 7, 1877. Both were members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

To the union of Benjamin F. and Anna (Pepper) Jeffries have come four children, as follows: Mary E., born March 8, 1878, in Jefferson township, Greene county; Annie P., born December 9, 1879, in West Pike Run township, this county; Hattie and Pollie (twins), born February 14, 1885, in West Pike Run township, all in Pennsylvania. Mr. Jeffries is identified with the Democratic party, and has served as school director for several years. In religious faith he is a member of the M. E. Church, and is superintendent of the Sabbath school. He owns a well cultivated farm, which contains eighty-two acres of prime land.

HARRY H. BROWNLEE was born January 28, 1867, in Hopewell township, Washington Co., Penn., a representative of a prominent pioneer family of Scottish descent. Archibald Brownlee was a native of Scotland, and there married a Miss Hamilton, who bore him children as follows: James, William, John, Archibald, Thomas, Jane (Mrs. John Allison), and Hugh (deceased while on the ocean). Mr. Brownlee came to America in 1765, and first settled in Lancaster county, Penn. In 1775 he moved to Washington county, and purchased a farm in Canton township, where he passed the remainder of his life.

James Brownlee, eldest son of Archibald, in early life learned the trade of a millwright, which vocation he followed some years. He was married to Jane Lemon, daughter of pioneers of Washington county, but a native of Ireland. The young couple began married life on a farm in Canton township, where the following children were born and reared: John, Archibald, James, Hugh, Elizabeth, William, Thomas, Samuel, Joseph, Jane and David. Mr. Brownlee was a Whig, and in religion was a ruling elder in the Seceder Church at North Buffalo.

Archibald Brownlee (grandfather of subject) was born February 28, 1779, three miles west of Washington, in Canton township, Washington Co., Penn., and in early life was married to Mary Clark, of Washington county, who bore him children as follows: James, Joseph, John, Clark, Samuel, Elizabeth and Jane.

John Brownlee (father of subject) was born in 1807, in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his boyhood days at his birthplace. His parents afterward removed to Buffalo township, same county, where he lived until forty years of age. He was then married to Sarah Logan, and removed to a farm about two and one-half miles south of West Middletown, in Hopewell township. Six children were born to him, namely:

Newton (deceased in youth), Jennie (wife of Dr. J. N. Bemis, of West Middletown), Alice (deceased), Leamon J., Frank S. and Harry H. Mr. Brownlee had but a limited literary education, but he possessed excellent judgment and became a prosperous business man. He was of a retiring but social disposition, and in religion was a devout member of the United Presbyterian Church at West Middletown. In politics he was a Republican. He never needed a physician's service. He died January 31, 1892, and his widow now resides in West Middletown.

Harry H. Brownlee received his early education at the district school in Hopewell township, this county, and in March, 1886, left home, and engaged in the general hardware business with T. M. Patterson at Burgettstown, Washington county. In January, 1887, he sold out, and entered the furniture business, in September, 1889, forming a partnership with William Barr, of Buffalo township. They then came to their present place of business, in Claysville, where they occupy a three-story building, which is crowded with goods; they also do a general undertaking business, having all the necessary facilities for that line. On June 22, 1889, Mr. Brownlee was married to Ida, daughter of David Cummings, formerly a resident of Hopewell township, this county, but now living in Harrison county, Ohio. In politics Mr. Brownlee is an active Republican, and in religion he is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Claysville.

THOMAS S. BAILEY was born June 8, 1836, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of John Bailey, who was also a native of Fallowfield township, having been born on the home place in 1785.

John Bailey was trained from early childhood to agricultural duties, and made farming his life work. On arriving at maturity he was married to Margaret Scott, also a native of Fallowfield township, and ten children were born to their marriage: Cynthia, Sarah, Isaac, Noah and one unnamed, all five of whom died in infancy, those yet living being Mary, wife of George Bane, a farmer of Greene county, Penn.; Nancy, wife of John Bell, a farmer living near Monongahela City; James, an agriculturist of East Pike Run township; John, living in East Bethlehem township, and Thomas S., whose name opens this sketch. The father was a firm supporter of the Republican party. He died in 1870, at the age of eighty-five years; his wife passed away in 1869. She was a member of the M. E. Church.

Thomas S. Bailey passed his youth on the home place, where he received but limited literary opportunities, his whole life having been devoted to agricultural pursuits. In 1874 he was united in marriage with Sarah J. Elliott, who was born in 1847, in East Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn. She is a daughter of Samuel and Susanna (Bane) Elliott, who were the parents of nine children, viz.: Sebastian, a farmer of East Bethlehem township; Joseph, a farmer; Margaret, wife of John Martin; Emma; Sarah J., wife of Thomas S. Bailey; William, a blacksmith, of Carmichael's, Greene county; Oliver K.; Lizzie, and Martha. The father was a native of East Bethlehem township, this county, where he followed farming and veterinary work. Politically, he was an independent Republican, but devoted most of his time to personal matters. He died on the home place in 1858, and in 1877 Mrs. Elliott (who was a native of eastern Virginia, and came with her parents to Washington county in early childhood) was laid by the side of her husband. Both were members of the M. E. Church. Mr. and Mrs. Bailey reside on a farm of fifty-five acres, the condition of which gives evidence of the taste and care of the present owners. In religion they are identified with the M. E. Church.

DANIEL DAY. The Day family is old and well known in Washington county. It is well deserving of the space devoted to its history in this work, and no member is more worthy of mention than he whose name heads this sketch. Daniel Day was born May 7, 1813, a son of Calvin Day, one of the pioneers of Washington county. The father came from New Jersey, locating in Morris township, Washington county, prior to 1800. His death occurred in July, 1823. Daniel Day spent his boyhood days on his father's farm, and upon entering life for himself he chose agriculture as his vocation. He resided for forty years prior to his death upon the place now owned by his widow, which is located about two miles west of Sparta, in Morris township, and is known as the "Hoagland farm." Mr. Day was a truly representative man, public-spirited and admired for his sterling worth. He voted with the Republican party, though he was never an active politician. Mr. Day was twice married, first on October 17, 1844, to Miss Eunice Patterson, a daughter of Robert Patterson, of Morris township. She was born March 11, 1817, and died January 6, 1856; no children were born to them. He was married, a second time, on May 28, 1857, to Miss Nancy Cooper, who was the seventh in a family of ten children born to John and Martha (Atkinson) Cooper.

John Cooper was born January 11, 1786, in New Jersey, and on April 6, 1809, was married to Martha Atkinson, who was born September 4, 1789; she died December 28, 1859, and was followed to the grave by her husband September 15, 1876. The following is a brief record of their children: Elizabeth was born March 2, 1810, and April 22, 1830, was married to William Patterson (she died March 19, 1892); Selina, born June 28, 1812, was married May 17, 1838, to William Atkinson, and died July 26, 1873; Mary was born June 15, 1814, and was married November 11, 1847, to Thomas McNees; Ephraim was born July 17, 1816, and September 19, 1865, married Miss A. E. Cooper (he died July 21, 1868); Thomas H. was born November 2, 1818, and married, June 16, 1842, Miss Mary Ann Auld (he died December 28, 1883); Harriet, born July 19, 1821, was united in marriage May 11, 1843, with Amos Patterson (she passed away August 20, 1889); Nancy, born February 19, 1824, is the widow of Daniel Day; Amelia was born October 25, 1826, and was married March 15, 1862, to John Simpson (she died April 26, 1884); Martha A., born September 29, 1830, was united in marriage November 15, 1855, with William Elliott Craft (she died December 2, 1860); Sarah Jane, born March 29, 1833, was married March 8, 1859, to Sylvester Cary.

Daniel Day died May 26, 1885, leaving no children. His widow, a most estimable lady, is yet residing on the old homestead.

ALLEXANDER McCALMONT, a prosperous and representative citizen of West Middletown, Washington county, is descended from one of the old pioneer families of his native State.

John McCalmont, the father of subject, was born in 1780, in Cumberland county, Penn., on the farm of his father, who was also a native born Pennsylvanian. John passed his early life on the home farm, receiving a common-school education, and afterward learning the trade of blacksmith, and when a young man was married to Mary, daughter of John Proudfit, of York county, Penn. In 1805 the young couple came to Washington county, first settling in Smith township, and afterward moving to Mt. Pleasant township, where a home was made. The following children were born to their union: James (who died in 1891), Nancy (who died in 1833), Polly (wife of John Henderson), David (deceased), Eliza (Mrs. Samuel Moore), John (residing in Mt. Pleasant township), Alexander (mentioned below), William (deceased) and Samuel. In politics the father was first a Whig, afterward a Republican, and was actively interested in the success of his party. In religious faith he was a member of the Presbyterian Church several years, and then united with the Seceders, finally joining with the United Presbyterians. He followed his trade in connection with farming all his life, and was an energetic and enterprising citizen.

His first wife dying in 1840, he was afterward married to a Mrs. Moore, who bore him no children. He died in October, 1861, in Mt. Pleasant township.

Alexander McCalmont (whose name opens these lines) was born March 28, 1821, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, where his boyhood was passed in attending the county schools. On February 28, 1849, he was married to Mary, daughter of Samuel Allison, a native of Beaver county, Penn., born August 26, 1829; she went when a child with her parents to West Virginia. After marriage the young people settled on the home place in Mt. Pleasant township, where they have since resided, and children have been born to them as follows: Mary (wife of Stewart White), John (married to a Miss Glass), Agnes (Mrs. B. Lindsey), Cora (wife of William Connor), Emma (married to James Manson), Samuel (married to Elizabeth McCarrell), James (married to a Miss Farrow), Ida (Mrs. William McBurney), Abraham L. (married to Ellen Kendricks, and living in Allegheny, Penn.), Lillie (wife of William Lane) and Maud (Mrs. E. McCabe). In 1888 Mr. McCalmont retired from active business life, and is now residing in West Middletown. In politics he was formerly a Whig, and since the organization of the Republican party has been an active worker in its ranks. In the spring of 1889 he was elected a member of the council of West Middletown, and was chosen president of same by his colleagues. He is a warm friend of education, and served zealously as school director. When but seventeen years of age Mr. McCalmont united with the United Presbyterian Church of Mt. Pleasant township, this county, which he has served as trustee, and with which his family are also connected. Mr. McCalmont still retains his farm in Mt. Pleasant township. It consists of 266 acres, and is one of the finest properties of the kind in the county. He was at one time extensively engaged in the sheep industry, raising fine Spanish Merinos.

RICHARD HAWKINS STULL. This gentleman is of German descent, his grandfather, John Stull, having emigrated from his native land in an early day. John and Elizabeth Stull settled on the tract of land in East Bethlehem township, a portion of which is yet in the possession of their descendants, and there reared the following children: John, Martin, Abraham, Andrew, Mrs. Elizabeth Bowser, Mrs. Mary Horner, Philip, Mrs. Barbara Hupp, and Isaac.

Isaac Stull was born in 1807, in the old log house which his father had erected on the farm in East Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn. He attended the subscription schools, and in early manhood was married to Matilda, daughter of Richard Hawkins, a native of Greene county, Penn. The children of Isaac and Matilda Stull were as follows: Joseph, Mrs. Lizzie Overholt, John (a resident of Iowa City, Iowa), Richard Hawkins, Jackson C. (living on a farm in East Bethlehem township), James (deceased), and Abraham and Thomas (twins) (the latter of whom is an eminent physician living in Grant county, Wis.).

Richard Hawkins Stull was born August 9, 1842, on the place in East Bethlehem township now owned by G. G. Gayman, and soon after his birth the parents moved to the farm in East Bethlehem township, which he yet owns. In October, 1886, he was united in marriage with Maggie, daughter of Samuel Lewis, and they have one son, Samuel. The home place contains 126 acres of valuable land, upon which Mr. Stull conducts a general farming business, and also gives special attention to the breeding of Hambletonian and Clay horses, and his stock has taken many premiums at county fairs. Politically he is a staunch supporter of the Republican party, and cast his first vote for President Lincoln.

JAMES P. HICKMAN was born February 26, 1839, on the old homestead in Cecil township, this county. He is a prosperous stock raiser and farmer, and is descended from a pioneer family of Pennsylvania. His grandfather, Peter Hickman, a native of Lancaster county, Penn., married Abigail Fawcett, and after marriage they settled in South Fayette township, Allegheny county, many years ago, enduring all the privations and dangers inseparable from frontier life. He was a Whig, and he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church. They both died on the old farm. Their children were: Joseph, Moses, Abigail, John, Elizabeth, Ann, Steward, Peter, Daniel and Benjamin.

Benjamin Hickman was born June 8, 1801, in South Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn., where he grew to manhood. He married Nancy Jordan, who was born in 1811, also a native of South Fayette township. The young people settled on a farm in Cecil township, and eight children were born to them, of whom four are yet living, viz.: John S. (residing on the home place), Moses (living in Cecil township), James P. (whose sketch follows) and Mary Jane (wife of John Neal, of Canonsburg). The parents were members of the Bethany Presbyterian Church in Allegheny county, Penn. The father died in the spring of 1881, and in August, 1890, the mother passed away. He was a Whig, and a self-made man, who was very enterprising.

James P. Hickman was reared on the home farm in Cecil township, and educated in the schools of the neighborhood. On February 27, 1873, he married Miss Viola Jane, daughter of Arthur J. and Elizabeth (Middleswath) Hopper. Mr. and Mrs. Hickman began married life on a farm of 190 acres in Peters township, this county, but in 1880 they moved to a farm in Cecil township, having purchased the Park homestead, containing 190 acres and adjoining the home farm of the Hickman family. Since locating on this farm, Mr. Hickman has made various improvements and dealt largely in stock, making a specialty of sheep raising. In politics he is a Republican, and has served faithfully two years as supervisor. Though not a member of a church, he has been treasurer and trustee of the Centre Presbyterian Church. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hickman: Elizabeth Alcinda, William Arthur and James C.

Arthur J. Hopper, father of Mrs. Hickman, was born November 15, 1816, in Lancaster county, Penn. His father, Samuel Hopper, was born in Ireland, and came to America when a youth. He settled in Lancaster county, Penn., and there married Elizabeth Barclay. In 1817 they came to Allegheny county, settling in Fayette township, and purchased a farm with but ten acres improved. Their children were: Robert, Andrew, Samuel, Arthur J., John, James and Nora (Mrs. Alexander Fitch), Elizabeth (Mrs. Thomas Campbell), Mary A. (Mrs. James Wallace). He was a Whig and later a Republican, and was among the organizers of the United Presbyterian Church. They came over the mountains in a two-horse wagon, and when they arrived exchanged the wagon in part payment for a farm. The youth of Arthur J. Hopper was spent on the home place, and he was educated at the common schools. On July 22, 1841, he married Elizabeth Middleswath, of Allegheny county. Their children were: John C., Samuel N., Elizabeth A. and Viola J. Mrs. Hopper died September 5, 1891. Mr. Hopper settled in Allegheny county, and there continued farming until 1847, when he came to Peters township, remaining there until 1856, when he came to his present residence. He is a Republican; a member of the U. P. Church; is a self-made man, very enterprising.

CARSON. The family of this name, with which Elgy S. and John A. Carson are more immediately connected, have for many years been prominently associated with the leading citizens of Washington county.

Thomas Carson was born in eastern Pennsylvania, and, coming to Washington county many years ago, was married to Mary Gibson, a native of Kentucky. They settled on the farm in Fallowfield township which is yet owned by their descendants, and here he carried on agriculture and followed shoemaking, also serving as justice of the peace. At one time being pursued by Indians, he traveled seventy-five miles in one day, carrying his rifle, and thus escaped. He died in 1814, leaving the following children: James, who moved to Ohio; Joseph, who first located in Ohio, then moved to Indiana; Thomas G.; William, married to Mary Burgess, and who lived on the old homestead; James S.; John B.; Mary, Mrs. Grable; Elizabeth, wife of James Young; Ann, Mrs. Grable; and Charlotte, wife of John Carson.

Parker Carson, son of Thomas G. and Elizabeth Carson, was born in 1819, in Fallowfield township, Washington county. In 1844 he selected a life companion in the person of Margaret Carson, a native of this county, and the young people moved to Indiana. They resided on a farm in that State for six years, then returned to Washington county, and in 1852 bought and settled upon 188 acres of land in Fallowfield township. They were the parents of the following named seven children: Sarah E.; Margaret A.; Melissa; Elgy S.; John A.; Thomas G., and Mary J. Of this family Elgy S., John A. and Mary J. are yet living. The father devoted his attention wholly to agricultural pursuits, and served his township in various local offices. He died in 1878, having been preceded to the grave by his wife in 1874.

ELGY S. CARSON was born July 9, 1852, on the home farm in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn. He resided with his parents during his minority, and November 20, 1873, was married to Ruth, daughter of Joseph Morton, a well-known agriculturist of Washington county. This marriage has been blessed with the following children: Margaret (deceased), Laura A., Elgy H., Cecelia R., Joella, Rollo H. and Anna B., all yet living with their parents. Mr. Carson owns 189 acres of land, all of which is well cultivated, and here he raises sheep and cattle; he also buys and sells a large amount of live stock. In politics he affiliates with the Democratic party, and has filled many local offices. In religious faith he is an adherent of the Old-school Baptist Church.

JOHN A. CARSON, son of Parker and Margaret Carson, was born in 1855, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn. In 1880 he was united in marriage with Lizzie May, daughter of John S. Williams, a native of Pennsylvania, and to this union there have been born five sons and two daughters, as follows: Nora W., Carl C., Oscar P., Carrie E., Harvey S. (deceased), John R., and Jo Reese. Mr. Carson is now serving as chairman of the Democratic convention of Fallowfield township, has filled many other political offices, and for six years has been clerk of the township. He is a stockholder of the Maple Creek cemetery, of which he has always been secretary.

and is now holding the position of treasurer. His farm contains 108 acres, lying seven miles south of Monongahela, and three and one-half miles from Charleroi. Lover postoffice is situated half a mile from the farm.

JAMES TAGGART (deceased). Among the early pioneers to whom the citizens of Washington county owe a lasting debt of gratitude, is the familiar name of Taggart. This prominent family has for many years been identified with the best interests of the county, and took an active part in the hardships of frontier life. The earliest representatives of the name were natives of Ireland, from which country one James Taggart emigrated to America in 1783, and coming to Washington county, Penn., bought a tract of land called "Chestnut," containing 260 acres, situated on the headwaters of Chartiers creek. In 1831 he bought a farm of 405 acres, in Licking county, Ohio. He also bought a farm in Tuscarawas county, Ohio. He was united in marriage with Mary Ferguson, who bore him seven children, namely: John, James, Samuel, Robert, Jane, Elizabeth and Mary, all of whom are now deceased, leaving numerous descendants, who are scattered throughout the United States. The parents died in Washington county.

James Taggart, son of James and Mary (Ferguson) Taggart, was born on the farm in Washington county, where his life was passed. He followed general farming and raised a large number of sheep. He was united in marriage with Martha Fergus, who bore him ten children, namely: Thomas, James, Samuel, William, John, Margaret, Sarah, Rebecca, Martha and Mary, all now deceased except Samuel, who lives near Washington, Penn. The father of this family was an elder in Upper Buffalo Congregation for twenty-four years. He died July 28, 1863.

James Taggart, son of James and Martha (Ferguson) Taggart, was born November 10, 1823, in Canton township, on the old homestead where his ancestors had first settled on their arrival in Pennsylvania. He passed his boyhood in the usual manner of a farmer lad, and received his education at the Wotring Academy, which was established about 1818, by Judge Wotring. When a young man James Taggart was married to Jane Anderson, of Cross Creek township, this county, a daughter of Dr. Henry A. Anderson. To this union was born one child, who died in infancy, followed two months later by the mother. On October 20, 1857, Mr. Taggart was married to his second wife, Margaret A., a daughter of James and Ann (Cockins) McBride. They were residents of Canton township, Washington county, where a son, Vincent, is engaged in agricultural pursuits.

To the union of James and Margaret (McBride) Taggart children were born as follows: James M. (married to Miss Jennie Maxwell), Annie F. (wife of F. W. Donaldson), Archibald A. (married to Ella W. McCarrell), Urania Bell and Charles Leslie, both of whom still reside with their mother on the old homestead. Mr. Taggart voted with the Democratic party before the Civil war, and in 1862 joined the ranks of the Republican party, of which he became a trusted and valued member, and served one term as county auditor. In religious faith he was a member and trustee of the Buffalo Presbyterian Church, and led the choir for many years. He was called over the river February 22, 1892, leaving many friends to mourn his death, who are yet waiting the hour when they shall meet on the other side.

DR. BEBOUT, a well-known farmer and stock raiser of Cecil township, was born September 3, 1832, on the old homestead in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn. He is a son of Peter Bebout, and grandson of John.

John Bebout was born June 20, 1752, in Holland, and when a young man sailed to America. He first located in New Jersey and was there married to Mary Agnew, who was born October 23, 1757. The young people resided in Sussex county, N. J., until 1801, when they moved overland to Washington county, Penn., there making a permanent home. They were the parents of nine children, viz.: William, born April 21, 1778 (lived in Cross Creek township); Peter, born February 20, 1780; Sarah B., born February 28, 1782, wife of Joseph McLain, Mercer county, Penn.; John, born March 21, 1789, resided in Carroll county, Ohio; Mary, born June 23, 1791 (Mrs. Harmon Haines, of North Strabane township); Israel, born August 12, 1793 (a farmer); Susan, born December 30, 1796 (Mrs. Long, who first settled in Cecil township, this county, then moved to Ohio); Betsey, born December 4, 1798 (wife of Isaac Weaver, of Chartiers township), and Ira, born February 3, 1800 (deceased in 1891, first lived in North Strabane township, this county, thence moved to Muskingum county, Ohio). All of this family are now deceased. The father died in 1836, in Mercer county, Penn., his wife having preceded him several years.

Peter Bebout was born on Staten Island, N. J., and when twenty years of age took a trip on foot to Washington county, Penn., returning to New Jersey the same fall. In 1801 he and his parents moved to Washington county, locating in North Strabane township, on Chartiers creek, where Peter Bebout was married to Isabella Cooper, a native of Columbiana county, Ohio. The young couple settled on the old homestead in North Strabane township, and children were born to them as follows; Mary (deceased wife of William Hays), Susan (married to William Bebout, of Washington, Penn.), Ira (living in Monongahela City), Margaret (deceased wife of Cephas Cochran), D. R. (whose name opens this sketch), Isabelle (wife of John Crouch, of North Strabane township), Joshua (who moved to Missouri), Stephen (deceased in 1872, at Canonsburg), Martha Jane (deceased at the age of two years), one who died in infancy, Caroline (Mrs. Joseph Manes, living on the old homestead) and Herman (a stock dealer, residing in Canonsburg, Penn.). The parents were members of the Hill Presbyterian Church. The father of this family died about 1861 in North Strabane township, and was followed by the mother in 1889.

D. R. Bebout attended the district schools of North Strabane township, and then learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed some years. He was appointed agent of the Chartiers Valley Railroad, at Canonsburg, before it was completed. On March 10, 1859, he was married to Dorothea, daughter of James and Katie (Whitely) McMurray. James McMurray was a native of Ireland, and coming to America married and settled permanently in Washington county, Penn.

Mr. and Mrs. Bebout remained in Chartiers township until 1878, when they bought and moved upon the farm in Cecil township where they are now living. It contains eighty acres of well-improved land, upon which he has erected good buildings and operates three good oil wells, in addition to the usual farm duties. Politically he votes with the Democratic party, but devotes the greater part of his time to private interests. In religion he and his wife are members of the First Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg. Their children are: James, an elder in the First Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg, living at home; Catherine, wife of S. W. McNary, of Cecil township; Mary Belle; Frank, married, a clerk in a furniture store in Monongahela City; Martha Jane, wife of William McCorkle, of Somerset township; and Elizabeth, attending school at Slippery Rock, Pennsylvania.

BOYD McNARY, one of the popular young citizens of North Strabane township, is a son of Samuel McNary, who was born August 16, 1825, in Nottingham township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his boyhood on the farm, receiving a common-school education. He was married to Margaret McClure, who was born July 7, 1828, and seven children were born to their union, as follows: James S., born October 27, 1851; David, born June 23, 1853, died October 28, 1875; William Boyd, born February 17, 1856; Joseph R., born August 13, 1858; Mary, born August 10, 1860, died April 19, 1876; Mattie, born November 23, 1862, married, July 3, 1884, W. F. Wiskeman, and died October 2, 1888; and Clark J., born June 20, 1865. Samuel McNary was an enterprising and progressive citizen and served in various township offices, filling the position of school director fifteen years. He was a lifelong member of the U. P. Church, and died February 10, 1883. His widow passed away March 5, 1886.

Boyd McNary was born February 17, 1856, on the home farm, and followed the usual routine of a farmer boy, but received a thorough common-school education. On October 22, 1885, he was united in marriage with Jennie M. Herron, who was born January 8, 1861, daughter of Robert and Rachel (Berry) Herron. Robert Herron was a son of Joseph Herron, whose father, James, was a native of Ireland. James Herron emigrated to America in the latter part of the eighteenth century, and settled in North Strabane township, this county, on the farm now owned by his descendants. When a young man he was married to Rachel Reed, a native of Ohio, and the following children were born to their union: Charles, John, William, James, Robert, John, Joseph, Thomas and Rachel. In politics Mr. Herron was a Democrat, and in religion a devout member of the Seceder Church.

Joseph Herron, son of James, was born January 2, 1797, on his father's farm in North Strabane township, and was educated in the country schools. On January 3, 1824, he married Margaret Hastings, of Somerset township, this county, and they settled on the home place, where children were born as follows: Rachel, Robert, James, John, Sarah, Joseph, Margaret and Elizabeth M. The father was an active worker in the Democratic party, and in religious connection supported the Seceder Church. He died January 25, 1852, his wife being laid beside him March 18, 1854, and both rest in the U. P. cemetery at Pigeon Creek. Robert Herron was born September 30, 1826, on the farm where his brother James is now living. On May 13, 1858, he was united in marriage with Rachel E., daughter of John Berry, who bore him children as follows: William G., Margaret J. (Mrs. W. B. McNary), Lizzie R. (Mrs. M. H. Munce), Anna M. (Mrs. W. H. McNary), Sadie T. and Robert W. Mr. Herron has always been a Democrat and has served his party in various ways. He and his family are members of the U. P. Church at Mt. Prospect.

After marriage Mr. and Mrs. McNary settled on the old farm, where three children were born, as follows: Robert B., September 25, 1886; Mary R., March 20, 1889, and Carrie M., November 17, 1890. Boyd McNary is one of the successful farmers in North Strabane township. He and his two brothers, Joseph and Clark, own 134 acres of good land. He has a considerable influence in politics, and votes the Republican ticket. He and his wife are members of the U. P. Church.

JAMES HERRON, a leading business man of the village of California, is descended from Hibernian ancestors, his grandfather, James Herron, having been a native of Ireland, in which country he grew to manhood and was married. The family finally came to America, locating in Greensburgh, Westmoreland Co., Penn., where the grandparents died, leaving two sons, Nelson and John.

John Herron, son of the pioneer James, was born on the farm in Westmoreland county, Penn., there received his early education, and learned the carpenter's trade. When a young man he moved to Allegheny county, Penn., where he met and married Elizabeth, daughter of Francis and Ellen (Vandervort) Cooley, who were natives of New York. Mr. and Mrs. Cooley were the parents of the following children: Joseph, Robert, William, John, Francis, Samuel, Harrison, Elizabeth and Mary. The father of this family followed farming near New York City for several years, afterward moving to a place in Washington county, Penn., and finally settling on a farm in Allegheny county, near Pittsburgh, where he died. He was originally a Democrat, but afterward became a member of the Whig party, and in religion was connected with the English Lutheran Church. John and Elizabeth (Cooley) Herron passed their married life in Allegheny county, and he followed the carpenter's trade in Pittsburgh. They had two sons, Francis C., a farmer, and postmaster at Oklahoma, and James. John Herron died in 1828, and was followed to the grave by his widow in 1839.

James Herron, son of John and Elizabeth (Cooley) Herron, was born August 8, 1825, in Allegheny county, Penn., and received his early education at the subscription and public schools of the vicinity. Being left an orphan, he had to commence life for himself at an early age, and when sixteen years of age was apprenticed to Thomas McKee, a blacksmith of Pittsburgh, Penn., with whom he remained about ten years. He then purchased the shop, and conducted the business for five years, when he entered the employ of the Lippincott Manufacturing Company. In 1859 he purchased an interest in the store of his brother-in-law, William F. Barelay, at Coal Bluff, this county. Mr. Herron served as postmaster of that place during the Civil war, but, resigning this position in June, 1865, opened his present general merchandise store in California, which is now one of the oldest and most prosperous establishments in the village. Politically he has been a Republican, and recently he became a Prohibitionist; in religion he is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. On May 28, 1846, James Herron was united in marriage with Hannah M., daughter of James and Rachel (McVay) Barelay, of Finleyville, Washington Co., Penn. They have had no children, but adopted a little girl, and reared her as their own; she is now the wife of John H. Wilkins, to whom she has borne three sons, viz.: Fred B., James H. and Frank S.

JOHAN C. McBRIDE, one of the most progressive, influential and successful citizens of Robinson township, is descended from pioneer ancestors of Washington county.

James McBride (the grandfather) left the Emerald Isle in early manhood, and coming to Washington county, Penn., settled near Miller's run, on some land which legally belonged to George Washington. When the latter discovered that his rights were endangered, he made known his claims to the property, and the immigrants were forced to evacuate that locality. They then moved to a tract of 240 acres in the northern end of the county, near which was erected the Associate church of Robinson in 1832 (now the U. P. church), the patent for which tract of land was issued in 1786, and is still in the possession of our subject. This tract has since been the homestead of the McBride family. James McBride was married in Washington county to Miss Sarah Sprowls, and they settled on the farm in a small house which had been previously erected, but which was afterward burned by the Indians while the family were on a visit to their old home. Ten sons were born to this couple, all of whom lived to advanced age, namely: Francis, Nathaniel, Matthew, James, John, Isaac, Samuel, David, William and Alexander. The father was a Democrat, and a member of the Associate Church of Clinton, and was a member of one of three families who first formed the organization.

William McBride was born in 1798 on the old homestead in this county, and followed farming from early boyhood throughout his active life. He was married to Martha Keys, who was born June 11, 1805, near Bulger, this county, a daughter of James Keys, and the following children blessed their union: James, born October 8, 1832 (now deceased); William, born October 24, 1836; Jane and John C. (twins), born March 27, 1840, the former married to John Purdy, and living in Allegheny county, Penn. The father of this family died October 22, 1878, the mother on February 4, 1875. Mr. McBride passed his entire life on the home farm, engaged in general agriculture and stock raising, proving an enterprising and progressive man. In his political affiliations he was a Democrat.

John C. McBride was married December 30, 1874, to Elizabeth Galbreath, who was born near Candor, this county, a daughter of William Galbreath, a native of Allegheny county, Penn., born about the year 1796. His father, Samuel Galbreath, was of Scotch ancestry, and was reared in eastern Pennsylvania. He early came to Allegheny county, where he carried on farming, an occupation he followed during the rest of his life. He married Nancy Gilmore, who bore him the following children: James, Robert, Annie, Nancy, Elizabeth and William. Samuel Galbreath was a member of the Noblestown U. P. Church. William Galbreath was thrice married: first time to Margaret Bingham, who bore him one child, Henry P.; his second wife was Esther Ewing, and by this marriage there were children as follows: Letticia E., Nancy G., Isabell C. (married to Thomas Munn), Samuel, Margaret B. (married to James G. Wilson), Esther A. (married to W. S. Bailey) and Elizabeth. For his third wife William Galbreath wedded Jane Bailey, who bore him one child, William, and she is now living with our subject and wife, at the patriarchal age of ninety-three years. William Galbreath died August 21, 1874.

After their marriage John C. and Elizabeth G. McBride moved to a farm about three miles east of the old homestead, on which he has erected a fine dwelling house. One daughter has come to bless their union, Martha Keys, born June 1, 1877. Politically, Mr. McBride was identified with the Democratic party until of late years, since when he has been in sympathy with the Prohibition movement. He is a well-known, enterprising citizen, has filled various township offices, and has ever given his aid to enterprises tending to the good of the community at large. In religious faith he is a consistent member of the Robinson U. P. Church.

ROBERT C. HOOTMAN is a well-known and successful farmer of Donegal township. His grandfather, Christian Hootman, was a native of Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany, having been born there about the year 1757. Christian enlisted in the army when a young man, and was among the Hessian soldiers who came to America during the Revolutionary war, and were hired by the English government to fight the Colonists.

Christian Hootman was a drummer boy, and upon first landing in America was delighted with the country, often longing for freedom, that he might assist the Colonists in their struggle for liberty. At the battle of Brandywine he was taken prisoner, and (making no effort to escape) was soon drumming in the Continental army under Gen. Washington. He served till the close of the war, and decided to remain in the "land of the free," where the galling restraints of the old country were unknown. In the year 1785 the young man came to Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., after a long and tedious journey over the mountains. He took up a "tomahawk claim" in the northwest corner of Donegal township, immediately on the line then bounding Pennsylvania and Virginia. Here he erected a cabin home in the wilderness, and began to clear a piece of land upon which to raise corn. He was then married, and the following children were born to him: Henry and Jacob (who moved to Iowa, where they died); John (moved West and there died); Mary (wife of Adam Deeds), moved to Coshocton county, Ohio; Catherine (Mrs. William Shaler), who died in Donegal township; David, who learned the blacksmith trade, and followed it on the Monongahela pike, where he died; Tenie (deceased wife of Samuel Miller), lived in Donegal township; and Christian (the father of our subject). The mother of these children died, and Mr. Hootman was afterward united in marriage with Susan Cavanaugh, who bore him no children. He continued to live on the same farm until his death, which occurred in the year 1845, after sixty years of pioneer life in Washington county. His second wife had also preceded him to the grave.

Christian Hootman was born October 12, 1800, in Donegal township, on the farm which is now owned by his son Robert. His early life was passed in attending to the duties of the pioneer farm, and his education was limited to the advantages of the subscription schools, but this was afterward supplemented by home instruction from his stepmother, who was an educated woman. He thus became a well-informed man. In about the year 1830, Christian Hootman was married to Sarah McBroom, who was born in 1808, daughter of Robert McBroom, of Brooke county, W. Va., but a native of Ireland. Two children were born to them: Nancy S. M. (Mrs. E. Buchanan, of Wheeling, W. Va.), and Robert C. (subject of this sketch). Mr. Hootman passed his entire life on the home place, and was a successful farmer. In religion he was an active member of the U. B. Church, to which he and his father were liberal contributors. Mr. Hootman died February 27, 1874, and was followed by his widow April 22, 1891. Politically he was a lifelong Democrat.

Robert C. Hootman was the only son of his parents, and was born November 14, 1844, on the home farm, where he is yet living. He was trained to farm work from boyhood, and received a common-school education. On September 13, 1866, he was united in marriage with Maggie Yant, who was born April 20, 1850, a daughter of Jacob and Lizzie (Wilson) Yant, and the following children have been born to this union: an infant daughter (deceased), and Luetta, Frank S., Lawrence V. and Bruce C., all of whom are living at home. After his marriage, Mr. Hootman settled on the home farm, which has been in the possession of the Hootman family since it was patented, and is one of the most valuable pieces of farm land in Donegal township. Mr. Hootman is a very systematic and progressive farmer, and is extensively engaged in raising sheep. Politically he is a Democrat, but often votes for the man he thinks best qualified, regardless of his party connection.

JOHAN P. SCOTT, a prosperous, popular and cultured citizen of Cecil township, is a son of John, and grandson of John Scott. John Scott (the grandfather) was born in 1777, at Mingo creek, Washington Co., Penn., of Scotch parents, and was married to Esther Phillips. In 1800 they moved to Mt. Pleasant township, Washington county, locating on 305 acres of land, which was originally a portion of the George Washington survey. They were members of the Associate Reformed Church at Robinson's Run, in which he was a ruling elder. He died February 19, 1817, and July 19 of the same year his life companion was laid by his side. They were the parents of the following children: Hannah (born 1801, married to Capt. John Young, of Allegheny county, Penn.), Esther (born 1811, wife of William Gribben, Allegheny county), Rachel (Mrs. Allen Dunn, of Pittsburgh, Penn.), Elizabeth (born 1803, wife of John Cairus, of Pittsburgh, Penn.), a daughter Mary (born in 1805, died in early womanhood), Samuel (born 1807, died more than fifty years ago in Allegheny county), Jonathan (born 1809, moved West) and John (whose sketch follows). The parents were among the earliest of early settlers in Allegheny county.

John Scott was born in 1813, on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, where his boyhood days were passed. On August 29, 1836, he was united in marriage to Ann White, who was born in 1815, in Smith township, this county, and the young people settled on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, where four children were born to them: Mary (deceased February 13, 1889, aged fifty-one years, seven months and fifteen days), born in 1837, was married in September, 1858, to R. W. Lawrence, of Independence township; John P., whose name opens this sketch; William J. (deceased March 25, 1873), born June 25, 1841 (entered the service for a thirty days' call to Gettysburg), and married Sarah A. Douglas in 1863, settled in Cecil township; and Samuel Wilson (died in April, 1888), born August 1, 1852, and married April 27, 1881, to Miss Anna M. May. Mr. and Mrs. John Scott were first members of the Associate Reformed Church at Robinson's Run, and in 1850 united with the Associate Reformed Church at Venice, this county. In 1858 they became members of the U. P. Church, of which Mr. Scott was elected an elder, but refused to serve. He died June 10, 1887, his widow passing away January 31, 1892.

John P. Scott was born April 17, 1839, in Mt. Pleasant township, and attended the common schools of the neighborhood. On January 1, 1861, he was united in marriage with Mary Ann Cook. Her father, Robert Cook, was born June 2, 1805, in Cecil township, and on April 23, 1835, made choice of a wife in the person of Mary Gladden, who was born August 15, 1798. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Cook settled on the farm now occupied by their daughter, Mary A. He was a farmer, taking an active part in the politics of the Democratic party, and in religion was a member of the now United Presbyterian Church at Robinson's Run, afterward uniting with the church at Venice, this county. Mrs. Cook died July 22, 1842, leaving two daughters: Mary Ann (Mrs. Scott) and Anna E. (living in Cecil township). On February 27, 1844, the father was married to Rebecca Glendenen, who bore him one child, deceased in infancy. Mr. Cook died January 6, 1857, followed by his widow August 30, 1886, in her eighty-first year.

John P. and Mary Ann (Cook) Scott began married life on the farm in Cecil township where they are yet living. He taught school three years in Mt. Pleasant and Cecil townships, having since been engaged in cultivating the farm, containing 280 fertile acres. Among the many improvements which have been made may be mentioned the erection of a good, commodious barn, 42 by 62 feet. Mr. Scott makes a specialty of raising Delaine wool Merino sheep. In politics he is a strong adherent of the Prohibition party, and has been a candidate for county commissioner. In religious faith he and his wife are members of the U. P. Church at Venice, in which he is an elder, having been elected to that office August 28, 1864. Five children have gladdened the home of Mr. and Mrs. Scott, namely: Robert Cook, born May 17, 1862; Anna (married on January 1, 1890, to James R. White, has one child, John Lee), born September 10, 1864; John Elmer, born March 19, 1867 (married October 26, 1892, to Luella Bell McPeak); William Lawrence (graduated at Westminster, Penn., with class of '91, now attending the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia), born April 7, 1870, and George Wilson, born July 22, 1878.

MATTHEW B. BROWN, a well-known agriculturist of Mt. Pleasant township, was born in 1851, in Allegheny county, Penn. He is a son of David Brown, whose father, John Brown, was born in Lancaster county, Penn. John Brown was there married to Mary Acheson, and in 1785 the young people moved to Noblestown, Allegheny county, where he followed the tailor's trade and conducted a hotel. He afterward moved to a farm in the same county and reared his children. He died about 1851, his wife having entered the dark valley a few years before.

David Brown was born in 1803, on the home farm in Allegheny county, and was trained from early boyhood to agricultural life. He was married in his native county to Rebecca Borland, remaining there a short time after that event. In 1847 he bought a partially improved farm of 339 acres in Mount Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., to which he moved in 1855, his wife having died in Allegheny county the year before.

ROBERT H. RUSSELL (deceased) was one of the leading and prosperous citizens of Chartiers township. In business circles he stood in the front rank of prosperous and enterprising stockmen, in social life he was equally renowned for a generous, affectionate disposition, and in religious faith he was a devoted and liberal churchman. His father, Andrew Russell, was born January 3, 1777, in Cecil township, this county, coming with his parents to Chartiers township when about two years of age. In 1800 he was married to Ann McClellan, who was born in 1784, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and after marriage began to manage the home farm. He was a Whig, taking an active part in the early political history of the county; he had a brother who served in the war of 1812. In religious faith he was first a Seceder, then joined the U. P. Church at Canonsburg. He died March 2, 1861, in his eighty-fourth year, being followed by his wife February 17, 1868, who had borne him children as follows: Jane (wife of Samuel Lee, deceased January 24, 1880); Isabelle (deceased in 1845, wife of William McCall); James (deceased in January, 1890, married in 1844 to Elizabeth McElroy); Ann (living in New Concord, Ohio); Elizabeth (deceased January 10, 1868, in her sixty-fifth year, married to Robert Jeffrey, of Mt. Pleasant township); Andrew (deceased in April, 1891, married April 18, 1839, to Jane Miller); Alexander (deceased September 29, 1886, in his seventy-eighth year, married first to Margaret Ann Acheson (deceased), then to Lavina Calkins); Robert (deceased in May, 1887; first married to Elizabeth McConanghey, then to Martha Jane McNary); John (living in Chartiers township, married to Elizabeth G. Morrison); John Russell, died January 16, 1893, after a brief illness; William (married to Margaret Thompson, who died in 1892, living in Chartiers township) and Nancy (deceased in 1849).

Robert H. Russell was born in 1819, in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., being reared and educated in the district schools of the township. He was first married to Elizabeth McConanghey, who died within a few years. On May 17, 1858, he made a second choice in the person of Martha Jane McNary, daughter of William and granddaughter of John McNary. John McNary was married to Jane Hill, and in 1784 made a permanent settlement in North Strabane township, this county. They were both members of the Seceder Church. William H. McNary was united in marriage with Margaret Murray, daughter of George Murray, who came from Scotland in an early day, and was married to Mary Reed. In 1832 he moved from North Strabane township to Chartiers township, where he died, being followed by his wife three years afterward.

Robert H. and Martha Jane Russell began married life on one of the finest farms in Chartiers township, where his widow is still living, which he had purchased in 1845. Mr. Russell took pride and pleasure in making all possible improvements upon his farm, having erected a handsome brick dwelling and good outbuildings. He was especially interested in raising sheep, having been one of the charter members of the National Delaine Merino Sheep Breeders' Association. In religion he was an earnest worker in the Chartiers United Presbyterian Church, having been a member of the Session for twenty-three years. He also served as elder, and always contributed to the Master's cause to the utmost of his ability. He passed from earth May 17, 1887, and his widow is yet residing on the old place. Many hearts were saddened by the loss of this honorable, generous, Christian man, for in this world such characters are rarely found and are sorely missed when called away.

L. A. RUSSELL, one of the most prominent business men of Washington county, has devoted his time to stock raising, making a specialty of breeding sheep, and has achieved an enviable success in that business. He is a representative of an old and honored pioneer family of this county. He is a son of William and grandson of Andrew Russell, whose father was born in 1723, in Scotland, coming to America in 1758, where he was united in marriage with Isabel Mays, a native of Ireland. They first settled near Oxford, Chester Co., Penn., then went to Canonsburg, and in 1782 bought the home farm in Chartiers township. He was a blacksmith, and having brought his tools from eastern Pennsylvania, enjoyed a great deal of custom, having no competitor in that vocation.

Andrew Russell was born in 1777, in Cecil township, this county, and in 1782 came to a farm in Chartiers township, where he grew to manhood and was married to Ann McClellan. The couple passed their lives in their native county. Andrew Russell was a Whig, being an active worker in the party. He died in 1861, the wife and mother being laid to rest February 17, 1868. They were formerly members of the Associate Reformed Church, then united with the United Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg. They were the parents of eleven children.

William Russell was born October 10, 1825, in Chartiers township, Washington county, being the youngest child in his father's family. He was reared on the home farm, and educated in the subscription schools of the vicinity. In 1855 he was married to Margaret Jane Thompson, a native of Mt. Pleasant township, this county. She is a daughter of Joseph and Margaret (Wilson) Thompson, who were natives of Ireland, and of Scotch descent. They immigrated to America at an early day, and settled in Mt. Pleasant township, where Joseph Thompson passed the rest of his life in agricultural pursuits. He was actively interested in political questions; in religion he was united with the U. P. Church of Hickory, this county. His wife, who was a member of the Associate Reformed Church, died in 1847, and in 1861 he was laid by her side. After his marriage William Russell opened a book store in Canonsburg, this county, keeping a full line of school and college text-books. In 1862 he moved to a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, and in 1881 settled on the farm in Chartiers township which he now occupies. It consists of 135 acres of good land. Mr. and Mrs. Russell have had ten children, four of whom are now living, namely: L. A., William Frank (an operator at Bridgeville, Allegheny Co., Penn.), Mamie Bell Agnes, and Robert Lee (studying for the ministry at New Wilmington College). In politics William Russell is a Republican, and has served as supervisor and member of the school board. His wife died January 19, 1892. She was a member of the U. P. Church at Hickory, in which her husband was an elder, now being a member of the church at Houstonville.

L. A. Russell was born June 15, 1863, on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, being reared in Chartiers township. After attending the common schools he took a commercial course at the Iron City College, Pittsburgh, Penn., and graduated February 16, 1884. He then returned to the home place, and began to follow farming and stock raising. He raises a large amount of thoroughbred National Delaine Merino sheep, shipping them to all points in the United States. He is a member of the National Delaine Merino Sheep Association, and is one of the leading sheep breeders of Washington county, although some of his time is given to the raising of Short-horn cattle. In 1884 and 1885 Mr. Russell made an exhibit at the New Orleans' Fair, where he was awarded eleven prizes on twelve sheep. He casts his ballot with the Republican party, and was chairman of this precinct during the Prohibition movement, securing many votes for the Amendment. In religious faith he is a member and trustee of the Chartiers United Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg, serving as a teacher in the Sabbath-school, and assistant leader in the choir. In business, social and religious circles, Mr. Russell has proven himself a zealous and active worker, and an ardent, capable leader.

JR. GLADDEN occupies a prominent position in the large circle of leading agriculturists of Cecil township, and is descended from one of the pioneer families. His earliest ancestors, whose history can be obtained, were William and Mary (Woods) Gladden; they were both born in eastern Pennsylvania, William being a miller by trade. They came to Cecil township in May, 1795, and bought of one Nicholas Gaunce 206 $\frac{1}{4}$  acres, of which he had secured the patent in 1789, and made this their permanent home. After the death of William, the land became the property of Richard Gladden, and has remained in the family name up to the present time.

Joseph Gladden, son of William and Mary Woods Gladden, was born in 1795, in Cecil township, this county, and was reared and educated on the old homestead. In early manhood he married Jane Donaldson, a native of Robinson township, this county, and first settled near Midway, on what is known as the Campbell farm. In the spring of 1842 he bought and moved upon a farm in South Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn., remaining there until his death, which occurred in 1866, being followed by his wife in 1881. Both were members of the United Presbyterian Church at Robinson's Run. Their children were: Thomas D. (living on the homestead in Allegheny county, Penn.), William (deceased in 1891, a resident of Jefferson county, Ohio), James (deceased in youth), J. R., and Mary Jane (wife of R. A. Warren, Jefferson county, Ohio).

J. R. Gladden, son of Joseph and Jane (Donaldson) Gladden, was born in 1842, in South Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn., and received his education in the common schools of the neighborhood. In 1869 he married Sarah A., daughter of David and Sarah (Campbell) McConnell, early pioneers of Cecil township, where their daughter Sarah was born. On January 15, 1884, J. R. Gladden, in company with his brother, Thomas D., bought the old home farm of their grandfather, William Gladden, in Cecil township, from their uncle, Richard Gladden, and in 1888 J. R. Gladden bought his brother's interest, and made it his permanent home. The place contains 321 acres of good land, located about one mile from McDonald, and contains four producing oil wells. Mr. Gladden conducts a general farming business in connection with a profitable dairy, and has built a good barn, being now engaged in building a comfortable tenant house. He votes the Democratic ticket. He and his wife are members of the First Presbyterian Church at McDonald, of which he is a trustee. They have had four children: David (deceased at the age of two years), Joseph, Thomas Donaldson and Mary Jane.

JOHAN SMITH, a successful farmer of Independence township, was born June 22, 1820, near Mt. Hope church, Independence township, this county. He is a son of John Smith, who was born in 1786, in County Fermanagh, Ireland, and lived on the farm during his boyhood. He was married to Jane Graham, who was born in 1786, a daughter of William Graham. In 1818, with his wife and infant son, he embarked from Cork, Ireland, for America, and landing in New York came to Independence township, this county, where a brother of Mr. Smith had previously located, near Buffalo creek. Mr. Smith worked as a farm tenant for some time after his arrival in Independence township, but soon purchased the place on which he lived, and continued to reside there until his death, which occurred in 1831. His widow remained on the place until 1835, when she too passed away, leaving the following children: William (born in Ireland), John (a farmer of Independence township), Jane (deceased), Edward (died in 1847 of consumption) and Mary A. (widow of Paul Ralston, of Independence township).

John Smith, son of John and Jane (Graham) Smith, worked on the home farm from earliest boyhood, and received his education in the rude country schools of the period. When his parents died he took charge of the place, which is situated about three miles south of Independence, near the West Virginia line. His two sisters lived on the farm with him until the death of one in 1891, and Jane, the remaining sister, has since been keeping house for him. Mr. Smith is unmarried, and his health having been poor for several years, he has consequently lived in a retired manner. He is naturally a quiet and unassuming man, having the respect and esteem of all who know him. Politically he was formerly a Whig, and is now a member of the Republican party. He is a member of the M. E. Church at Independence.

JOSHUA DICKERSON, a representative of one of the early families of Washington county, was born January 3, 1845, on the farm where he now resides in Franklin township. His great-grandfather, Henry Dickerson, was married in New Jersey, his native State, and reared the following named children: Joshua, Henry, George, Gideon, Leonard, Asa, Margaret and Ruth. He was a leading member and liberal supporter of the M. E. Church, and withal was a hard-working, industrious man.

Joshua Dickerson, grandfather of our subject, was born May 3, 1781, in Washington county, Penn., whither his father had come in a very early day. He was for the most part a self-educated man, making himself well acquainted with the ordinary branches of education, and he made a special study of surveying, a profession in which he had no superior in the county. He was well versed in wood craft and was considered one of the best hunters of his time; his business as surveyor naturally brought him in contact with a large number of citizens, and he at once became a popular man. He early identified himself with the leading party, was elected auditor of his native county, and so well did he discharge the duties of his office that he was nominated for, and elected, representative from Washington and Greene counties, a position he filled eight consecutive years; he was then elected to the State Senate, in which he served six years, and then resigned to accept the secretaryship of the land office, which he filled till 1830. In 1831 he was chosen to the constitutional convention of the State, and took an active and zealous part in the labors of the same. In these many years of public life and prominence, Mr. Dickerson was totally unpretentious, his home being all along in the old log cabin where he was born. He was a man of magnificent physique, stalwart and active, and the very beau ideal of a Nimrod. At the time of La Fayette's visit to Washington, Penn., he furnished the carriage which conveyed the illustrious visitor, and he took a prominent part in the reception. On April 30, 1853, he passed from earth full of years and honor. The children born to this remarkable pioneer and his first wife, Margaret McPherson, are as follows: Joshua D., Nancy, Alexander, Mary, John, Jennie (Mrs. Samuel Walters), Ruth (Mrs. Lewis Barker), Henry, Lydia (Mrs. Howard Trussell), Margaret (Mrs. William Hazlett) and Matilda. Joshua Dickerson's second wife was Cornelia Craig, who bore him no children.

John Dickerson, father of our subject, was a native of Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., born April 13, 1810. He passed his boyhood and youth on the old home place, and was married to Mary, daughter of Robert Adams, of Washington county. The children born to this union were Margaret (deceased) and Joshua. This wife dying in 1851, Mr. Dickerson married Miss Mary Johnson, by which union came the following named children: Harvey, Mary A., Ruth A. (deceased), Lewis (deceased) and Flora B. On April 10, 1865, Mr. Dickerson was called from earth after a long and industrious life. In politics he was first a Whig, and afterward, on the formation of the party, a Republican.

The entire life of the subject of this sketch has been passed on the homestead of his immediate ancestry, the days of his boyhood and early youth having been occupied in receiving a thorough course of training to agricultural pursuits, and in attending in the winter months the common schools of the district. On June 2, 1867, he was united in marriage with Sarah, daughter of the Hon. J. C. Chambers (a sketch of whom is given elsewhere), and two children were born to them: Mary (deceased) and Lewis B. Mr. Dickerson and family are adherents of the Disciple Church, and in politics he is a Republican. He has been prosperous, thanks to his industry, intelligence and foresight, and is a leader in his community, where he is highly respected.

THE JEFFRIES FAMILY. This well-known family have been closely identified with the progress of West Pike Run township.

Joseph Jeffries was born of English parents in Chester county, Penn. (on the Brandywine river, near Chad's Ford), in 1772. He moved from that county to Loudoun county, Va., and there married Betsey Robison, who was born in 1781 in that Virginia county. In 1796 they came to Washington county and settled in West Pike Run township. The following named children were born to this couple: Plessie, born in 1798; Benjamin Amor, born March 21, 1803; Bennet, Mary, John, Job, all deceased except the last named, who is now living at Lemont Furnace, Fayette county. Joseph Jeffries died April 9, 1851, preceded by his wife June 16, 1833.

Amor, born on Buffington's farm, East Pike Run township, was educated at the subscription schools of the neighborhood, and learned the wool carder's trade, which he followed during early life, afterward devoting his attention to milling and agriculture. He married (April 6, 1828) Sarah Gregg, who was born in Washington county, September 8, 1806, and by this union there were the following named children: Eliza, born June 12, 1829 (married Henry Gregg, a farmer of Greene county); Joseph, born November 1, 1830 (married Nancy Jane Hess, a native of Ohio, and he is now living at Centreville, Penn.); Elizabeth A., born November 19, 1831, died February 18, 1875; Jacob, born March 26, 1833, died May 16, 1883; John, born October 16, 1834, died March 16, 1865; Anderson, born February 11, 1836; George N., born September 10, 1837, died December 16, 1870; Jackman, born April 15, 1839, died January 24, 1844; Benjamin F., born October 22, 1841 (married Annie Peppers in 1875); Elenor J., born March 27, 1845, died October 22, 1876; James J., born May 28, 1849, died October 18, 1874. The father was fond of reading, and in politics voted with the Democrats. He died June 15, 1885, preceded by his wife June 9, 1880.

Anderson Jeffries was born in the old home in this county, and in the schools of the district secured a knowledge of the common studies. On June 18, 1882, he married Mattie J. Elliott, born March 6, 1856, in this county, a daughter of Michael Elliott, a native of this county, born November 15, 1825. Mr. Elliott learned the gunsmith's trade, and on June 15, 1855, married Eliza Amos, who was born December 25, 1838. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott were the parents of one daughter, Mattie J., wife of Anderson Jeffries. Mr. Elliott died in 1857, and Mrs. Elliott married Fredrick Staley. To them were born the following children: John C., Catherine E. (wife of Henry Hauen), Anna M., Samuel J., Daniel E., Fredrick F. (deceased), Emaline (deceased), David R., Hugh C., Eliza L., Hannah B., Thomas C. and Clarence V. Mr. and Mrs. Staley are now living on a farm in West Pike Run township. To the union of Anderson and Mattie J. (Elliott) Jeffries five children were born, namely: Corene E., Sarah A. (deceased), Emma J. and Minnie May (twins) and Bessie L. The father is a staunch Democrat. He cast his first vote for Stephen A. Douglas. Mr. Jeffries owns 276 acres of land. The stone house where he was born, and in which the family now reside, was built by Benjamin White over one hundred years ago. Mrs. Jeffries and daughter, Corene, are members of the M. E. Church.

FREDERICK McMURRAY is descended from natives of the Emerald Isle, whence so many of our most industrious and patriotic citizens trace their lineage. His father, James McMurray, was born March 13, 1796, in Ireland, and when but a small boy came with his parents to Pennsylvania, being reared to manhood upon a pioneer farm. He was married, in 1830, in Washington county, Penn., to Catherine Whitley, who was born December 22, 1804, and they had children as follows: John (now living in Kentucky), born May 20, 1831; Frederick, born in 1832; Dorothy (wife of David Bebout, a farmer of Cecil township, this county), born April 17, 1834; Esther (unmarried, is keeping house for her brother Frederick), born February 17, 1836; Nancy (married to David C. Dunlap, a farmer of North Strabane township), born October 15, 1837; Catherine (wife of Samuel Rankin, a resident of South Strabane township), born August 13, 1839; Mary J. (Mrs. Albert Stimpson, a farmer of West Finley township, this county), born May 20, 1841; Belle (wife of Demas Leyda, a farmer of Washington county, Ohio), born May 27, 1842; James (living in Kansas City, Mo.), born March 6, 1844; and Lizzie (married to John Hawkins, a farmer of Greene county, Penn.), born December 5, 1846. The father was a prominent farmer of Somerset township, and an active worker in the United Presbyterian Church of Pigeon Creek, but cared little for politics. He died April 15, 1875, having been preceded December 26, 1867, by his wife.

Frederick McMurray owns and resides upon the home farm, consisting of 109 acres, which was purchased in 1847 by his father. He is a practical and progressive farmer, and in politics affiliates with the Prohibition party. Mr. McMurray has never married.

JONAS C. McCracken, a successful agriculturist of Amwell township, is of Scottish descent. His grandfather, Andrew McCracken, with a brother, David, removed from Scotland to County Down, Ireland. From there David immigrated to America about 1768, and in 1792 was followed by Andrew and his family, who lived with David two years. Andrew then bought sixty-three acres of land of Jacob Housing, to which he afterward added forty-one acres, purchased of William McClenahan, comprising the farm on which his descendants still live. In 1843 he went to Ohio, and there died. His wife was Sarah Jennison, of Ireland, and they had five children—two sons and three daughters: John, Archibald, Elizabeth, Isabelle and Nancy.

Archibald McCracken, son of Andrew and Sarah (Jennison) McCracken, was born May 23, 1799, on the old homestead in Amwell township, Washington county, where he always remained, and was educated in the common schools. In 1825 he was married to Lerana, daughter of Luther Axtell, by which union there were the following children: Phebe, Elizabeth, Andrew J., Mary, M. L. A., Rachel (deceased), Sarah, Cloah (deceased), Jonas C., and Martha J. (deceased). Archibald McCracken was a successful business man, and at the time of his death owned 184 acres of land. He was a Whig, then a Republican, and was always interested in township and county affairs. He died August 31, 1884, his wife having preceded him to the grave in 1859, and they are buried at Amity.

Jonas C. McCracken was born on the old farm in Amwell township, Washington county, June 11, 1843. His boyhood was passed in attending school, and working on the farm. He took an extensive western trip, but evidently concluding that Washington county could not be excelled, soon returned here to make a permanent home. In 1885 he spent two months in Glasgow, Scotland, the guest of relatives who had not been heard from for fifty-five years, and in 1887 he took a trip to Texas. On March 15, 1888, he was united in marriage with Mary Ross, of Washington township, Greene Co., Penn. He purchased from the heirs that portion of the old farm which he now owns, consisting of seventy-five acres of fertile soil, and carries on mixed farming.

JOHN REED, a prosperous agriculturist of Hopewell township, is a grandson of James Reed, the latter of whom was a carpenter, and built the first courthouse in Washington borough. James Reed was born in Scotland, and was married to Sina Parker, who bore him seven children, the sons being named as follows: John, James, Samuel and Parker.

Samuel Reed was reared and educated in Hopewell township, this county, and was afterward united in marriage with Mary Ann Vincent, daughter of Alexander Vincent. The following children were born to this union: James (living in Missouri), Alexander, Sina Ann (deceased), Jane, Mary, Nancy, John and Catherine. Of this family James was married to Lydia B. McWilliams, of Westmoreland county, Penn., who died leaving four children: Harry, Cally, Samuel and Dell; their father is pastor of a Presbyterian Church in Missouri; Alexander was first married to Jane Ann White, of Washington county, who bore him children as follows: White, Samuel, Nettie and Annie (the mother died, and Alexander was then married to Mary White, of West Virginia); Catherine is the widow of R. E. Merchant, and has three sons: Frankie, Orr and Eddie (she is living with her brother John); Mrs. Samuel Reed died February 22, 1881, followed by her husband April 5, 1887. He always followed farming, and in politics was a Democrat. He and his wife were members of the Upper Buffalo Presbyterian Church, in which he served as trustee.

John Reed, son of Samuel Reed, was born November 13, 1846, and was about three years of age when his father purchased the farm now occupied by S. P. Wilson. John Reed attended the common schools, afterward becoming a student of the academy, which he attended one session; he then devoted his whole attention to farming. On October 3, 1877, he was married to Amanda Merchant, a native of Ohio, who bore him two children: Sina Mabel and Mary Ella (deceased). Mrs. Reed was called to her last home August 8, 1881. Mr. Reed was a member of the Upper Buffalo Presbyterian Church.

WYLLIE F. CROTHERS is the eldest son of William B. Crothers, who was born June 14, 1836, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his earlier years at home, alternately working on the farm, and attending the district school, at which he secured a thorough knowledge of the common branches. He began farming in early life, and has since continued in that calling, also devoting much attention to stock raising. On February 28, 1861, he was united in marriage with Emma, daughter of James Maxwell, of Hopewell township, this county. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Crothers settled on the place where they now reside, and the following children have been born to them: Anna (Mrs. Samuel Cleland), Wylie F., Maggie (Mrs. Walter Coulson), Harry, Albert, James, Arthur and John. Mr. Crothers is a successful farmer, and owns a farm of 500 acres, upon which he has made many improvements, near the village of Taylorstown. In early life he united with the United Presbyterian Church, and has ever been an active member, having held some important offices, the duties of which he has faithfully performed. He has ever been interested in public enterprises, and in politics is a member of the Republican party.

Wylie F. Crothers was born January 19, 1863, on the home place in Buffalo township, this county. He remained at home during his minority, and was educated at the schools of Taylorstown, where he was considered one of the best students. On January 19, 1888, he was united in marriage with Nettie M., daughter of James Noble, and they have one child, Homer N. In February, 1889, Mr. Crothers opened a general store in Taylorstown, Buffalo township, and by his honesty, enterprise and uniform courtesy has the largest custom of any store in the town. His stock occupies a large building with two floors and a basement, also a large warehouse adjoining. He keeps a complete assortment of all kinds of goods, and has the largest and best equipped store (outside of Washington) in western Washington county. He has succeeded in business by earnest effort, and is one of the leading young men of the vicinity. Politically he is an ardent Republican, and though not a politician gives all possible aid to the success of his party. He and his family are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Taylorstown, to which they are liberal contributors.

WINFIELD SCOTT ARMSTRONG, a citizen of West Finley township, is a grandson of James A. Armstrong, a native of Ireland. The latter immigrated to America, and settled east of the Alleghany mountains, where he was married to Miss Margaret Martin. After their marriage the young couple settled in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., where ten children were born to them. Mr. Armstrong was one of the first volunteers in the war of 1812, and served till the close of the war, when he received an honorable discharge.

Samuel Armstrong was the tenth child in the order of birth, and was born April 20, 1812, on the farm in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn. He was united in marriage in 1833, with Mary Crow, daughter of William Crow, also a resident of Donegal township, and to their union were born the following children: Mrs. Mary Watson, Margaret, Mrs. Sarah J. Hair, William H., Catherine (Mrs. Guess), and Winfield Scott. Mr. Armstrong removed to West Alexander four years before his death, which occurred June 12, 1867, having been preceded by his wife in October, 1855.

Winfield Scott Armstrong was born August 13, 1847, in Donegal township, Washington county, and lived at home until old enough to earn his own living, when he began to work by the month for different farmers. On March 27, 1865, he enlisted in the One Hundred and Third Regiment, P. V. I., and served until the close of the war. His brother, William H. Armstrong, enlisted in Company C. One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment, P. V. I. He served in many of the battles, and was captured at Gettysburg, being taken to Libby Prison, where, in December, 1863, he died of starvation, thus adding another name to the long list of martyred heroes. On February 19, 1873, Winfield Scott Armstrong was married to Miss Kate Gordon, and they have had two children, William H., born April 28, 1876, and Flora Gordon, born January 23, 1890. After his marriage Mr. Armstrong bought the old water-power grist-mill which he still owns, and made the good, old-fashioned sweet flour. The old mill has been kept in excellent repair, and is one of the few of that kind now in operation.

THOMAS SHAW. Among the honored citizens of Chartiers township, the name of Thomas Shaw occupies a prominent position. He is a successful agriculturist and worthy representative of an old pioneer family. His grandfather, Joseph Shaw, was born of Scotch parents in Ireland, where, in early manhood, he married a Miss Sankey, and coming to America, he settled in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., where he reared a family of children.

John Shaw, father of subject, was born in 1804, on the pioneer farm in Chartiers township, Washington county. In early manhood he married Sarah Harsha, a native of the same county, and settled on the home farm, where the following children were born: Estier Ann (who died in infancy), Jane (who died in infancy), William D. (who enlisted in Company A, Eighth-fifth Regiment, P. V. L., served three years, two months and ten days, and is now living in Adams county, Iowa), Joseph (residing in Chartiers township), John H. (who died at the age of fourteen years), an infant and James (twins, the former deceased and the latter a veteran of Company B, First Virginia Cavalry), Sarah Jane (who married J. L. Henderson, and died leaving four sons and one daughter), Harrison Marshall (who died at the age of seven years of typhoid fever), Thomas (our subject), Rebecca Agnes (who died in youth), Robert Theodore (a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College, now a physician and surgeon of Silver Plume, Colo.; he has served as a member of the Legislature from his county), and Harriet (who was married about 1878, to David Bedow; she had one child, and died in March, 1880). Mrs. John Shaw died of apoplexy in 1869. She was a daughter of John Harsha, a son of early pioneers of Washington county, and of Scotch-Irish ancestry. He was a hunter in Kentucky in the days of Daniel Boone, learned the trade of chairmaker in his native State, and was married to Esther Ann McMillan, a native of Chartiers township, also a member of an early pioneer family. They both died in Washington county. John Shaw was a Democrat until 1840, when he joined the Whigs, and upon the organization of the Republican party became an enthusiastic Republican. He was a member of and elder in the United Presbyterian Church at Chartiers Cross Roads, and died in February, 1879.

Thomas Shaw, the subject of this biographical sketch, was born September 20, 1844, on the farm owned by his father, and where he is now living. He attended the district schools of Chartiers township, and October 26, 1876, chose a bride in the person of Hallie M., daughter of John and Jemima Grounds, early settlers of Washington county, and residents of Mt. Pleasant township. One son was born of this union, Wilbert Lawrence. Mrs. Shaw died June 27, 1879, and on March 16, 1881, Mr. Shaw married Jennie W., daughter of E. J. and Ann (White) Agnew, prominent pioneer settlers of Washington county, and residents of Chartiers township. Mr. Agnew has been an elder in Hickory and Cross Roads Churches for many years. Three children have been born to our subject and his wife, viz.: Sarah Ann Gertrude, Franklin Agnew and Lizzie Edna. The home farm contains 200 acres of well-cultivated land, and in connection with the general management of the place Mr. Shaw devotes much attention to stock raising, making a specialty of Holstein cattle, Shropshire sheep and Chester-White swine. In politics, he votes the Republican ticket; and he and Mrs. Shaw are members of the Chartiers

Cross Roads United Presbyterian Church in Chartiers township, in which he is an elder, an office also filled by his father in the same church for many years.

LEWIS F. McCRORY, a citizen of California, is a representative of one of the prominent families of Allen township. His grandfather, John McCrory, was born and reared in Washington county, Penn., there receiving his early education. When a young man he was married to Catherine Speers, a member of a pioneer family of this county, and they settled on a farm in Fallowfield township. Their children were Elizabeth (wife of David McClain), Samuel S., James, Rebecca, John, Plesey, Henry, Jacob, Solomon, Emily (wife of George Lang) and Nathaniel. The father was a Whig in political opinion.

Samuel S. McCrory was born in 1809, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., and attended the subscription schools of that locality. In early manhood he married Nancy, daughter of Samuel Fry, and she bore him the following children: Sarah E. (deceased), Mary K., Lewis F., Christina (deceased), Henry J., Emily and John. Mr. McCrory worked at boat building and kindred occupations during early life, and after his marriage bought a farm, on which he passed the rest of his days. In political opinion he was originally a Whig, afterward a Republican. He died in September, 1853, his widow passing away June 1, 1892.

Lewis F. McCrory was born February 17, 1839, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., and was reared to agricultural pursuits in Allen township, where he attended the public schools. In 1862 he enlisted in Company F, Eighteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, serving until the close of the war. On October 20, 1869, he married Hannah J., daughter of Allen Bowlen. The latter was a son of Nelson Bowlen, a farmer, whose parents were natives of Ireland, and came to America in an early day. Nelson Bowlen was married to Mary Coalbank, who bore him six children, namely: Bailey, William, Allen, Eliza, Mary Jane and Elizabeth. The father served in the war of 1812; in politics he voted with the Whig party, and in religious faith he was a member of the Disciple Church.

Allen Bowlen (deceased), son of Nelson and Mary Bowlen, was born in 1822, in West Virginia, and there learned the tailor's trade, which he followed for several years. He was twice married, first to Anna Hugh, and their children were Hannah (wife of Lewis F. McCrory), Sarah (married to Samuel Artis), Isaac, Mary E., Margaret and James, all except Hannah being now deceased

For his second wife Allen Bowlen was married to Susan McCarty, who bore him children as follows: Minerva (deceased), Nelson (deceased), Keziah (deceased), Samuel, May, Michael and William. Mr. Bowlen was formerly a Democrat, and afterward united with the Republican party, and in religion he was a member of the M. E. Church, in which he served as steward and trustee.

Lewis F. and Hannah J. (Bowlen) McCrory resided in Washington county, Penn., for some years after their marriage, then moved to a farm in Fayette county, finally returning to Allen township, this county. Mr. McCrory was identified with the Republicans, but since the organization of the Prohibition party has been an enthusiastic advocate of the principles embodied in their platform. He and his wife are members of the M. E. Church.

GOWERN BROS. These gentlemen, who conduct an extensive carriage-making establishment, and are also dealers in harness and horse goods, in Canonsburg, are prominently identified with the leading business interests of that place. The family are of Irish descent, the grandfather, William Gowern, having been born and reared in Ireland, where he was married to a Miss Annie Nugent. Soon after marriage the young couple came to America, and located permanently in New York, where three children were born to them: Robert F., Mary and Katie.

Robert F. Gowern, eldest son of William Gowern, served an apprenticeship in New York with Brewster, at the wagon-making trade. After completing it he took a tour through the Southern States, working as he traveled. Returning to New York he was married, on July 18, 1852, to Alice Robinson, a native of that city, of Scotch parentage. Two years later Mr. Gowern located in South Egremont, Mass., and not long afterward moved to Lincoln, Ill., thence to Harrodsburg, Ky., and finally came to Pittsburgh, Allegheny Co., Penn. In 1875 he organized the firm of R. F. Gowern & Sons, for the manufacture and sale of carriages. The firm commenced business on a modest scale, in a small frame building where they remained until 1886, in which year they erected their present extensive factory. Robert F. Gowern has had four children, namely: William J., Robert F., Lillie (wife of John Boyce), and Annie (deceased). In politics the father is a loyal member of the Democratic party.

William J. Gowern was born December 5, 1853, in New York City, and passed his boyhood at home. In early youth he entered a carriage-making establishment at Pittsburgh, Penn., where he remained two years, then completed his apprenticeship with the firm of S. B. & C. Hayes, Washington, Penn. He is familiar with every department of the business, which he conducts with characteristic energy. Like his father before him, he is an active Democrat. He is yet unmarried.

Robert F. Gowern, Jr., was born March 8, 1856, in South Egremont, Mass. He learned the carriage-making trade of S. B. & C. Hayes, of Washington, Penn., and is an accomplished workman, thoroughly understanding his business. On July 15, 1880, he was married to Miss Nannie A. Simpson, and has three children, all living. In 1887 the brothers bought the entire interest in their father's establishment, and added to the business harness and horse goods, the firm being now known as the Gowern Bros. They make 100 carriages per year, and are constantly busied with filling orders, working to their fullest capacity.

LT. CLAYBAUGH, a prominent contractor and builder of California, Penn., is the second son of Moses B. Claybaugh, whose father, Michael Claybaugh, was born and reared in Germany. The latter was married in his native land, and there learned the blacksmith's trade, afterward coming to Brownsville, Fayette Co., Penn., where he and his wife died many years ago.

Moses B. Claybaugh, son of Michael, was born in Fayette county, Penn., where his youth was passed. He was married at Coal Centre, Washington Co., Penn., to Miss Rebecca Troy, a native of that place. The young couple first resided in California, this county, where he followed the blacksmith's trade, until 1854, and then moved to Lawrence county, Ohio. In 1861 he enlisted, in Gallia county, Ohio, for three years, or during the war, and served under General Burnside; he died of cholera at St. Louis, Mo., in 1865, while en route home. In 1864 his wife removed to her present home in California, Penn. She has had three children, namely: Loretta (who died in 1863, in Ohio), L. T., and Eva (wife of J. F. Furlong, of Pittsburgh, Penn.).

L. T. Claybaugh was born in 1856, in Lawrence county, Ohio, and in 1864 came to California, Penn., where he received a limited education, as his widowed mother needed his assistance when he was yet a boy. He first commenced working in the boatyard, then learned the carpenter and joiner's trade at McKeesport, Penn. He worked as a journeyman for several years, and in 1880 commenced business for himself as a builder and contractor. In 1880 he was married to Anna Coatsworth, a native of Monongahela City, and daughter of Joseph Coatsworth. The latter was born July 12, 1842, in Durham, England. His father, Joseph Coatsworth, was also born and reared in Durham, England, and was there married to Sarah Ellison, who bore him six children, namely: Thomas, Margaret, Joseph, William, Sarah and John. Mr. Coatsworth was an expert lead-ore miner, and devoted much time to investigating the different branches of that business in his native country. He finally concluded that America offered superior opportunities for his family, and in 1853 crossed the ocean, first locating at Pittsburgh, Penn. He there followed coal mining for some time, and a few years later purchased a farm in Carroll township, this county, finally removing to Monongahela City, where he died in 1861. He was a strong supporter of Whig and Abolition principles, and upheld his views with the tenacity of a true Englishman. He was formerly connected with the primitive M. E. Church, and after coming to America united with the M. E. Society at Monongahela City, of which he was a most conscientious member.

Joseph Coatsworth came with his parents to America when but a lad, and passed his minority in Washington county, Penn. In 1872 he opened a grocery store, and engaged in the coal business at California, this county, afterward conducting a grocery at Monongahela City. He finally abandoned the grocery and opened the butcher shop where he is now doing a profitable business. On November 4, 1863, he was united in marriage with Trovillo, daughter of Washington Eckles, formerly of Westmoreland county, Penn., and they are the parents of seven children, namely: Anna, wife of L. T. Claybaugh; Charles W., J. W., May, Kate G., Bessie and Eva. Mr. Coatsworth is an active member of the Democratic party, and has served as councilman.

Mr. and Mrs. Claybaugh settled in California, Penn., where he owns a pleasant residence and other valuable property, which he rents. As a contractor he is pre-eminently successful, giving constant daily employment to an average of thirty-one men, and for the past two years has taken the output of the California brickyard, averaging 100,000 bricks per month. Mr. Claybaugh is one of the directors of the California Glass Company; is a director in the Minerva Land and Improvement Company, of Fayette county, Penn.; a director in the local branch of the Security Building and Loan Association, of Minneapolis, Minn.; and a director in the local branch of the Southern Building and Loan Association, of Knoxville, Tenn. He is actively identified with the Republican party, and has served as a member of the town council; he is a member of the Royal Arcanum of California. Mr. and Mrs. Claybaugh are the parents of four children, namely: Lon W., Eva, Ruth and L. T., Jr.

JEHU DUNLEVY is a representative of an early pioneer family of Washington county, and a son of Andrew Dunlevy, whose parents located in Allen township some time prior to 1795, and died in that vicinity.

Andrew Dunlevy was born July 1, 1795, on the home farm in Allen township, Washington Co., Penn., where his youth was passed. On May 22, 1816, he was united in marriage with Sarah Jackman, who was born March 25, 1799, in Washington county, and to this marriage children were born as follows: Joseph (who died in 1840), William (who moved from Pennsylvania to Illinois, and thence to Nebraska, where he is now living), Matilda (who died single), Crawford (now living in Hot Springs, Ark.), Jehu, Anthony (a ship carpenter, was killed in an explosion on a vessel on Galveston Bay, Texas), Jesse (deceased in infancy), Barbara Ann (wife of S. T. Williams, of Cherokee county, Iowa), and Sarah Rebecca (wife of Parker S. Sphar, of Allen township). The father was a Democrat in politics, and in religion an ardent member of the Presbyterian Church, of which he was a ruling elder for many years. He died July 24, 1879, having been preceded by his wife in 1845.

Jehu Dunlevy, son of Andrew and Sarah (Jackman) Dunlevy, was born October 5, 1833, in Allen township. He has never left his birthplace, and November 20, 1856, brought thither his bride, Mary McKee, a native of Allen township. She was a daughter of Hugh and Catherine (Lutz) McKee, early pioneers of Fayette county, Penn., and members of the Rehobeth Church. The mother is yet living in Allen township, Washington county, the father having passed away some years ago. Mrs. Dunlevy died April 14, 1868, leaving two sons, of whom the following is a brief record: James H. is a railroad agent at Munhall, Penn., at which station are located the great Carnegie Steel Works, where, on July 6, 1892, occurred the famous riot.

On June 17, 1891, James H. Dunlevy was married to Mary A. daughter of Rev. Levi Risher, of Dravosburgh, Penn., and one son has been born to their union, viz: Risher A. They reside in Homestead, which city adjoins the Steel Works of Carnegie & Co. Thomas T., youngest son of Jehu and Mary (McKee) Dunlevy, is a steamboat master and pilot on the Monongahela and Ohio rivers. On June 1, 1870, Jehu Dunlevy was married to Mary E., daughter of James and Mary (Swanger) Patterson, pioneers of Allegheny county, Penn., and ardent members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. Two daughters have been born to the union of Jehu and Mary E. Dunlevy, viz.: Etta M. and Jessie F. The home farm contains eighty acres of river land, upon which a mining town is now being established to further the coal industry.

Politically Mr. Dunlevy is a Democrat, and has served for many years as a member of the school board, and takes a special interest in all educational matters. His wife is a member of the United Presbyterian Church.

JAMES CRAIG, one of the leading representative progressive farmers of Donegal township, is a grandson of John Craig, a native of County Donegal, Ireland, whence in an early day he immigrated to this country, taking up his residence in Fayette county, Penn. Here he married Rebecca Stevens (by whom he had some eight or ten children), and followed farming, also teaching school up to the time of his death. The widowed mother afterward came with her son John to this county, where for a few years he kept a tavern on the National pike, about two miles east of West Alexander, in Donegal township, where Joseph Sample now resides. Here John Craig married Ellen, a daughter of James Craig, and one child was born to their union, Rebecca, who died after reaching adult age. This wife being called to her long home, Mr. Craig married, for his second wife, Eleanor, a daughter of Patrick Craig, of Donegal township, and the results of this union were the following children: Jaué, William, John, Eleanor, Mary, Samuel, James, Roland and Margaret, all now deceased except James. After his first marriage John Craig located in West Finley township, near the State line of West Virginia, where for a short time he followed farming, and then moved to Donegal township, settling one-half mile south of Toll gate No. 6, on the National pike, where he passed the remainder of his days, dying September 30, 1864, in his eighty-fourth year, his wife having preceded him to the grave in 1852. In politics Mr. Craig was first a Whig and afterward, from the time of its organization, a member of the Republican party. He was a successful agriculturist, and accumulated a comfortable competence by hard work and judicious economy.

James Craig was born May 25, 1825, in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., where his boyhood and youth were passed, alternating between book lessons at school and practical lessons on his father's farm. On December 4, 1851, he was married to Elizabeth Dickey, who was born in Germantown (now a part of Philadelphia), October 7, 1827, a daughter of Nathaniel Dickey, a native of County Donegal, Ireland, who, when a young man, came to America, settling near Philadelphia. There he married Elizabeth Kelter, a native of eastern Pennsylvania, and to them were born the following children: William, Mary, Tacy, Elizabeth (Mrs. Craig), Anna, Sarah J., Caroline, Susan and Martha. About 1830 they came to Donegal township, this county, where they resided until their deaths; the father dying June 11, 1852, in his sixty-second year, having been thrown from a horse and killed, and the mother on June 17, 1870, in her seventy-third year. To Mr. and Mrs. James Craig were born nine children, as follows: Mary E. (Mrs. George Brownlee, of Otoe county, Neb.), John (a carpenter, also in Otoe county), William D. (a farmer in Donegal township), James (deceased when twenty-eight years of age), Emma J., Samuel L. and Elizabeth B. (all three living with their parents), Nathaniel H. (who died at the age of seventeen years) and Carrie V. (at home with her parents). Soon after marriage Mr. Craig settled on one of his father's farms, situated three miles southeast of West Alexander, where he has resided over forty years, successfully engaged in farming and stock raising. In politics he is a Republican, and has held various township offices, to which, however, he never aspired; his wife is a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Craig and the entire family enjoy the esteem and respect of a wide circle of acquaintances and friends.

ISAAC T. CROUCH. As we record the lives of those whose acts have made a lasting impression on the community in which they live, or whose beneficial influence is ever reaching out farther, there is a special pleasure in tracing the history of men who were numbered among the gallant soldiers of the Union. The gentleman of whom we write is a son of Benedict, and grandson of Elijah Crouch. The latter, who was of English descent, reared a family of four children, viz.: Elisha, Benedict, Stephen, and Mary, all of whom lived over fourscore years, and are now deceased.

Benedict Crouch was born in June, 1800, near Jefferson, Greene Co., Penn., there passing his early youth. He learned the saddler's trade, which he followed a short time, and was then married to Rebecca, daughter of James Wallace. It seems this adventurous young Romeo had little faith in the popular maxim that "When poverty enters the door; love flies out of the window," for it is said that he commenced wedded life with a capital of thirty-seven cents. But far better than wealth, a stout body, active brain, and cheerful heart were his, which, with the unselfish love of his fair bride, proved far more efficient aids to success than a bank account in the hands of another. They were tenants on a farm for several years after their marriage, when he bought 288 acres near Bentleyville, Washington Co., Penn. Here he carried on an extensive farming business, and reared a large family of children, as follows: James, Sarah, John, William, Adah, Mary Ann, Thomas, Nathan, Hiram, Isaac T., Elizabeth, Bennett and

J. F. Crouch

Nesbit, of whom John, Sarah, Elizabeth, Thomas, Hiram, Nesbit and Mary Ann are now deceased. Adah and Isaac T. served under Gen. Philip Sheridan in the famous Ringgold Cavalry, which was finally merged into the Twenty-second Cavalry, under which title it was mustered out. Hiram was also a soldier of the Union, and William, then residing in Arkansas, felt that duty called him to defend his home and family rather than the nation; he therefore entered the Confederate army, and served throughout the conflict as captain of an Arkansas regiment. Benedict Crouch, for his second spouse, married Charity Wallace, a sister of his first wife, and the children by this union were S. Bentley, Hudson C. and Allison B. Notwithstanding the condition of his finances in early manhood, Benedict Crouch succeeded in paying for his home, rearing his large family of children in a respectable manner, and also saving quite a sum of money. He was an earnest Christian, and was identified with the Methodist Church, in which he was a class-leader. In politics, he was first a Whig, and afterward, on the formation of the party, a staunch Republican.

Isaac T. Crouch, son of Benedict and Rebecca Crouch, was born August 22, 1842, near Beallsville, Washington Co., Penn. At the age of twenty-one years he entered the war (as above related) as a private, being afterward promoted to the rank of sergeant. He participated in the battle of Cedar Creek, the scene of "Sheridan's Ride," and served until the close of the war. He then returned to Washington county, where he worked on a farm for several years. On September 4, 1872, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of William Forsythe, of Fayette county, Penn. The young people soon afterward located in Peters township, Washington county, where they remained as tenants for several years. In 1879 he bought the farm where he is now living, containing 117 acres of some of the best land in the county; it is underlaid with a valuable vein of coal which was recently sold at $50 per acre. Politically, Mr. Crouch has always been devoted to the interests of the Republican party, but invariably declines official honors. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and has served as elder and Sabbath-school superintendent. Two daughters complete the family circle, Jennie R., attending the Washington Female Seminary, and Nellie R.

MARTIN BOM CRAIG, a substantial farmer of Franklin township, is of Irish parentage, his father, William Craig, having been born in the Emerald Isle, and when a small boy emigrated with his parents to America. The sole method of navigation in those days was by sailing vessels, and the emigrants were nearly two and a half months in crossing the ocean, the weather being extremely rough, but the journey was at last ended in safety.

The Craig family settled in Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., where William grew to manhood and was married to Lydia Stokly, a daughter of one of the oldest pioneers of that township. The following children were born to them, their names and dates of birth being given: Eli, May 17, 1788; Otho, April 2, 1790; John, September 2, 1792; Arthur, July 13, 1794; Thomas, March 13, 1796; Elizabeth, July 31, 1798; Samuel, June 22, 1800; Prudence and Cornelia (twins), February 14, 1803; and Martin B., February 8, 1808. Mr. Craig resided in Washington borough several years after his marriage, and then purchased the farm now occupied by his son Martin B. It was then an uncultivated tract of land, and its present comfortable and home-like condition is due wholly to the efforts of Mr. Craig and his children. He was an energetic man, and earned the success which he won. In political life he was a Democrat, and for many years served as justice of the peace in Franklin township, a position which he filled to the entire satisfaction of every one. He died July 30, 1823, his widow on June 26, 1848.

Martin B. Craig passed his childhood on the home farm in Franklin township, but was obliged to begin life for himself at a very early age, and the experience thus gained has since enabled him to overcome many obstacles to success which would have proved insurmountable to those possessing less practical knowledge. He received a very limited education at the subscription schools, and retains a most vivid recollection of the scenes there enacted, and the primitive surrounding of his boyish days. The schoolhouse was an old deserted cabin, with a puncheon floor, upon which the slab seats and writing desks were placed beside the walls. The windows consisted of a single pane of glass, or a slip of greased paper placed over an opening made by the removal of a portion of a log. The old fireplace extended nearly across one end of the room, and was fed by huge logs, which were cut down at noon time by the larger boys.

On December 24, 1831, Mr. Craig was united in marriage with Sarah, daughter of Abram Elliott, a native of New Jersey, and their children are Jane (deceased), Adeline, Elizabeth, Lydia, William, Atkinson and Sample (all three deceased), and Nancy, living at home. After his marriage Mr. Craig settled on the home place, having purchased the interest of the other heirs, and in 1851 he erected the handsome brick residence which is his present home. He commenced life with very little, but by industry and enterprise has become a most prosperous citizen. In politics he is an ardent Democrat, outspoken in his opinions. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM P. MORGAN is a great-grand-son of John Morgan, who was born in Wales, where his boyhood and youth were passed. He was there married to a young countrywoman, and some years afterward brought his family to America, locating in Allegheny county, Penn. Three children were born to these early pioneers, viz.: Hugh, Samuel and Anna. The parents continued to reside on the farm, where they first settled, until their death. They were members of the Presbyterian Church, and in political opinion Mr. Morgan was a Democrat.

Hugh Morgan was born and educated in Wales, and came to America with his parents in early life. He was married to Margaret Billingsby, of West Virginia, and settled permanently in Allegheny county, Penn. They reared the following children: John, Samuel, Anna, Mary, Frank, Hannah, Webster, Hugh, James, Billingsby, Josiah and William (the two last named being deceased). The father died in 1846. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and politically he was an adherent of the Democratic party.

James Morgan, son of Hugh and Margaret (Billingsby) Morgan, was born January 17, 1809, on the home place in Allegheny county, Penn., and attended the subscription schools of the vicinity during his youth. In early life he was wedded to Elizabeth, daughter of John Hindman, a native of Washington county, Penn., who bore him children as follows: Hugh, Sarah J. (Mrs. William Herriott), Samuel, Billingsby, William P., John C. and Maggie (wife of James Fife). Mr. Morgan has for threescore years been a zealous member of the Presbyterian Church. He has always followed farming and stock raising. Politically, he was formerly a Whig, and has voted the Republican ticket since the organization of that party. Mrs. Morgan passed over the silent river in 1870.

William P. Morgan was born May 4, 1842, on the old place in Allegheny county, Penn., receiving his early education in the home schools. On March 7, 1867, he was united in marriage with Martha J., daughter of John and Elizabeth Johnson. While yet a young man William P. Morgan began a successful mercantile career. He first opened a store at Morganza, this county, remaining there five years, then moved to Canonsburg, and since that time he has conducted a very profitable business in the latter place, his custom having increased to large proportions. He is an active member of the Republican party. In religion he is prominently identified with the U. P. Church at Canonsburg, having served for years as a member of the Session, and also as Sunday-school superintendent. Mr. Morgan is one of the influential and progressive men of his community. Two daughters have blessed his home, namely: Lizzie Luella (Mrs. Ed. McNary), and Laura (living at home).

CARY PIPER. In every community there are to be found some who have achieved success in life by sturdy, patient, unceasing toil, and among this class the Piper family, of whom the subject of this sketch is a prominent member, have been justly welcomed.

William Piper was born in Virginia of German-English parents, and he followed carpentry in conjunction with agricultural pursuits, becoming a successful man. He left a large family, of whom, Thomas D. Piper was born in the Shenandoah Valley, Va., where his boyhood was passed. He there learned and followed the carpenter's trade, and after a time, coming to Coal Centre, Washington Co., Penn., commenced business as a builder and contractor, many of the buildings there being erected by him. At Coal Centre he married Ella Holmon, who bore him one son, William (who married Catherine Crow, and died in the State of California), and shortly thereafter died. Thomas D. Piper was then married to Mary Duvall, daughter of Lewis Duvall, one of the highly respected and well-to-do farmers of East Pike Run township, who had children as follows: Mary (wife of Thomas D. Piper), Hannah (wife of Elias Garrett), Abigail (wife of Jacob Deems), Isabel and Eliza (both unmarried), John (married to Hannah Yosty) and Lewis (married to Mary Deems). To Thomas D. and Mary Piper were born the following children: Ann (wife of H. D. Wilkins), Hannah (who married Joseph Moffat), Lewis D., J. W., Mary (wife of Henry F. Jamison), Cary and A. C. The father of this family died January 26, 1880, the mother on January 23, 1884. Politically Mr. Piper voted with the Whig and Republican parties, and in religion he was a leading member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

Cary Piper was born December 8, 1851, in Coal Centre, Washington Co., Penn., and received his early education in the public schools. In 1873 he opened a grocery business at Coal Centre, in connection with his brother A. C., which they exchanged for a drug store in 1874. They have been very successful in the latter enterprise, which is conducted under the firm name of Piper Bros., and they own some of the best property in Coal Centre. On September 11, 1879, Cary Piper was united in marriage with Alice F., daughter of E. C. Furlong, who is a son of John Furlong, whose father was born in Ireland, and coming to America made a permanent settlement in Maryland. John Furlong was born on the home place in Maryland, where he was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Henry and Catherine Holman, also natives of Maryland. The father was a Revolutionary soldier, holding the rank of captain, and both parents died in Allen township, Washington county, where their later years were passed. To the union of John and Elizabeth Furlong three children were born, viz.: Catherine E. (married to James Dowler, of West Pike Run township, and died in 1890), Otho H. (deceased in 1882, at Fayette City, Penn.) and E. C. After their marriage (about 1830) Mr. and Mrs. Furlong came to Washington county, Penn., locating on a farm in Allen township, and during the last twenty years of his life he followed the coal business in Fayette county. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and politically was a Jacksonian Democrat, taking an active interest in the affairs of his party. He died in March, 1883, at the age of ninety-three years, the wife and mother having passed away long before, at the age of seventy-five years. Both parents were members of the M. E. Church at Mt. Tabor.

E. C. Furlong, youngest son of John and Elizabeth Furlong, was born February 27, 1823, on the home farm in Maryland, and coming with his parents to Pennsylvania, was reared in Allen township, Washington county. He attended the subscription schools of the neighborhood, and after the death of his father engaged with his brother Otho in the coal business on the river, shipping to all points on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. E. C. Furlong was pilot on the river coal boats for about thirty years, making many trips to Cairo, Louisville and Cincinnati. In 1850 he was united in marriage with Amy Ann Stockdale, a native of Allen township, this county, a daughter of Allen Stockdale, who was born in 1788; he married Letitia Allen, who was born July 27, 1788, a daughter of Joseph Allen, for whom Allen township was named. The Allens were among the earliest settlers of Washington county, and owned a vast tract of land on the Monongahela river where their lives were passed. Joseph Allen died December 10, 1832, his wife having been laid to rest December 27, 1827. E. C. and Amy Ann Furlong began wedded life on the farm where they are now living, and the following children have blessed their union: Josephine (wife of Frank Hernet, of Pasadena, Cal.), William Allen (proprietor of a drug store at Laceyville, Penn.), John F. (residing at Pittsburgh), Sarah, Alice F. (wife of C. Piper), Letitia and Otho (living in Charleroi, Penn.). Mr. Furlong conducts a prosperous real-estate business, and owns nine houses in Roscoe. Politically he votes with the Democratic party, and has served as a member of the school board; in religion he and his wife are members of the M. E. Church.

Cary and Alice F. (Furlong) Piper have had two sons, viz.: Edward C. (deceased) and Earle. Mr. Piper is an active worker in the Republican party, and served as postmaster at Coal Centre, under Garfield, also Harrison. He is interested in religious matters, as a zealous member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of which he has been trustee.

CARSON. The first member of the family, of which Isaac and Cornelius Carson are honored representatives, emigrated from his native land, Ireland, to America, and made a settlement in this county, taking out a patent for land in Fallowfield township over one hundred years ago. Subsequently he traded a part of the original farm for a shot-gun, in order to induce a traveler who had the gun to settle near him in the wilderness. He died on this property, which has been in the possession of the family ever since.

John Carson, his son, was born, reared and educated on the home place in Fallowfield township, and when a young man married Elizabeth Springer, of the same locality. After marriage they settled on the homestead, where Mr. Carson carried on general farming and stock raising. Their children were Mary (Mrs. Abraham Van-Voorhis), Margaret (Mrs. Parker Carson), Elizabeth (Mrs. Noah Fry), John S. (father of subject), Sarah A. (Mrs. H. Allman) and Caroline (Mrs. M. Hazen). The parents of this family both died on the home place, and lie side by side in the Speers burying ground. They were members of the Speers Baptist Church; in politics Mr. Carson was a Democrat, and he held various township offices.

John S. Carson was born May 31, 1823, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn. He married Margaret Jones, a native of the township, daughter of Elijah and Mary (Warren) Jones, farmers, who were the parents of the following children: William, Eliza J. (Mrs. John Beadle), Margaret (Mrs. John S. Carson), Wesley, James, Noah and Isaac W. Mr. Jones was a member of the M. E. Church, and in politics was a Whig and Republican. After his marriage John S. Carson purchased a farm adjoining the homestead in Fallowfield township, and here passed the remainder of his life, dying September 24, 1882, his wife having preceded him to the grave December 16, 1870; they sleep their last sleep in Maple Creek cemetery, which is on the Carson farm. Mrs. Elizabeth Carson was the first buried there. They were members of the Baptist Church, and Mr. Carson was always regarded as an energetic and substantial citizen. In his political preferences he was an active Democrat, held various offices of trust in his township, and was school director for over a quarter of a century. Their children were Isaac, Cornelius, John Clarkson (who died in April, 1891, at Salt Lake City, Utah), Henry (a farmer in Fallowfield township), Robert B. (a resident of Aspen, Colo.), Mary E., Van C., Margaret M. (Mrs. I. N. Carson, of Fallowfield township), Caroline (Mrs. John W. Carson), Noah T. and Joseph (both living on the old Carson homestead).

ISAAC CARSON was born December 29, 1846, in Fallowfield township, and received a liberal education at the common schools of his district. On May 1, 1872, he married Lorinda, daughter of Noah and Lydia (Hill) Fry, natives of Fallowfield township. Her father died in December, 1884, the mother several years prior to his demise. Mr. and Mrs. Carson continued their residence in Fallowfield township until 1877, when he bought 140 acres in Allen township, to which they removed. He yet owns sixty-four acres in Fallowfield township, and in addition to general farming is considerably interested in live stock, making it a specialty. Politically he votes independent of party in local politics, but supports the Democrats in national issues. He is a member of the school board. Mrs. Carson is identified with the Disciple Church. Their children are Noah F., John S., Van C., Carl B., Omadell, Raymond, Edgar and Annie Elizabeth.

CORNELIUS CARSON was born December 29, 1848, in Fallowfield township, where his primary education was received. He attended the private academy of John C. Messenger, and later the Southwestern State Normal School at California. On the completion of his studies he taught school for some few terms, during the winter months, working on the farm the rest of the year, which latter vocation he followed until 1882 when he came to Monongahela, and here for a short time was in partnership with Yohe Brothers, in their planing mill. He then opened a furniture store which he conducted about four years, afterward embarking in his present grocery business. On October 30, 1873, Mr. Carson was married to Sarah, daughter of Joseph Beazell, of Fallowfield township. To them have been born: Laura I., Margaret A., Sarah B., Van C., Emma J., May E., Cornelius G., Isaac W. and Joseph Bascom. Our subject is an active Democrat, a leader in the party for many years. He has been twice elected a member of the borough council in a ward where the Republicans outnumber the Democrats two to one—a forcible evidence of Mr. Carson's popularity, and a practical recognition of his capabilities. He is a member of the M. E. Church, a highly successful business man, and an energetic, useful citizen.

HENRY M. KEENY, one of the most popular, wide-awake citizens of Franklin township, was born January 13, 1837, in West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of Daniel and Mary (Shipe) Keeny, the former of whom was born in Amwell township, same county, the latter a daughter of one of the early settlers here. Daniel Shipe served in the war of 1812, and was reported among the missing. After marriage Daniel and Mary Keeny resided in various townships in the county, finally settling in Amwell, where they died. The children born to them were Levi (deceased), Rebecca (widow of Mr. House), Elizabeth, Isaac, John, Abraham, Henry M., Mary A. (wife of J. Bowen, of Canton township), Catherine (Mrs. Charles Van Kirk), Daniel (who enlisted in Company C, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., was wounded in the battle of Gettysburg by a shell, and died of blood poisoning at the hospital in Philadelphia), and George (who was in Company B, same regiment as his brother). In politics the father was a Democrat.

Henry M. Keeny began attending school in his native township, about three months of each year being so passed, and this continued till he was eighteen years of age. When nineteen he commenced teaching in the "Red District," where he remained one year; then taught three terms in Greene county, and afterward eight terms under an engagement in Franklin township, this county. On September 1, 1881, he was married to Sarah C., daughter of Robert Chambers, now deceased of Franklin township, and they then settled on the place where they yet reside. Their union has been blessed with the following named children: Bessie E., born November 1, 1882, and Birdie, born December 1, 1883. Mr. Keeny has always been a Republican, and at the age of twenty-one was elected to the office of auditor of Amwell township, serving two years. In Franklin township he has served as auditor three years; school director, twelve years; clerk of the election board, six years; supervisor, three years, and is now serving his fifteenth year as justice of the peace. Mr. Keeny is a typical self-made, and, for the most part, self-educated man, and he is now the owner of 400 acres of valuable land, all accumulated by industry, economy and good management. For twenty-one years he has been a buyer of wool. Some few years back his health commenced to fail somewhat.

JOHN T. MOFFITT represents an old and pioneer family of Washington county. James Moffitt (grandfather), born in Ireland November 4, 1766, on the banks of Loch Erin, emigrated to this country in 1789. He was married, September 18, 1791, to Elizabeth Nichols, and reared a family of nine children—five sons and four daughters—of whom one daughter and two sons are yet living. He was a weaver by trade, but, settling on a farm in West Pike Run township, this county, became successful as a farmer, leaving, at his death, which occurred when he was eighty-six years old, a large amount of property to his heirs. Elizabeth, his wife, died at the age of eighty-eight years, and both are buried on the old homestead.

John Moffitt, son of James and Elizabeth

J. J. Moffitt

Moffitt, was born December 2, 1804, and was engaged during the earlier part of his active life in boating coal and apples, making some trips to New Orleans. He was a strong supporter of the Republican party, and served several years as constable under Ephraim Blaine, the father of the late James G. Blaine. At that time any failure to pay an honest debt was considered a grave crime, punishable by imprisonment. Later in life he settled on the old homestead, and followed agriculture and stock raising. He was married to Hannah Mason. He died September 13, 1878, in the seventy-third year of his age, his wife following soon after; both were members of the M. E. Church.

John T. Moffitt, son of John Moffitt, was born August 14, 1844, and secured a limited education. On May 13, 1869, he was married to Mary E. Hormell, born March 31, 1850, in Guernsey county, Ohio, a daughter of Jacob Hormell, who was born December 19, 1825, and on August 26, 1847, he married Minerva Lilley, who was born December 26, 1826. Mr. and Mrs. Hormell were the parents of ten children, eight of whom are yet living. John T. and Mary E. Moffitt have had the following family: John H., born June 5, 1870; Victor Noir, born April 10, 1873; Thomas Edgar, born May 10, 1879; Guy, born June 4, 1886; Mary, born May 26, 1889, and Lillian, born April 12, 1875, died in the fourth year of her age.

Mr. Moffitt has taken pride in fine stock. He has been a breeder of Jersey cattle for eighteen years, was early in life engaged in raising fine sheep, and has on the farm (the old homestead), which he now superintends, a flock of thoroughbred Black-Top Merino sheep. He has erected on his place excellent buildings. In political opinion Mr. Moffitt is a Prohibitionist, has filled the office of school director for two terms, and is road commissioner. He and his wife are identified with the Disciple Church, in which he is an elder.

JOHN WOODBURN. Among the residents of East Finley township, who by their exemplary lives have not only won for themselves esteem, but have also acted an important part in molding the lives of others, none are more prominent or influential than the Woodburns. The earliest record known of this family is that of one John Woodburn, a native of County Antrim, Ireland, where he was a landholder. There he married Martha Scott, who bore him in that country six children, one of whom died there, the remaining five—Rosanna, Mary, Samuel, Martha and Joseph—coming to America with their parents in 1812. After a stormy voyage of sixteen weeks they landed, in the spring of the year, at Philadelphia, and from there pushed on to Washington county, where they settled in Buffalo township, near Taylorstown. Here Mr. Woodburn purchased 160 acres of land, ten of which were under cultivation, and successfully followed farming until 1842, when, old age coming upon him, he went to live with his children, but died in the following year. His wife had preceded him to the grave in 1822. By hard work, industry and good management he accumulated considerable property. His children are all now dead, Joseph, the father of our subject, being the last to pass away.

Joseph Woodburn was born May 22, 1804, in County Antrim, Ireland, and came to America with his parents in 1812. He attended the subscription schools in Buffalo township, this county, and received practical instruction in agriculture on his father's farm until the age of nineteen, when he began to learn the tanner's trade with Adam Lawrence, serving a three years' apprenticeship, after which he embarked in the business for himself. On March 4, 1829, he was united in marriage with Ruth Garrett, who was born in 1802, a daughter of James and Sarah (Ross) Garrett, who were of Irish extraction. Mrs. Woodburn died July 24, 1842, leaving four children: John, James R., Samuel and Mary A., of whom Samuel died in 1863, and Mary A. on June 29, 1886. On April 27, 1843, Mr. Woodburn married Mrs. Hannah Downie, the widow of Robert Downie, and of this union were born two children: Jennie (who died January 9, 1866) and Luther S. (who died June 9, 1866). After his first marriage Mr. Woodburn followed his trade of tanner until 1832, when he moved to Donegal township and purchased a farm near West Alexander. Here he carried on farming for about five years, and then came to East Finley township, settling on land about one and one-half miles south of Claysville, along Buffalo creek. In 1866 he and his wife moved into Washington, where they lived until her death, which occurred in 1883, after which he made his home with his children until his summons from earth, which came August 23, 1889. He was successful in all his undertakings, and at the time of his death owned over four hundred acres of choice farm land, the fruits of his labor and toil. Mr. Woodburn was formerly a Democrat, voting for Andrew Jackson, but after 1840 he followed the fortunes of the Whigs, and after the formation of the Republican party united with it, proving one of its strongest supporters up to the day of his death. His sons, John and James R., are the only survivors of his family.

John Woodburn was born July 2, 1830, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., and is the eldest son of Joseph and Ruth (Garrett) Woodburn. He received a liberal common-school education, and a thorough, practical training in agriculture on his father's farm. On May 24, 1855, he was united in marriage with Sarah A. Jones, who was born September 30, 1836, a daughter of Alexander and Mary (Dickel) Jones, natives of Lancaster county, Penn., who afterward moved to Wayne county, Ind. To Mr. and Mrs. Woodburn were born eleven children, their names and dates of birth being as follows: Luther S., July 29, 1856 (died September 5, 1861); Alice E., January 25, 1857 (married to William Rooney, of Claysville, Penn.); George J., August 16, 1859 (a farmer in East Finley township); Elmer E., January 17, 1861 (a farmer in Franklin township); Mary E., July 2, 1862 (married to E. Ashbrook, of Buffalo township); Willie L., April 27, 1864 (a resident of Washington, Penn.); Frank M., December 8, 1865 (living in Allegheny, Penn.); and James S., October 1, 1867; Pliney E., February 14, 1869; Ina May, January 28, 1871, and Eddie B., July 28, 1876, all at home. On July 1, 1855, Mr. Woodburn moved to his present well-improved farm, situated about two miles south of Claysville, on Buffalo creek. He has inherited all the progressive spirit for which his ancestors were noted, and his success in life is due to that, and to his business sagacity, careful management and industry. He possesses a wonderful memory, is a most interesting conversationalist, and can speak of events long past with the utmost accuracy and ease. In 1887 he built one of the finest brick residences in East-Finley, and his barn has no superior in the township. He and Mrs. Woodburn are members of the U. P. Church, and in politics he has been a staunch Republican since the formation of that party.

MRS. ISABEL M. BRYSON, widow of Joseph A. Bryson, was born June 21, 1834, a daughter of Henry L. and Rachel Ann (Nixon) Rizer, and in 1872 was married to Joseph A. Bryson.

Joseph A. Bryson was born July 19, 1827, of Irish descent. His grandfather was born in County Donegal, Ireland, and after marriage immigrated with his family to America, first locating in Maryland, and afterward settling in the northern part of Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., near the union of the Little and Big Buffalo streams. He was among the pioneers of the township, and passed the remainder of his life on the farm, his wife surviving him several years, living with the children.

William Bryson (a son of this old pioneer) was born in 1808 in Ireland, and came with his parents to Washington county, Penn.; he was united in marriage with Hannah Bryson, who was born in 1792, daughter of John Bryson, an old pioneer of the county, and their children were John (living in Warrensburg, Mo.), William (deceased in Texas), David and Abraham (deceased in youth), Margaret (Mrs. William McHugh, of Taylorstown, Penn.), Mary (deceased in youth) and Hannah (deceased in 1882). Mr. Bryson passed his married life on the farm now owned by the family of his son Joseph. He was a successful business man, and in politics a Republican. He died April 13, 1878, having been preceded by his wife September 29, 1872.

Joseph A. Bryson was born on the home farm, in Donegal township, which is situated about half a mile west of Dunsfort, Penn. He always followed agricultural pursuits, and remained on the old place throughout his life. He died January 5, 1890, leaving a widow and the following children: Mary Jane, Emma L., Nora B., William H. and Charles D. (twins). All of the children are living with their mother on the home farm, which is successfully carried on under her management.

JOHN LAIRD, a worthy representative of one of the oldest families of Donegal township, is a native of the same, born June 4, 1828.

His paternal grandfather, John Laird, was born in Ireland in 1758, and was there married to Mary Snodgrass, who bore him children as follows: Alexander, Margaret (wife of Joseph Hayburn), Robert, Jesse, James and John. He came to the United States about 1792, alone, and finding employment on a farm, worked diligently until he had earned sufficient means to bring his family from the "ould sod." Receiving the necessary welcome remittance, Mrs. Laird, Alexander, Jesse, Margaret and John, Jr., crossed the broad Atlantic, and about 1800, after landing, with some difficulty found their father, who had set out to meet them with a team. He brought them to his new home in Lancaster county, Penn., and the following year they moved by wagon to Washington county, where they made a settlement near Taylorstown, Mr. Laird having purchased a tract of land in Donegal township. John Laird died June 3, 1838, his wife having preceded him to the grave in February, 1829. Politically he was a Democrat, and took a lively interest in the advancement of his adopted country. Robert and James Laird, uncles of the subject of this sketch, came over subsequently.

John Laird, son of this pioneer, was born in County Donegal, Ireland, in April, 1792, and when yet a boy came with the rest of the family to the United States and to Washington county, where he received his education. When yet a young man he was married to Margaret, daughter of William and Margaret (Todd) Snodgrass, of Donegal township, the former a native of Ireland, the latter of Scotland. The children born to Mr.

and Mrs. Laird were Jesse, Robert, James, William A., John, Mary J. (wife of Samuel Dougherty), Grizzella and Margaret (Mrs. S. B. Lindley). The mother of this family dying December 15, 1835, Mr. Laird married, for his second wife, Agnes Maxwell, who died February 8, 1878, leaving one child, Ann E. (wife of Dr. John W. Kelly). Mr. Laird departed this life July 18, 1847. He was one of the first members, and all his life a substantial supporter, of the Presbyterian Church at Claysville. Politically he was a Democrat, and took an active interest in educational matters in his locality. Enterprising and energetic, he was self made, succeeding by hard labor and unceasing toil in amassing, before retiring from active work, a comfortable competence.

John Laird, the subject proper of these lines, was reared to farm life, and what education he succeeded in securing was obtained at the subscription schools, but he is chiefly self-educated, having devoted much of his spare time to reading at home. On January 8, 1852, he was united in marriage with Eveline Potter, who was born in Marshall county, W. Va., March 11, 1828, a daughter of John Potter, a native of Washington county, Penn., where he married a Miss Supler, a native of Donegal township, same county. Soon after their marriage they moved to Marshall county, W. Va., where they purchased a large tract of land and where the father also followed milling. They reared a large family of children, and resided there until their deaths. Mrs. Laird died September 14, 1876. Mr. Laird remained on the old home farm in Donegal township until 1872, in which year he came to Claysville, where he has since resided. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics is a lifelong solid Democrat.

THE PRY FAMILY. Among the well-known and prosperous early settlers of Washington county, the Pry family takes a prominent position. Conrad Pry was a native of Germany, and coming to America began farming on a place about eight miles from Romney, W. Va. His son, Jacob C., was born in the latter part of the eighteenth century, in West Virginia, where his early life was passed on the home farm. He was married when a young man to Miss Catherine Barnes, of Hampshire county, W. Va., who bore him the following children: Eliza, Elizabeth, Mary, John, Abraham and William. Of these children, Betsey (as she is familiarly called), married to Samuel Paskel, of Cross Creek township, and Abraham (mentioned below) are the only ones living.

Abraham Pry was born November 10, 1813, in Hampshire county, W. Va., and his father died when he was but four years of age. He learned the cooper's trade in early life, but did not continue to follow it. When about twenty-two years of age, he came to Washington county, locating on 150 acres in Cross Creek township. In 1840 he was united in marriage with Miss Rachel McClurg, of Cross Creek township, daughter of David McClurg, who came from Ireland, and settled on the farm adjoining that of Mr. Pry. Since purchasing his farm Mr. Pry has added to the original tract, and now has 241 acres. Abraham and Rachel Pry are the parents of the following children: David M., John W., William H. and Joseph M. (twins, the latter now deceased), R. A., Abraham, Ambrose, Catherine J., Cynthia Ann, Anna M. and Francis H. The father was originally a Democrat, then a Whig, finally becoming a Republican, being now an active supporter of the latter party. He is a regular attendant of and liberal contributor to the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church.

ABRAHAM PRY (son of Abraham and Rachel (McClurg) Pry) was born November 17, 1852, in the old home, where he was trained to farm duties from early boyhood. On February 22, 1877, he was married to Elizabeth A. Dimit, of Independence township, this county, who has borne him two sons, Brainard K. and Wiley C. He is a Republican, to which party the family have always been staunch adherents, being actively interested in promoting the growth of Republican principles. They are principally engaged in farming and sheep raising, usually wintering three or four hundred sheep. Mr. Pry is an influential and prosperous citizen, a worthy representative of an honored name.

MRS. JANE ANN LEE, a popular and intelligent lady of Jefferson township, is a daughter of Samuel Scott, whose father, Josiah, of Scotch descent, was a resident of Washington county, Penn., where he was united in marriage with Jane Noble. Eight children were born to Josiah and Jane (Noble) Scott, namely: Samuel, John, Hugh, Alexander, and four daughters, whose names have not been ascertained.

Samuel Scott (the father of our subject) was born about the year 1779, near Washington borough, where he was trained to agricultural pursuits, which he followed through life. He was united in marriage with Miss Mary Ann, daughter of William Wiley, a farmer of Washington county, and their children were: William W., Josiah N., Jane Ann and Samuel G. Of this family, William and Josiah N. are deceased, and Samuel G. is a prominent farmer of Smith township, this county.

Jane Ann (Scott) Lee (subject of this sketch) was born October 3, 1817, near Washington borough, and assisted in the household duties of the home until she grew to womanhood. Miss Scott then attended Washington Female Seminary for two years, and was married October 5, 1837, to John Lee. His father, Hugh Lee, was a native of Ireland, who, emigrating, settled on the farm in Cross Creek township, Washington county, Penn., where Mr. W. C. Lee is now living. After the marriage of John and Jane (Scott) Lee they came to the present home farm in Jefferson township, where children were born and reared as follows: William S., born October 18, 1838; Eliza A., born June 13, 1841; Mary M., born March 25, 1843; Hannah J., born March 20, 1846; John C., born August 2, 1847; Samuel W., born January 14, 1850; Hugh, born December 25, 1851; Alice, born January 26, 1853; and Lucy, born July 19, 1856, all of whom are living. Mr. Lee died April 23, 1856, and at that time owned over 300 acres of fertile farm land, which is kept in an excellent state of cultivation by the present owners. In politics he was a counselor and adviser of the Whig party. In religion he was a member of the Presbyterian Church, which he served as trustee and in various other capacities.

Eliza Ann, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Lee, grew to womanhood under the parental roof, and was united in marriage December 29, 1859, with A. M. Foster. To this union were born four children: Lenora, born April 14, 1861; Eliza Jane, born April 2, 1862; Harry W., born June 4, 1864; and Lee Ellis, born October 2, 1869. Of these children, Lee Ellis is the only living member (the others having died in youth). He resides with his mother and grandmother, and has entire control of the home place.

HUGH LEE, the youngest son of John and Jane Ann Lee, was born on the farm in Jefferson township, where his mother is now living. He passed his younger days in attending the common schools of his neighborhood, and assisting in the general duties of the home place. On October 7, 1873, he was married to Jennie R., daughter of Robert Scott, of Burgettstown, Penn. The young couple lived on an adjoining farm until they erected their present beautiful home (which was built in 1885) upon the old place. One son has blessed their union: Harry Scott Lee, born October 14, 1874. Hugh Lee bears the family name, through which he inherits his present home. In politics he has always been a staunch Republican. He is a conscientious member of the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church.

JAMES WILSON, a representative of one of the pioneer families of Franklin township, was born December 9, 1821, in that township. His grandfather was a native of Maryland, where he was married, and in 1780 moved to Washington county, settling in Franklin township. The country was then very new, and Indians were numerous, but he erected a log cabin, and with his family braved the dangers and endured the privations of frontier life. He reared the following children: Robert, Douglas, Jane, Margaret, Mary, Effie, Sarah, Nancy and Johnson. In politics Mr. Wilson was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the M. E. Church.

Robert Wilson was born on the home farm in Franklin township, and received a meager education in the common schools. He remained at home until some time after his marriage, when he removed to the farm where he died. He was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Elisha and Mary Lacock, and she bore him the following children: Emily (Mrs. William Haggerty), Sabrina (Mrs. James Powers), Simeon, Eliza (Mrs. James Warrick), James, Atlas, Abner and Douglas. Mr. Wilson was a liberal contributor to the cause of Christianity, although a member of no church. In politics he was a Whig, and took an active interest in all questions pertaining to the welfare of the township.

James Wilson, son of Robert and Elizabeth Wilson, was born in Franklin township, Washington county, and attended the common schools of the neighborhood, which offered but poor advantages. In 1847 he was united in marriage with Isabella, daughter of John Fulton, a resident of Morris township, this county, and to their union were born children as follows: Mary (Mrs. Albert Lacock), Frank and Victoria (Mrs. Gleason Conklin). After his marriage Mr. Wilson settled on the farm of 145 acres of valuable land, where he still resides, the improvements having been made by his own industry. In politics he was originally a Whig, and since the formation of the party has been a Republican. He has served as assessor two terms, and has also been school director nine years. He is a liberal supporter of the church.

WILLIAM T. SAMPSON. The Sampson family, of whom this gentleman is a worthy representative, are among the most influential and wealthy citizens of Carroll township. They originally were natives of Westmoreland county, Penn., where William Sampson was born in 1765. He was married in that county to Mary Nill (who bore him four children), and some time after his marriage the family moved to Washington county, Penn., where the father died in 1815.

James Sampson, son of William and Mary Sampson, was born February 5, 1806, just above Webster, on the Monongahela river, in Westmoreland county, Penn. He came with his parents to this county in 1810, and in 1840 was married to Mary Grant, a native of Washington county. She bore him seven children, of whom are named William T., Harvey J. and John G. The mother died in 1889. James Sampson has carried on a distillery for twenty years in connection with farming, and now owns 1,250 acres of land. He was president of the Bank of Monongahela City for twenty-two years, and is one of the leading citizens of Washington county.

William T. Sampson was born January 22, 1844, in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn., and received his education in the schools of the county. On May 23, 1876, he was united in marriage with Lucretia Welsh, daughter of John and Sarah Jane (Bell) Welsh, the former of whom is a farmer of Knox county, Ohio, and they have two sons and three daughters, namely: Mary B., Sarah J., John W., Lucretia V. and William K. The home place is situated three miles from Monongahela and contains 265 acres of land, and upon it he raises a good quality of stock, besides carrying on general farming. Mr. Sampson is a Republican, and has served his township as supervisor for several years. Mrs. Sampson is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM STOLLAR, an old and successful farmer of East Finley township, is a son of Andrew Stollar, who was born in 1777 in Schuylkill county, Penn., where he was married to Rosanna Ealy, a native of the same county, also born in 1777, a daughter of George Ealy, who afterward moved to Washington county. The following children were born to their union: Rosamond, Peter, Christina, Catherine (residing in Illinois), Henry (living in Claysville, this county), William (subject of sketch), Daniel, Mollie (living in West Finley township, this county), and one deceased in infancy, unnamed; all except the two last named were born in Schuylkill county, Penn. In 1818 Mr. Stollar packed a wagon with household goods, and crowding, with the family, inside, moved to Washington county, locating about two miles south of Washington, where they remained a short time, thence moving to East Finley township, settled in the midst of a partially cleared wilderness, about half a mile north of East Finley postoffice, and there, in the new home, their two younger children were born. Mr. Stollar died in 1846, and January 5, 1863, his wife followed him to the "undiscovered country."

William Stollar was born January 16, 1813, in Schuylkill county, Penn., and was brought, with his father's family, to Washington county, where he received very little schooling, as his parents were poor and needed his aid in the farm work. He remained at home until he reached the age of maturity, and, on October 18, 1833, was united in marriage with Annie Rockefeller, of East Finley township, born October 30, 1818, daughter of Nathan Rockefeller, and they had the following children: Rosanna, born September 20, 1835 (deceased); Nathan, born January 19, 1838 (a farmer, living in East Finley township); John, born May 17, 1840 (residing in Nebraska); Rachel, born May 5, 1842 (living in East Finley township); Andrew, born July 17, 1844 (a resident of East Finley township); Nancy, born April 28, 1850 (residing in Washington, Penn.); Henry, born January 14, 1853 (deceased in infancy), and two other children (deceased in infancy). Mrs. Stollar died January 19, 1854, and in 1855 Mr. Stollar was married to Susanna Martin, who was born January 9, 1822, daughter of Daniel Martin, and their children were as follows: Daniel, born March 1, 1856 (deceased May 22, 1858); Margaret Jane, born April 13, 1858 (living in Morris township, this county), and Mary Elizabeth, born December 15, 1861 (living in Johnstown, Penn.). The mother of these children died November 26, 1877, and in 1885 Mr. Stollar was married to Rebecca Bedillion, born January 3, 1845, daughter of John Bedillion, of Franklin township.

In 1834 Mr. Stollar moved to his present farm (then an unbroken wilderness, which he himself cleared), situated about one mile and a quarter south of East Finley postoffice, in East Finley township, and continued to follow farming with marked success until he retired from active life to enjoy the fruits of early toil. He has been a Republican since the formation of the party. In church relation he is a member of the Valley M. E. Church; his wife is a member of the C. P. Church at Bethel.

WILLIAM PRIGG. Of that noble army of stalwart pioneers who braved so many dangers and endured such innumerable hardships in the early settlement of Washington county, none can claim greater prominence than the Prigg family.

Samuel Prigg, the first of the name to settle in the county, was a native of Maryland, whence, when a young man, he came with his parents to Buffalo township, where Salem Flack now resides, and here built and operated a tannery for some years; later he settled in Canton township. In his native State he had been apprenticed to a tanner, with whom he thoroughly learned the trade, and after following the same for many years, finally settled on a farm, where he passed the remainder of his days. While yet a young man he married Hetty Day, a resident of Washington county, and the children born of this union were: John, Robert, Samuel, Margaret, Rebecca, William, Enoch D. and James. The father died about 1855, the mother about 1853. They were zealous members of the Baptist Church, and in politics Mr. Prigg was an Old-school Democrat, an ardent supporter of the principles of Jefferson and Jackson, and one of the organizers of the party in his township.

William Prigg was born August 6, 1815, in Canton township, this county, and was reared a typical "farmer boy." His schooling, which was limited to a few weeks in the winter time, was obtained at the primitive establishments of learning in vogue at that time. During his early manhood, when he first started out for himself, his life was one of continual hard work, and it was then that he more particularly manifested those traits of character which have made him so well known in this section. In company with his brother, Enoch D., he purchased a farm, on which they lived, keeping "bachelor's hall," working and improving the same until they bought another tract, when they divided their holdings, the old home place falling to Enoch's share. William is now the owner of 250 acres of land in Canton township, and is rated as one of its most successful and substantial citizens. On October 6, 1856, Mr. Prigg married Rebecca, daughter of Joseph Mountz. The young couple took up their residence on the Prigg farm, where they remained fifteen years, then moved to the Wolf farm, and in 1886 came to their present place of residence. The children born of their union were: Samuel (deceased), Jackson (married to Margaret McQuay), William (married to Nora Weaver), and Joseph. Like the family generally, in politics, Mr. Prigg has maintained the principles of the Democratic party, but in voting, as far as county and township politics are concerned, he is Independent. A lifelong member of the Presbyterian Church, he has ever been one of its most active workers and liberal supporters, and lets not his left hand know what his right hand doeth.

[Since the above was written, we have received information of the death of Mr. William Prigg.—Ed.]

SAMUEL W. CARSON, the oldest living representative of the Carson family in Washington county, was born January 24, 1838, and is a son of Thomas and Mary (Wright) Carson. Isaac Carson, his grandfather, was born and married in eastern Pennsylvania, whence he came to this county, becoming one of the earliest settlers of Buffalo township, and a prosperous farmer. His children were as follows: James, born April 17, 1798; Thomas, born September 30, 1800; Adam, born June 20, 1803; Mary (Mrs. William Bell), born February 14, 1806; Rebecca (Mrs. William Ely), born May 18, 1808; Ann (Mrs. William Wright), born April 15, 1810; Margaret (Mrs. Albough), born May 27, 1812; Isaac, born July 22, 1815; Samuel, born January 25, 1819, and Jane, born May 2, 1821. The parents of this family lie buried side by side in North Buffalo cemetery; they were members of the Seceder Church, and in politics he was a Whig.

Thomas Carson, father of our subject, was married in 1829 to Mary, daughter of Samuel Wright, and the children by this union are Rachel (Mrs. H. C. Noble), Isaac, Samuel W. and Leman. After marriage Mr. Carson continued to reside on the home place, where he carried on farming and stock raising, and where he and his wife passed the remainder of their busy lives, the father dying January 5, 1865, and the mother January 5, 1876; they were consistent members of the United Presbyterian Church, and in politics Mr. Carson was an ardent Democrat.

Samuel W. Carson lived nearly half a century on the place of his birth, and in 1885 moved to his present commodious residence, where he has a fine farm of 200 acres, besides which he has another tract of 100 acres in the western part of the township. He has always been engaged in farming, and has met with well-merited success. On December 24, 1874, he was married to Margaret A., daughter of Abraham Zigler, a native of Cumberland county, Penn., where he married, and had the following named children: Alexander, Mary, Margaret A., Dora, John, Sadie, Agnes and Martha. The Zigler family are all members of the Presbyterian Church at Claysville (near which town they reside), and in politics he is a Democrat. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Carson were Frank, Mac, Etta B., Mary (deceased), Van R., Wright, Otto (deceased) and S. C. The family are members of the Presbyterian Church at Claysville; in politics Mr. Carson is a Democrat, and has been one of the party's leaders in his section for years. He has served his township in several capacities with much merit, and for the past six years has been a member of the school board.

JOHAN M. GRIFFITH, a well known citizen and prosperous dairyman of Mt. Pleasant township, is a grandson of John Griffith. His great-grandfather, John Griffith, was born in Wales and married Letitia Blackburn. They settled in Mt. Pleasant township, and some of the family located in Maryland in 1765. Their son, John Griffith, (grandfather of subject), came to Mt. Pleasant township, and settled on the old Griffith homestead, where he died.

Isaac Griffith, father of our subject, was born, in 1800, on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, on the headwaters of Raccoon creek, where he grew to manhood. He married Elizabeth Esler, a native of Mt. Pleasant township, who bore him the following children: Robert (living in Cass county, Mo.), John M. (our subject), James M. (assassinated in Arizona), Isaac M. (deceased), Jane (Mrs. T. M. Berryhill, of Mt. Pleasant township), Lizzie (unmarried, living at Hickory, this county), Letitia (wife of T. M. Liggett, of Independence township) and Hattie Ann (wife of John Liggett, also of Independence township). Mr. Griffith followed farming, and in politics was first a Whig, then a Know-nothing, and finally a Republican. In religious belief he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church at Mt. Prospect. He died in 1867, and his wife in 1857.

John M. Griffith was born March 17, 1842, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and was educated in the schools of Hickory, attending also six weeks at the normal school; he afterward taught school several terms in Washington county. On October 22, 1863, he was united in marriage with Mary Lyle Smith, a native of Smith township, and a daughter of Ebenezer and Margaret (Lyle) Smith, natives of Cross Creek township. Mr. Smith carried on a commercial business in Smith township, this county, for several years, and was a Republican. He and his wife both died in Smith township. Mrs. Griffith has two sisters living: Sarah Margaretta (wife of A. M. Russell) and Jennie O. (wife of Samuel Farrar), both residents of Mt. Pleasant township.

Mr. and Mrs. Griffith began life on their present farm, which contains 140 acres of well-cultivated land, where they conduct a profitable dairy business, milking an average of eighteen cows per day. He built his residence in 1862, and remodeled it in 1892. In politics Mr. Griffith was formerly a Republican, but is now a zealous Prohibitionist, and he cast the first Prohibition party vote in his township; in 1888 he was nominated for the State Legislature on the Prohibition ticket. He and his wife are connected with the Mt. Pleasant United Presbyterian Church at Hickory, in which he is a ruling elder. They have two children: Maggie Venalla and Edwin Smith, both at home, the former of whom attended Washington Seminary, and graduated from Geneva College in 1888; the latter is at present attending Hickory Academy.

GEORGE W. LUELLEN is a grandson of Henry Luellen, who came from the banks of the Ocheeche river in "Old Virginia," to Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., about 1783, and locating on the farm now owned by Grant Moninger, took up 200 acres of land. He was united in marriage with a Miss Barnet, of Washington county, and to their union were born three sons and four daughters: Asa, Luellen (deceased), Mrs. Betsey Slusher (deceased), Jessie (deceased), Reason (deceased), Polly (Mrs. Kearn), and Mrs. Millie Featherland (deceased). Mr. Luellen spent the rest of his life on the farm, and was successful in business.

Reason Luellen, son of Henry, was born in 1795, on the old home farm in Amwell township, this county, where he passed his life, receiving a limited education in the schools of the period. He was married to Sarah Pettit, who bore him the following children: Charles, George W., Jonathan, Bowen (deceased), Henry and Andrew Jackson (the last named being deceased). The mother of these children dying, Mr. Luellen was united in marriage with a Miss Reynolds, and they had two children: Sarah (Mrs. Riggle), and Simon, who died in the army. Mr. Luellen devoted his life to farming, and owned a good farm of 180 acres in Amwell township, Washington county, also about three hundred and sixty acres in Iowa. He died on the old farm in 1858, in his sixty-third year.

George W. Luellen was born in 1825 on the old homestead in Amwell township, Washington county, and remained at home until twenty-five years of age, receiving a common-school education. In 1850 he was married to Miss Rebecca Thompson, of Amwell township, who has borne him four children: Mary Ann (Mrs. Closser), Margaret Ellen (Mrs. Russell), Allison (deceased), and Emma (Mrs. Swart). Mr. Luellen has a good farm of 150 acres in Amwell township, and has been a busy and successful man. In politics he has always been a Democrat, and has held the office of road commissioner three terms, or nine years. Now sixty-seven years of age, he is a strong, healthy man, and has yet the promise of many useful and happy years to come.

MRS. ELIZA JANE KIDD, one of the most estimable and intelligent ladies of Jefferson township, is a daughter of Robert Stewart, whose father was born in County Down, Ireland, where he was married to Betsey Hemphill. In 1812 the family set out for America; during the voyage the ship (as was the custom in times of war) was boarded by a British man-of-war in search of recruits for the navy, and several able-bodied men were pressed into the British regular service. The son Robert (then a young man of eighteen years) was one of them, and he served three weeks in the navy, but at the end of that time he was released by his father paying a ransom. The family finally arrived at Philadelphia, Penn., without further mishap, and thence proceeded to Hickory, Washington Co., Penn., where they made a permanent settlement. The son, Robert Stewart, was soon afterward married to Miss Ann McGaugh, who was born January 27, 1794, in Londonderry, Ireland, and their children were John, Eliza Jane, Sarah, Robert, James and Andrew. The living members of this family are Robert, James and Eliza Jane.

Eliza Jane Stewart was born March 19, 1820, on the home farm in Jefferson township, and assisted her mother with the household duties during her girlhood. She was united in marriage with David, son of Joseph Kidd, a native and life resident of Ireland, of whose family David was the only member to settle in America. After their marriage the young people settled in Guernsey county, Ohio, where they resided fifteen years, and reared the following children: Sarah, born July 12, 1850; Ann Jane, born October 10, 1852; Mary E., born February 5, 1855; Robert, born January 14, 1857; Agnes, born August 30, 1860, and Rebecca (wife of George Boles), born March 31, 1864.

On July 13, 1868, David Kidd passed away, and his widow then returned to Jefferson township, and bought the farm of 177 acres where she is now living. This farm consists of very fine land, upon which is a grist and saw mill, both in constant operation. Mrs. Kidd is a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, and is loved and respected by all who know her. She has in her possession a cane which was used by Gen. Murray, who fought under Washington in the Revolutionary war.

J V. CLARK passed his early life in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., receiving his education at the common schools of West Middletown, and at Washington and Jefferson College. On December 8, 1886, he was united in marriage with Mary E., daughter of Rev. Samuel Taggart.

Samuel Taggart, a leading clergyman of this county, was born March 26, 1803, in County Antrim, Ireland, son of John Taggart, who was also born in Ireland, and there married Mary B. Conahou, who bore him three sons: James, John and Samuel. John Taggart was an extensive cattle dealer. He died in Ireland and in 1820 the family immigrated to America, landing at Montreal, where James had previously settled and engaged in the shoe business. John and Mrs. Taggart afterward came to Pittsburgh, Penn., where the mother died. John engaged in shoe manufacturing at Pittsburgh, being very successful in that business. He was married to Elizabeth Orr, of Pittsburgh, who bore him the following children: John, Robert, Samuel, William, Mary A., Tillie and Lizzie. He was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Associate Reformed Church.

Samuel Taggart passed his youth in Montreal and Pittsburgh. He first attended the Western University, and then entered the Theological Seminary of Allegheny, from which he graduated in 1834. On July 18, 1839, he was married to Margaret, daughter of Robert McAyeal, who was born in 1784, in Belfast, Ireland, where he was reared and educated. He emigrated when a young man, and coming to Pittsburgh, Penn., engaged in mercantile business. He was there married to Rebecca Matthews, whose family came from Ireland when she was but six years of age, and settled in Wilmington, Del., where the remainder of their lives was passed. Their children were: Margaret (Mrs. Samuel Taggart), Sarah, James, Robert, Rebecca (Mrs. Alexander McKeever), Nancy (wife of Rev. Reed), and Mary (married to Dr. McComey). In politics Mr. McAyeal was at first a Democrat, and then a Republican. He was a member of the Covenant Church, and died in 1865, at the age of eighty-one years. His wife followed him to the grave May 1, 1889, in her ninety-sixth year.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Taggart had three children, namely: Robert, Samuel A. and Mary E. (Mrs. J. V. Clark). His first charge was at West Middletown and at Mt. Vernon, where he remained fifteen years, then lived in Harmony, Ill., eighteen months, when he returned to West Middletown, where he passed the remainder of his ministerial life, retiring in 1884. He was a Free-Soil man and afterward joined the Republican party. He died October 21, 1885.

To the union of J. V. and Mary E. (Taggart) Clark was born one daughter, Margaret. In 1885 Mr. Clark engaged in general mercantile business, in which he has since continued. In politics he is an active member of the Republican party, and he is an energetic and prosperous business man. He is a member of the U. P. Church at West Middletown.

J OHN FINLEY KENNEDY, one of the most energetic business men of Washington county, is a grandson of Samuel Kennedy (a farmer), who was born of Irish parents, and grew to manhood in Union township, Washington Co., Penn. John and Martha (Young) Kennedy, parents of Samuel Kennedy, were born in County Antrim, Ireland, and came to America, the father at the age of twenty-one years, the mother when quite small. She was married to John Kennedy at the age of thirteen and one-half years, he being twenty-four years old. They first lived at Coal Hill (then called Fort Pitt, now Pittsburgh, S. S.). From Fort Pitt they moved to Mingo, where they passed the remainder of their days, John Kennedy dying in 1842, in his eighty-second year, his wife in 1847, when seventy-six years old. Twelve children were born to them, of whom two died in infancy, and ten lived to good old age. In early manhood Samuel Kennedy married Elizabeth McVey, who bore him the following named children: Thomas, Hannah A., John, Martha, James K., Joseph M., Mary and Samuel

J. F. Kennedy

L. In politics he was a Federalist, and in religious faith a member of the Mingo Presbyterian Church.

Thomas Kennedy, son of Samuel and Elizabeth (McVey) Kennedy, was born in 1825, on the home place in Union township, Washington Co., Penn. He learned the trade of cooper, but followed carpentering. On December 9, 1845, he was united in marriage with Hannah E., daughter of William and Nancy (Osburn) Roberts, of Carroll township, this county. They settled on the home place in Union township, where three children were born to them, namely: J. F., W. A. and Samuel D. In politics Mr. Kennedy was a Whig and Republican; in church connection he was a member of the Mingo Presbyterian Congregation.

J. F. Kennedy was born November 10, 1846, in Union township, Washington Co., Penn., where he remained until eighteen years of age. He then became bookkeeper for S. B. Kennedy, of Pittsburgh, Penn., and was afterward a partner in the coal business; then worked two years in the oil fields of Tidoute, Warren county, same State. After leaving that place he conducted a mercantile business at Huston's Run, thence moving to Courtney, Union township, Washington county, where he resided eighteen years. He was interested in the coal mines at that place twelve years and served as postmaster for nine years. He now owns a store and butcher shop. He has thirty acres of land, also eight dwellings in Courtney, and he erected the first house in the village; has an interest in the Courtney Fire-Brick Works. He gives considerable attention to stock, including the breeding of trotting and pacing horses, and has Jersey cattle for sale. On June 3, 1872, Mr. Kennedy married Sarah E., daughter of Andrew Gault. Our subject is a Republican, and has served his township in many ways: was appointed coroner by Governor Beaver, and re-elected in 1887; was elected a justice of the peace of Union township. He is a member of Courtney Presbyterian Church.

WH. BUCHANAN, a prosperous and energetic young farmer of Independence township, is a son of David and Fannie (Hamilton) Buchanan. Our subject was born March 24, 1863, in the house where he is now living, and received his elementary instruction in the common schools; he afterward attended Bethany College, West Virginia, and also college at Canonsburg, Penn. He and his brother then began farming on the home place. On June 1, 1887, he was united in marriage with Winnie, daughter of C. C. Rea, of Cross Creek township, this county. She attended Cross Creek Academy, and taught school five years, being an educated and intelligent lady. They have two children, Elizabeth Lenore and David Rea, both living at home. Since his marriage W. H. Buchanan has resided on the home farm, consisting of 300 acres of well-improved and valuable farm land; he gives considerable attention to sheep raising, having many very fine animals, some of which are registered in the United States and the Delaine Registers. Mr. Buchanan belongs to the progressive type of farmers and is a public-spirited citizen, well fitted to manage the extensive real estate which he owns. In politics he is a Democrat, and in religion he and his wife are members of the Lower Buffalo Presbyterian Church at Independence.

JAMES THOME, one of the oldest living members of the family of that name, was born in August, 1816, in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn. His grandfather, James Thome, was a native of Dauphin county, Penn. He was married and had six children, viz.: William, John, James, Margaret, Samuel and Abigail. Of these James was born in Dauphin county, same State, and there received such education as the subscription schools of the period afforded. Not being satisfied with the outlook for success in his native county, so far as he was individually interested, he came to Washington county about the time of the "Whiskey Insurrection," was with Washington during this insurrection, and purchased, in North Strabane township, the farm now occupied by his son, James. Their first humble dwelling thereon was a rude cabin built of hewn logs. Many improvements were made by Mr. Thome and his family, and the once forest-grown wilderness was to a great extent brought to its present high state of fertility through their unceasing toil. Mr. Thome was united in marriage with Abbie Hill, who bore him the following named children: Jane (deceased), William, John, Abbie (wife of James Pollock), Margaret (wife of Rev. Bankhead Boyd), James (subject) and Samuel (deceased). The father of this family died in May, 1861. He and his wife were members of the Seceder Church, in which Mr. Thome was an elder for many years. In politics he was a Whig.

James Thome received a good common-school training, and was early inducted into the mysteries of agriculture, and the hard, never-ceasing work incident to that vocation. On April 13, 1843, he was married to Eliza, daughter of James McNary, of Nottingham township, which union has been blessed with six children, as follows: Abbie (wife of Rev. D. C. Wilson), Annie (wife of William Martin), Rev. J. L., William, Samuel and Emma. After marriage Mr. Thome settled permanently on the home farm, where he successfully cultivated the soil, but has retired from active work and is now passing the last days of his useful life in the enjoyment of the fruits of his toil. Mr. and Mrs. Thome are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek. In politics he was first a Whig, but for many years back he has been an uncompromising Democrat, and has been supervisor a number of years. He has been eminently successful in all his pursuits, and to-day is the owner of 250 acres of highly-improved land. He is proverbially kind-hearted and charitable, and his hospitality is of the genuine old-fashioned kind.

JOHAN A. HUNTER, a skilled builder and contractor of McDonald borough, is descended from natives of the Emerald Isle, whence so many of our most enterprising and worthy citizens trace their origin.

Robert Hunter first saw the light of day in County Down, Ireland, where he grew to manhood and was married. The young people soon afterward set sail for America, immediately after their arrival proceeding to Washington county, and settling in Cecil township. A log cabin was soon erected and the work of clearing the farm begun, which he continued until his death. The children born to them were Mary (wife of Alexander Jeffrey), Elizabeth (Mrs. Lindsey), Jane (Mrs. Hunter) and John. Robert Hunter and his family were members of the Presbyterian Church at Miller's Run, of which he was an active supporter. In politics he was an active member of the Whig party. His wife died in 1854, at the age of ninety-six years.

John Hunter was born in Cecil township, this county, on the Hunter homestead, and passed his youth in attending the country schools, receiving a good education. He was married to Nancy Greer, a native of eastern Pennsylvania, who bore him children as follows: Elizabeth, Mary, Robert, George, John A., Margaret, William (who enlisted in Company D, Tenth Pennsylvania Reserves, and died in the service), Joseph, James and Nancy J. The father of this family followed agricultural pursuits. In political opinion he was first a Whig, then a Democrat; and in religious connection was a staunch member of the Covenanters Church, in which faith he died in 1868, being followed by his wife in 1878; both are buried in the Covenanters Church cemetery.

John A. Hunter was born January 19, 1836, in Cecil township, this county, and received a common-school education. He began farming for himself at the age of seventeen years; in 1870 he came to McDonald, here following the business of a builder and contractor, and he has erected the majority of the buildings in the town. On July 3, 1861, he was married to Mattie A., daughter of William Harper; the latter was a son of Robert Harper, a native of Ireland, who was there married, and, afterward coming to America, settled in Cecil township at an early day. He was a Whig in politics, and in religious faith a member of the Seceder Church. His son, William Harper, was reared and educated in Cecil township, this county, and in early manhood was married to Mary, daughter of John Lindsey, of Cecil township; their children were Mattie A., David, Mary, Tamar, Wilson, Joseph and Melissa. The father followed agriculture and stock raising; in politics he was formerly a Whig, and united with the Republicans upon the formation of the party.

To the union of John A. and Mattie A. (Harper) Hunter, two children have been born: Addie G. (deceased) and William J. Mr. Hunter votes the Republican ticket, and in religion he is a member and trustee of the United Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM E. CRAFT, a representative of one of the prominent pioneer families of Washington county, was born in 1816 in this county. His great-grandfather, John Craft, was a native of Maryland, and removed to Washington county before the Revolution, being among the first settlers of the locality. He reared four sons, viz.: Lawrence, John, Thomas and William.

Lawrence Craft was born in 1750. He married Annie Thompson, a native of Winchester, Va., and became the father of five children: John, Thomas, William, Linda (wife of Benjamin Hoagland) and a son who died in infancy. William, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born in 1789 in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn. He married Mary Elliot, who was born in 1794, a daughter of William Elliot, an old pioneer of this section. To this union eleven children were born, as follows: Betsy, Lawrence, Annie, William E., Martha, Melinda, Jane, David, George, Isaac and Mary. Of these, nine lived to maturity. Martha, Jane, David, George and William E. are at present the only surviving members.

William E. Craft was born on his father's farm, where his boyhood was passed. He was first married in 1853 to Martha, daughter of John Cooper, of Morris township, and to this union were born three children: Alice (wife of W. S. Waters, of Franklin township), born October 7, 1856; Harriet, born August 31, 1858, resides with her father, and Martha Jane, born November 14, 1860, wife of Randolph Rush, of Prosperity. Mrs. Craft died December 2, 1860, and on June 14, 1866, Mr. Craft was married to Mary J., daughter of George McCarrahan. To this union were born children as follows: Ida D., born July 10, 1867; Maggie

E., born April 30, 1869; William E., born July 25, 1872, and Edgar, born January 30, 1876, all living at home. The mother of these children died August 24, 1891. The farm owned by Mr. Craft, lying along what is known as Craft's creek, two and one-half miles west of Prosperity, is a fine one, and yields a good income. Mr. Craft has always voted with the Democratic party, though he is not an active politician. He is a worthy member of the Mt. Zion M. E. Church.

JOHAN C. BALDWIN, one of the most prosperous citizens of West Finley township, is a grandson of William Baldwin, who was born in Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., and there grew to manhood. When the war of 1812 began, he was among the first to volunteer his services, and remained in the war until the close. He was afterward married, and reared a family of eight children: Thomas, Phoebe, Jonathan, Silas, Seely, Cephas, Amos and Frank (deceased in youth).

Thomas Baldwin was born about 1820, on the farm in Franklin township, and received his early education at the subscription schoolhouse, with its puncheon floor and slab seats. When about twenty-one years of age he learned the trade of a cabinet maker, which he followed several years. He was united in marriage with Miss Regina Schrontz, and their children were as follows: Elizabeth (Mrs. Miller), Francis F. (lieutenant in an Iowa regiment, who was killed near Dallas, Ga., while cheering on his men), Jacob S., Milton, John C., Mrs. Mary Booth, Silas, Regina and Anna M., of whom the latter three died in early life. After saving some money by following his trade, Mr. Baldwin bought a farm and devoted the summer season to its cultivation.

John C. Baldwin was born February 19, 1846, in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed most of his earlier years in farming. At the age of twenty-one he taught a term of school, and the following winter entered Waynesburgh College. He continued to attend school and teach alternately for three years, and during this period became acquainted with a fellow student, Melissa Ann McMay, who graduated in 1872. The friendship of the young students continued to grow, and after his graduation, on April 24, 1873, they were united in marriage. Mr. Baldwin then engaged in the mercantile business in the little town of Belle Vernon, Fayette Co., Penn., but a year later began farming, which vocation he has since successfully followed. Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin have nine children, all of whom are living with their parents. In political life, he is a staunch Republican, and has been justice of the peace fourteen years. In religion he is an elder in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and has served a number of years as superintendent of the Sunday-school.

JOHAN W. BOYER. The well-known family in Washington county, of which this gentleman is a member, were represented among the earliest of early pioneers. The ancestors in this country were natives of New Jersey, in which State James Boyer passed his early youth, among the peaceful Society of Friends. When a young man he came to Pennsylvania, and, purchasing a farm in Peters township, Washington county, was there married to Nancy, daughter of Col. William Blackmore. Five children were born to this marriage, namely: John, Amy, Samuel, Peter, and Sarah (wife of Carvel Rigdon, a brother of Rigdon, the Mormon preacher), none of whom are yet living.

Samuel Boyer, son of James and Nancy Boyer, was born in 1784, in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn. He attended the subscription schools of the neighborhood, then taught several terms in Beaver county, Penn. He was united in marriage with Mary Boyer, who was born in 1803, daughter of Leonard Boyer, of Bethel township, Allegheny Co., Penn. Samuel and Mary Boyer resided in Beaver county, Penn., for six years after their marriage, then returning to Washington county, lived on the old home place six years. They finally bought and moved upon the Higbee farm, adjoining the old homestead, where they died, leaving children as follows: James B., deceased; Peter, living near Library, Allegheny county; John W.; Elizabeth, deceased wife of David Higbee; Nancy, married to E. T. Townsend, of Peters township; Amy, deceased wife of D. Welch, of Limetown, and Lucinda, second wife of her brother-in-law, David Higbee.

John W. Boyer, whose name opens this sketch, was born August 16, 1828, on the home place in Peters township, this county, where he was trained to agricultural pursuits. On December 10, 1857, he was united in marriage with Margaret J. Townsend, who was born in 1840, daughter of Joseph Townsend. The latter was a son of Daniel Townsend, who was born August 14, 1747, in Egg Harbor City, N. J., where he grew to manhood and engaged in the lumber business. In 1776 he entered the Revolutionary war, serving about two years, participating in the battles of Trenton, Princeton, Brandywine, and Monmouth. In 1779 he came to Washington county, Penn., bought 400 acres of land of Joshua Wright, and settled permanently upon that tract. He was married to Lydia Sawens, of Massachusetts, who bore him children as follows: Catherine (Mrs. John Baird, of Beaver county), Naomi (Mrs. Uriah Burton), Julia (wife of Peters Sharp), Margaret (wife of William Chisler, of Ohio), Rebecca (Mrs. John Hozer, of Mercer county, Penn.), Ruth (Mrs. Stephen Higbee, of Ohio), Lydia (wife of Arthur Devore), Elijah (a lieutenant in the war of 1812), and Joseph, all of whom were married, and are now deceased. The father was a Democrat in politics; he died September 1, 1833.

Joseph Townsend, son of Daniel and Lydia (Sawens) Townsend, was born March 1, 1796, on the old place in Washington Co., Penn. He lived at home until fifteen years of age, then entered the war of 1812 as a fifer, but was brought home by his father. A few years later the juvenile warrior had so far modified his views as to prefer rural life. He became an excellent farmer, and devoted much attention to sheep raising. In early life he was united in marriage with Nancy, daughter of Col. William Blackmore, and granddaughter of Samuel Blackmore. The latter owned 400 acres on the site of the present city of Washington. The property was leased for ninety-nine years, which expired in 1870, the heirs having never claimed it. William Blackmore, son of Samuel, came with his family from Washington, D. C. to Washington Co., Penn., and there reared six children, viz.: Thomas, Charles, Nancy (Mrs. Townsend), Eliza, Ellen, and Arabella, all now deceased but Nancy. To Joseph and Nancy Townsend were born three children, namely: Charles W., Daniel B., and William (deceased in youth). The mother died September 5, 1833, and in 1834 Joseph Townsend was married to Nancy, daughter of Robert Flack. Her father was born in Ireland, and about 1800 emigrated to this country, settling on Chartiers creek, in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn. To Joseph and Nancy Townsend were born three children, viz.: Robert (deceased), Elijah T., and Margaret J. (Mrs. J. W. Boyer, of Finleyville). The father voted with the Democratic party, and in religion was a member of the Baptist Church. He died on his seventy-fifth birthday, March 1, 1871, being followed by his wife in August, 1874, in her seventy-fifth year.

John W. and Margaret J. Boyer first located on a small farm near Bower Hill, in Peters township, this county, where they lived five years, during which time he dealt extensively in stock. He afterward bought the 240 acres which he yet owns in Union township, and there he managed a profitable dairy for several years in connection with stock raising. In 1884 he settled in Finleyville, this county, where he is now living a comparatively retired life. He has erected several elegant dwellings, which have contributed largely to improve the appearance of the village. He also buys some wool each year, having formerly made large annual investments in that article. Politically he votes with the Republican party, and in religion is a member of the Baptist Church of Library, Allegheny Co., Penn. Mr. and Mrs. Boyer are the parents of four children, namely: Joseph, born November 24, 1858, living on the farm; Samuel F., born July 8, 1861, in the hardware business at Finleyville; Charles L., born October 29, 1863, a farmer near Finleyville, and James, born May 1, 1871, in partnership with his brother Samuel in the hardware business.

WILLIAM PATTERSON, farmer and stock raiser of Cecil township, was born in May, 1837, in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn. He is a son of Ezra Patterson, whose parents came to North Strabane township many years ago.

Ezra Patterson was born in eastern Pennsylvania, and coming west with his parents when a young man, continued to reside on the farm in North Strabane township, this county. He was married to Nancy Horner, and settled on the old homestead, becoming a successful agriculturist. In political opinion he was an earnest supporter of the Whig and Republican parties. He and his wife were formerly members of the Seceder Church, afterward uniting with the U. P. Church at Pigeon Creek, in which he was an elder. They were the parents of the following children: Margaret (wife of Josiah Kerr, of North Strabane township), William, Joseph (living in Virginia) and David (residing in Illinois) (twins), Lizzie (Mrs. L. Dagg, deceased in 1881), Sarah (married to Peter Dow, of Illinois), James (living on the old farm) and Anna (wife of William Murray, of Bentleyville, this county). The father of this family died in December, 1863, and was followed by his wife in January, 1892, when in her eighty-second year.

William Patterson was reared on the home place, and educated in the schools of North Strabane township, this county. In August, 1860, he was married to Jennie Speer, a native of Chartiers township. She is a daughter of Robert Speer, and granddaughter of James and Catherine (Latta) Speer, early settlers of Peters township, where their son, Robert, was born and reared. The latter followed farming in connection with the business of a carder and fuller. He was married to Nancy Harsha, daughter of Thomas and Jane (Hutchinson) Harsha, early settlers of Chartiers township, where the daughter was born, and where the young people resided for some time after their marriage. In 1851 they moved to North Strabane township, this county. Mr. Speer was an active politician, and in religion he and his wife were formerly members of the Cross Roads U. P. Church, afterward uniting with the U. P. Church in North Strabane township, this county. He died in 1853, and Mrs. Speer is now residing in Canonsburg, Penn. They had seven children, namely: Thomas (deceased in October, 1861), Jennie (wife of William Patterson), James (residing in Canonsburg, enlisted in the Eighty-fifth P. V. I., served three years and was twice wounded), Robert (enlisted, at Chartiers township, in the One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I. for three years, or during the war; he was wounded and died while home on a furlough), Stewart (who settled in Missouri in 1865, died in 1869), Alexander (living in Canonsburg, Penn.), and Catherine (Mrs. Joseph Templeton, of North Strabane township).

William and Jennie (Speer) Patterson resided in North Strabane township until 1874, when he bought the present home in Cecil township, containing fifty-two acres of well cultivated land. Mr. Patterson is an ardent worker in the Prohibition party, and in religious connection he and his wife are members of the U. P. Church at Venice, this county. The following children have been born to them: Robert Latta (deceased in 1881, in his nineteenth year), Eva Jane (married in 1884 to William Moore, now living at Bulger, Penn.; she has three children), John Stewart (a mason), Anna Balph (married in 1888 to William Carlisle, living at Hickory; they have one child), William Dow (a driller), James Boyd (a blacksmith at Venice), Walter, David and Mary, the latter four being yet at home.

JOSEPH McKNIGHT is the only living representative of the family name. His grandfather, Hugh McKnight, was born in Ireland, and after immigrating to America lived for some time in Cecil county, Md., where he was married, and where two sons, John and Joseph, were born. In 1784 he went West and bought 193 acres of land, which had been warranted in November, 1784, to one Samuel Irwin. Hugh McKnight received a patent of this tract June 18, 1799, and remained upon it till his death, when his sons inherited it.

John McKnight was born in Cecil county, Md., and came with the family to Washington county, Penn., when yet a boy. He was married to Sarah Nesbitt, a native of Chartiers township, this county, where they made their permanent home. John McKnight was an ardent Democrat and active politician. He died in 1857, having been preceded by his wife in August, 1836.

Joseph McKnight was born in 1832, in Chartiers township, and received his early education in the subscription schools, in the meantime assisting with the duties of the farm. In 1859 he crossed the plains to California with an ox team, being about six months on the journey. He was a miner for some time, then worked on a ranch, remaining there until the fall of 1865. He then returned by water to New York City, finally arriving at Washington county, his former home, when he began to follow agricultural pursuits. In 1872 he bought his present home in Chartiers township, consisting of forty acres of well cultivated land, upon which is a fine spring of water. Mr. McKnight has always been actively interested in all public questions and votes with the Democratic party.

JOHN W. NESBIT, a representative citizen of Chartiers township, is a grandson of Jonathan Nesbit. Jonathan Nesbit was a native of Cecil county, Md., and was there married to a Miss Lyons. About 1791, in company with three brothers, he came to Washington county, Penn., and invested in land. One of the brothers returned to his native State, but the others made permanent homes in Washington county, and the land is still owned by their descendants.

Alexander Nesbit, a son of the pioneer above mentioned, was born on the frontier farm in Washington county, Penn., and in 1847 was married to Eliza Rankin, a native of the same place. The young people settled on the farm now occupied by their son John W., and reared the following children: Rebecca J., John W., William R., Joseph (a blacksmith, deceased in March, 1887), Lizzie (deceased in August, 1890), James S. (a druggist of Bergholz, Jefferson Co., Ohio), and Jesse (deceased in infancy). The father of these children followed agricultural pursuits. In politics he was a member of the Democratic party; he was interested in church matters, contributing to the support of various societies. He died in 1872, and his widow is living with her son, John W.

John W. Nesbit was born in 1851, on the farm in Chartiers township where he is now living. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, and educated in the township schools. Mr. Nesbit owns a well-cultivated farm of 119 acres, upon which he spends the greater portion of his time. Politically he is an active member of the Democratic party; he has held the office of assessor for years, and is now entering on another term; he has also served several terms on the election board.

JOHN GORDON. Among the well-known pioneer families of Donegal township, the name of Gordon is one of the most prominent. Their ancestry is traced to one Alexander Gordon, grandfather of the present generation, who was born in Scotland, and immigrated to America soon after the war of the Revolution. Landing at Philadelphia, he proceeded to Washington county, locating in the southwest part of Donegal township, half a mile southeast of West Alexander. He then began to clear away the almost unbroken forest, and was soon thereafter married to Catherine McDonald, whose parents were also pioneer settlers. The young couple began their humble home, which was cheered by the following children: William, Margaret, Barbara, Jane, John, Ethel, Hugh and Nancy, all of whom lived to an adult age, but are now deceased. The father and mother lived to a good old age, and always resided on the farm after coming here.

Hugh Gordon was born in 1804, on the farm now occupied by his son John, and received his education in the common schools. In 1853 he was married to Margaret Beeks, born August 27, 1820, daughter of Jacob and Margaret (Henry) Beeks. Mrs. Beeks was a native of Ireland, and came to America in an early day; while her husband, Jacob Beeks, was born in Maryland, whence he moved to Washington county, Pennsylvania.

To Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Gordon were born two children: Catherine (Mrs. W. S. Armstrong, of West Finley township) and John (subject of this sketch). Hugh Gordon first brought his bride to the old homestead, where he followed farming and dealing in stock. By close attention to business and honorable methods of dealing, he succeeded in securing both the esteem and friendship of his neighbors, and in accumulating a considerable property. He and his wife were members of the M. E. Church. He died in 1876; his widow is yet living with her sons on the home farm.

John Gordon was born February 24, 1854, in the same house where he is now living. He assisted with the work on the home farm and attended the common schools. On September 25, 1889, he was united in marriage with Etta Mitchell, who was born August 6, 1860, daughter of William and Mary Mitchell, residents of Buffalo township, this county. They have one daughter, Maggie May. Mr. Gordon has had charge of the home farm since his marriage, and is engaged in general farming and dairy work. He is a popular young farmer, and in political opinion is a Republican, but not an active politician.

JOHAN Z. BECK, an enterprising citizen of South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., was born on the farm in Franklin township now occupied by his parents. He is a son of Adam Beck, who was born January 16, 1816, in County Armagh, Ireland, the only son of John Beck. Mr. Beck died when Adam was but a small boy, and his widow (formerly Margaret Clark) was afterward united in marriage with William Jackson. She came with him to America, leaving her son Adam with his uncle, where he remained until twelve years of age, when he embarked for America on one of the large sailing vessels, a totally utter stranger among the 1,500 passengers on board. The brave child conquered his timidity, and arrived in safety at his journey's end, after a stormy voyage of six weeks and four days. He landed at New York, where he remained a year, then went to the home of his mother in Washington county, Penn., living there but a short time. Three children were born to the union of Mrs. Beck with William Jackson: Margaret (Mrs. Robert Barre), Mary (Mrs. Andrew Gamble) and Thomas C. The parents passed the remainder of their lives in Washington county. At the age of fourteen years Adam Beck began to learn the blacksmith's trade, which he followed several years in this county. On June 11, 1840, he was united in marriage with Julia A., daughter of Samuel Mncee, who belonged to one of the oldest families in the township, and the following children were born to them: John Z., Margaret, Harriet (Mrs. Alvin Smith), Henrietta and William J. After his marriage Mr. Beck settled on the farm where he yet resides, which was formerly a portion of the old Smith place. He and his family are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek. In politics he was formerly a Whig, and since the formation of the party has been a staunch Republican.

John Z. Beck received his education in the common schools of the vicinity, and on January 16, 1874, he was married to Mary J., daughter of Robert Zediker; they have had no children. Mr. Beck began his married life in South Strabane township, Washington county, where he has since remained, with the exception of a three years' residence in Washington borough. In political opinion Mr. Beck is prominently identified with the Republican party, and has served as assessor and constable, also in several minor offices. He and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek.

WARNE. This family have for many years been closely identified with the growth and early history of Washington county. They are of English origin, and the earliest ancestor of whom we have an authentic record was one Joseph Warne, a native of New Jersey. He was there reared and married to a Miss Miller, who was born in that State, and their children were as follows: Stephen, Abram, James, Mary (wife of David Allen), and Frances (married to Solomon Johnson). He and his family came to Pennsylvania in the year 1770, locating in what is now Allegheny county, buying 400 acres of land near Sunnyside, and there he passed the remainder of his life. He was a leading member of the Round Hill Presbyterian Church, and in politics affiliated with the Democratic party.

Maj. James Warne was born December 6, 1779, near Sunnyside, Allegheny Co., Penn. He received a common-school education, then attended the academy at the Forks, intending to prepare for the ministry in the Presbyterian Church, but, owing to circumstances, went into mercantile pursuits at the age of eighteen. Soon after leaving school he came to Washington county, and conducted a store for one McKinley; then engaged in river traffic, and finally came to Parkison's Ferry (now Monongahela City), where he took part in various enterprises. About the year 1815 James Warne and his brother-in-law, William Parkison, built and operated the first window-glass factory erected in western Pennsylvania. In connection with the glass manufacture, he carried on a boat-yard, and also did a general mercantile business, buying various kinds of stock and selling it in the eastern markets. In 1805 he was united in marriage with Mary, the only daughter of Joseph Parkison. Her father was born and reared near Carlisle, Penn., where he was married to Margaret Weaver, and their children were born as follows: James, David, William and Mary (Mrs. Warne). Joseph Parkison built the first ferry at Monongahela City, from whence the first name given the place, which afterward became so famous in connection with the Whisky Insurrection, namely, Parkison's Ferry, the first United States postoffice in this region. He was a very prominent citizen, serving as a justice of the peace for many years. But Joseph Parkison made his place in the history of Washington county, by laying out and founding the town of William's Port (now Monongahela City), in the year 1796. There is a question as to the date of the founding, which is not a very material point, but the evidence is on the side of those holding to 1796. The Parkisons were Virginians, and came of English ancestry. Maj. James Warne was a scrivener of much ability, and many legal papers are yet extant, which bear his handwriting. He performed the duties of legal adviser in the settlement of estates and business matters generally throughout the community. His descendants are the only living representatives of the founder of William's Port (now Monongahela City), now resident in this county. In 1811 James Warne was commissioned by Gov. Snyder as captain of a William's Port company, attached to the Fifty-third Regiment of the militia of Pennsylvania. In 1812 they offered their services to the Government, which were accepted, and the company went to the United States barracks at Meadville, Penn. In the autumn of 1812 he received a commission as major of the First Battalion in the Third Infantry Regiment, and held that position until receiving his discharge. He was a liberal supporter of public enterprises, and voted with the Democratic party. He died October 28, 1855. Of the children of the family who grew to mature age the following are named: Amuzet I. (married to Mary Jacobs, deceased in 1879, at Parkersburgh, W. Va.), born December 5, 1805; Margaret (wife of Samuel Devore, living near Parkersburgh, W. Va.), born December 28, 1807; Joseph P. (married to Eliza J. Irwin, living on the old homestead near Monongahela City), born January 6, 1810; James, born May 11, 1812; Hiram (married to Elizabeth Nichols, is a farmer near Washington, Penn.), born February 16, 1822, and Eliza J. (Mrs. John Watkins, of Richmond, Ray Co., Mo.), born June 26, 1824.

JAMES WARNE, son of James and Mary Parkison Warne, was born in William's Port (now Monongahela City), in the frame house now standing on the corner of Main street and ——— alley, opposite the Episcopal church (St. Paul's), where he lived until the age of fourteen, when his parents moved to the farm on which Joseph P. Warne now resides in the First Ward Monongahela City. He continued to live there until he was thirty-one years of age. He was educated in the common schools of the day. In 1836 he was married to Casandra Nichols, a daughter of James and Mary Nichols, of Allegheny county, Penn., who died in the year 1856, without issue. For his second wife, James Warne was married in 1858 to Mary Elizabeth, daughter of James Dunn, of Allegheny county, Penn., a woman especially noted for her Christian piety and lofty moral character. She was reared in the strict faith of the Covenanter Church, and the precepts of her adopted creed were fruitful of good and worthy deeds in her after life. Mrs. Warne became connected with the church to which her husband belonged, the Methodist Episcopal, after her marriage to Mr. Warne, and continued ever after, until her death, August, 1868, a true and earnest worshiper of God, and a lovely example of a follower after truth and righteousness. She died in the mid-day of life, but, having measured full up in the life of a true Christian wife and mother, she lives in the hearts of those who loved her. Their children were: William Parkison, James J. (deceased 1874), and Mary Eliza (wife of Dr. George S. Stathers, of Monongahela City). James Warne settled on a farm in Fallowfield township, in the year 1843, where he resided until 1884, then returned to Monongahela City, his former and present home. He was a lieutenant in the old Jackson Guards, when a young man, holding his commission under the then governor of Pennsylvania; and throughout his life has been actively interested in public matters. By industry and frugality he has amassed quite a competency in this world's goods. He owns one of the finest Washington county farms of 235 acres, and also several valuable properties in Monongahela City, and is one of the heaviest taxpayers. Although at the advanced age of eighty years, he laid out and expended in building some $5,000 in 1891, in the place of his nativity and present residence. From early life he has been a leading member and very liberal supporter of the Methodist Church, and he was for many years a member of the board of trustees, and in 1869-70 an active member of the building committee for the erection of the handsome church of the Edwards Chapel congregation at Ginger Hill, this county.

Although never having enjoyed the advantages of an education, such as is now afforded the youth of this State, under the magnificent public-school system, he was fully alive to the necessity of an early training and a liberal college education for his children, that they might be prepared to grapple with the advanced ideas and broader civilization of the age. He therefore made it his aim in life to give his children a complete education. His daughter was educated in the public schools of the neighborhood, and finished her studies at the Washington Female Seminary, at Washington, Penn. She is now the accomplished wife of Dr. George S. Stathers, of Monongahela City, Penn.

WILLIAM PARKISON WARNE, a leading young lawyer of Monongahela City, was born February 28, 1860, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn. He attended the schools of the home neighborhood until the age of fourteen, when he placed himself under the tutorship of Prof. John C. Messenger, at Hoge's Summit Academy, in Washington county, Penn., where he first learned to decline mensa and conjugate the Greek verb. Having obtained a preparatory course at the above institution, and at Allegheny College, at Meadville, Penn., he then entered Washington and Jefferson College, from which he graduated in 1882, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. In early boyhood he evinced a strong inclination for earnest study, and became an excellent student. After graduating, he returned to the farm and rested from mental labors for two years, then with mind and body renewed by the invigorating rural life, entered the law office of the Hon. Thomas H. Baird, Esq., in Monongahela City, Penn., with whom he remained until admitted to legal practice in the county of his birth. During this interval, he was a student in the law department of the University of West Virginia, ranking among the first in his classes. On May 12, 1890, he began the practice of his profession in Monongahela City, Penn., where he has already won laurels which promise him a brilliant future. Mr. Warne served as editor of the Monongahela Daily Democrat during the Cleveland-Harrison campaign of 1892. He was highly complimented by the press and public on account of his able management and direction of the paper while under his control. His views taken on all subjects showed that he was thoroughly up to the times and level-headed on all questions, and that his education proved its superiority for liberality and broadness of mind over the narrow ideas and prejudices of the uneducated.

On November 10, 1891, he selected a bride in the person of Abbie M., daughter of T. W. and Mary Scott Kemp, a resident of Ironton, Ohio. Mrs. Warne's mother's maiden name was Mary E. Scott, a daughter of the late Alexander Scott, one of the old Williamsporters and settlers of Washington county, Penn. Her father, T. W. Kemp, is a son of the late Judge George Kemp, one of the original settlers and founders of the city of Ironton, Ohio. The Kemps are Virginians, having moved to Ohio at the beginning of this century. They are of English origin. Mrs. Abbie Kemp Warne attended the public schools of her native city, and was graduated in full honors from Kingsbury High School in June, 1886, standing at the head of her class. In 1887-90 she attended the Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, Ohio, where she was a very bright student, and she was well liked by all who learned to know her, and loved by her school companions, as she was endowed with a very sweet disposition, always happy, good and kind to those about her. Mrs. Warne left college at the end of the junior year, on account of poor health, and was not permitted to graduate with her class. She subsequently pursued a course in elocution and voice culture under the celebrated elocutionist, Dr. Fulton, and was one of his talented students in a class of one hundred. To Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Warne was born, July 11, 1892, a lovely daughter, Madeleine Warne.

At its annual commencement in June, 1892, the board of trustees and faculty of Washington and Jefferson College conferred the degree of Master of Science upon Mr. Warne. He served as city solicitor of the corporation of Monongahela City during the year 1891. He is an enthusiastic member of the Democratic party, and is a leading member of the Masonic Fraternity. He is a lineal descendant of the founder (Joseph Parkison) of Monongahela City, Penn., and is one of her most public-spirited citizens.

JOSEPH P. WARNE was born and reared in Monongahela City, and his first literary training was obtained in a subscription school kept by Widow McKeever, in a frame house near the present depot. The only text books then in use were the U. S. Speller, English Reader, and Western Calculator. At the age of fifteen years he came with his parents to the farm where he is yet living, and remained there until his marriage, February 20, 1844, with Eliza J., daughter of James Irwin. Her father was born and reared in Lancaster county, Penn., where he was married to Miss Jane Morton, and their children were Eliza, Harriet, Mary A. and William. In an early day this family moved by wagon to a farm on Mingo creek, near Monongahela City, where the father followed the trade of cooper. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Joseph P. and Eliza J. (Irwin) Warne began wedded life on the home farm, where he worked for several years in partnership with his brothers James and Hiram, but they finally separated. He is now retired from active life. He is a member of the M. E. Church, and has served as class-leader and in other prominent positions. In politics he has always voted with the Democratic party. Mrs. Warne was laid to rest August 1, 1891, leaving the following children: Hiram A. (on the home place), Theodore (married to Anna Long, and living in Greene county, Penn.), Emma J. (wife of S. B. Kernan, in Wichita, Kans.), James I., Wilbur, William and Albert (all four deceased), Ella V. (at home), Matthew S., Joseph P. (married to Louisa Hayes, and living in Sedgwick, Kans.), and Francis M. (married to Alberta Staib, and living in Greene county, Penn.).

MATTHEW S. WARNE was born December 16, 1859, on the home farm near Monongahela City. He received his education at the public schools, and was one of the first graduates from same; later he attended Allegheny College at Meadville, Penn. In early manhood he opened a hardware store in Monongahela City, afterward moving to Wichita, Kans., where he continued in the same business. In 1891 he returned to Monongahela City, and has since resided on the home place. On November 25, 1884, he was married to Mattie, daughter of Lewis Staib, of Monongahela City, and she has borne him three children, viz.: Lewis, Edith and Blanche. Mr. Warne is a member of the Democratic party.

general agent of ticket offices on the Pennsylvania lines, which position he held until his death, the result of an accident. In 1845 Mr. Barry entered into partnership with a Mr. Goodall, organizing the firm of Goodall & Barry, for the manufacture of pianos, etc., and they carried on an extensive business. Mr. Barry started with a boatload of pianos down the Ohio river, but was suddenly taken ill on the way, and died at Marietta, Ohio, where he was buried. The widow and family came to Wheeling, W. Va., where she was afterward married to A. D. Bedillion, a citizen of that town, and they then removed to Pittsburgh, Penn. Mr. Barry served as major in the Seminole war in Florida. In politics he was a Whig; in religion a member of the Episcopal Church.

William A. Barry was born January 8, 1844, in Beverly, near Boston, Mass., and was reared and educated in Pittsburgh, Penn., and Wheeling, W. Va. At the age of sixteen years he enlisted in the Independent Light Artillery, Battery E, known as "Knapp's Light Battery." They were sent to Point of Rocks, Md., went with Banks down the Shenandoah Valley, and were under Pope at the second battle of Bull Run, also at Cedar Mountain, Antietam, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg and at Culp's and Power's Hill. He re-enlisted in 1864, as a veteran, and served until the close of the war. His regiment joined Sherman at Northville, and they were in the fight at Lookout Mountain; then followed Sherman to the sea, participating in all the battles of that campaign. At Atlanta Mr. Barry was made orderly to Gen. John A. Reynolds, with whom he remained until the close of the struggle.

On August 30, 1870, Mr. Barry was united in marriage with Sarah M., daughter of John Reed, of West Finley township, Washington county, and the following children were born to them: John A., Hattie R., Robert B. and Mary L. After his return from the war, Mr. Barry took up his home in Dallas, W. Va., where he was postmaster for eight years. He also conducted a general store, which he finally sold, and then moved to Barnesville, where he remained one year; then returning to Dallas, he reopened his store, and remained in business two and one-half years. In 1874 he opened a store at West Alexander, this county, which he conducted eight years, and then purchased the hardware business he now owns. He has also carried on an extensive picture-enlarging business for several years, having in his youth learned painting. In politics Mr. Barry has always been a Republican, and has filled the offices of burgess, treasurer, member of the council, and school director. He has served for three terms as commander of James Noble Post, of which he was the originator and organizer. In religious faith he is an active worker in the Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM A. BARRY, a leading merchant of West Alexander, is a son of Jacob A. Barry, who was born in Beverly, Mass., near Boston, where he passed his youth.

Jacob A. Barry received a superior literary and musical education in Boston, and then came to Pennsylvania, where he accepted a position in the female seminary at Kittanning. He there met and was soon after married to Harriet Newton, of Westmoreland county, Penn., and the young couple made a home in Columbus, Ohio, where he was engaged in teaching music. The children born to their union were: Josephine A. (deceased), William A., George A. (U. S. land register at Eau Claire, Wis.), and Mary E. S. (deceased in youth). Of this family, Josephine A. was married to W. W. Young, who then engaged in the lumber business at Philadelphia, and was afterward appointed

PARKER S. JOHNSON was born March 9, 1840, in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn. He is a son of Thomas Johnson, who was born in October, 1807, in Maryland, where he grew to manhood, and was captain of a steamboat on the Monongahela river for several years. When a young man Thomas Johnson was married to Nancy Scott, a native of Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., and she bore him three children, viz.: John, a car inspector for the Chartiers Railroad Co., living in Pittsburgh, Penn.; Barnett, a resident of Kansas City, Mo., and Parker S., whose sketch follows. The mother died in 1841, and in 1851 Thomas Johnson was married, for his second wife, to Dorcas Frew, a native of West Pike Run township, and daughter of Alexander Frew, a pioneer settler of Washington county. She died in 1855, and Mr. Johnson was then married to Mary Crow, a native of Allen township, this county, and daughter of Jacob and Ann Crow. To this union was born one son, William, now in the grocery business at California, Penn. The father was a member of the Republican party, and served for several years as constable of West Pike Run township, but devoted his principal attention to personal matters. He died September 19, 1885, at California Penn., where Mrs. Johnson is yet residing.

Parker S. Johnson, son of Thomas and Nancy (Scott) Johnson, attended the public schools, and passed his youth on the home place, where he was born. On September 26, 1860, he was united in marriage with Ruth A. Cooper, who was born August 31, 1842, in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn. She is a daughter of Lemuel and Sarah (Krepps) Cooper; her mother was a native of Maryland, and when a small child came with her parents to Pennsylvania. Lemuel Cooper was a native of Washington county, born February 1, 1797, near Amity. He learned the fuller's trade and conducted a woolen mill on West Pike Run creek, afterward devoting his attention to agriculture. He died in 1882; Mrs. Cooper passed away in 1868. Lemuel Cooper was twice married, first time on September 21, 1820, to Mary Morton, by whom he had eight children. This wife died in 1840, and in 1841 Mr. Cooper married Sarah Krepps, to which union there were born four children, of whom only Ruth A., is now living.

Parker S. and Ruth A. (Cooper) Johnson reside on a farm of 102 fertile acres, to which his principal attention is given. He is identified with all progressive movements in his locality, and votes with the Prohibition party. He and his wife are members of the M. E. Church. One daughter has been born to their union, namely: Sarah S., wife of Columbus I. Long, a carpenter and farmer of Morgantown, West Virginia.

HENRY SPHAR. The Sphar family have been identified with the history of Washington county for many years. Mattern Sphar was born in Switzerland, and, in company with two brothers and one sister, immigrated to America at the age of seventeen years, about the year 1760. He first settled in Williamsburg, Va., and on April 21, 1767, took the oath of allegiance under King George. He was there married to Margaret Shively, and in 1780 came to Washington county, Penn., and purchased of one Col. Cooke 200 acres, on the Monongahela river, in what is now Washington county. He took an active part in the Whiskey Insurrection, and was a soldier in the war of 1812. He died about 1822, leaving three children, namely: John, Mattern (who moved to Adams county, Ohio, thence to Indiana), and Henry (who lived in this county).

John Sphar was born in 1777, in Loudoun county, Va., and when but three years of age came with his parents to Washington county, Penn., where he received a subscription school education in Allen township. When a young man he was married to Susanna Redd, a native of Washington county, Penn., and they settled on a farm in Allen township, and reared the following children: Mary, wife of John Shively, of Guernsey county, Ohio; Jacob, first married to Susan Wood, who died, and he was then married to Charlotte Wilson; Elizabeth, wife of Joseph Dunlevy; Daniel, married to Mary Speer, and lived in Kentucky; Ann, wife of William Spah, of Indiana; Barbara, wife of William Hollingshead; Mattern, married to Margaret Coyle, of Ohio; Sarah, widow of Joseph Bezell, of Allen township; Rachel, married to Robert Gailey, of Clarion county, Penn.; John, married to Lucy Ann Scott, and Henry, whose name opens this sketch. Of this family three are yet living, viz.: Sarah, John and Henry. The father voted with the Whig and Republican parties, and served as supervisor of the township. He and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. He died in 1856, having been preceded by the wife and mother in 1852.

Henry Sphar was born in 1820, on the old homestead in Allen township, Washington county, and was the youngest child in his father's family. He attended the log cabin school of the period, furnished with puncheon floor, slab seats, and other meager articles. On November 5, 1843, he was united in marriage with Margaret, daughter of William and Ruth (Jackman) Gregg, early pioneers of Washington county. Mrs. Sphar died May 28, 1844, leaving one son, William G., who is married to Ruth Gregg, and is living in Allen township; he has three children: Annie Bertha, George Henry, and Maggie Pearl. On June 15, 1847, Mr. Sphar married, for his second wife, Mary Jackman, a native of East Pike Run township, and daughter of Dixon and Elizabeth (Phillips) Jackman. Mr. and Mrs. Sphar are living on a farm in Allen township containing 100 acres of land, and he makes a specialty of raising fine Spanish Merino sheep, also keeping a good grade of cattle. In political opinion he is a Republican, and is a member of the school board. He and his wife are active workers in the Methodist Episcopal Church at Mount Tabor.

GEORGE McCULLOUGH TENAN. A record of the substantial and intelligent citizens of Washington county would be most incomplete were the names of this representative family not included. They were among the large number of pioneers who emigrated from Ireland during the past century.

James Tenan was born in 1758, in County Londonderry, Ireland, of Scotch Irish parents. Soon after the close of the Revolutionary war, the young man crossed the ocean to America, locating in the State of Pennsylvania. He was married near the town of Octoraro, Lancaster county, to Jane Brown, and there they remained until 1785, when they purchased and settled upon a small tract of land in Smith township, Washington county. Here children were born to them, and reared as follows: John, Robert, James, William, Mary and Moses. Mr. Tenan (who then spelled his name Tynan) in politics affiliated with the Democratic party, and in religion was an early member of the Associate Church. He died in 1840, having been preceded by his wife in 1836.

James Tenan was born in 1796, in Smith township, this county, and received his education in the subscription schools of the home neighborhood. In 1829 he was united in marriage with Margaret McCullough, daughter of George and Agnes McCullough. The McCulloughs came from Little Britain township, Lancaster Co., Penn., to Washington county, Penn., about 1786, making a settlement in Smith township, two miles north of Burgettstown. He was one of the original proprietors of the land, having been the one to get out a patent for same. George McCullough was a farmer, and died in 1811, in a very old age, on the farm in Smith township where he had located, having been preceded to the grave by his wife. She was the mother of the following children: Christiana, who married James Wilson, and died at the age of ninety-eight years, in Mahoning county, Ohio; Elizabeth, who married Thomas McCullough, and died in Ohio; Jane, married to James McNall, and died in Findley township, Allegheny Co., Penn., at the age of ninety-eight; Mary, who married James Brown, and died in Allegheny county when ninety-six years of age;

Susan, who died unmarried, aged ninety-six years; Margaret, who married James Tenan, and one who died in infancy. George McCullough was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Florence. The old McCullough homestead is now in the possession of the Tenan brothers, they having inherited it. George McCullough had a brother who served in the Revolutionary war.

James and Margaret (McCullough) Tenan passed their married life on the home place in Smith township, and to their union two sons were born, viz.: George McCullough and James Brown. Mr. Tenan was liberal in his political views, and voted with the Jacksonian Democrats. In religious faith he was a member and liberal supporter of the Associate Church at Burgettstown until his death, which occurred April 1, 1859.

George McCullough Tenan, who has been a life-long farmer, was born December 2, 1830, in Smith township, this county, and passed his boyhood in attending the common schools of the vicinity. On February 24, 1863, he was united in marriage with Martha L., daughter of Deacon Whittaker, who was born on the farm where Mr. Tenan is now living, and was married to Jane Moore; their children were Martha L., Elizabeth (wife of J. B. Cunningham), Mary, Samuel and Jane, all now deceased. In politics Mr. Whittaker was formerly a Whig, but in 1850 he became a Democrat. In religion he was first a Methodist, then united with the Presbyterian Church.

After their marriage George and Martha I. Tenan located in Smith township, this county, then resided in Pittsburgh two years, and from there came to the home farm of Mrs. Tenan. Here Mrs. Tenan died May 11, 1891, aged fifty-four years twelve days, and is buried in the U. P. cemetery at Burgettstown. They had two children: Jennie L. (wife of Oliver Perrine, of Mingo Junction) and Effie S. Politically George M. Tenan was a Democrat, but in 1863 became a worker in the ranks of the Republican party, and he has served in various township offices, though desiring no political preferment. In 1876 he was elected justice of the peace, and in 1892 commenced a fourth term of five years. He is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown, this county.

ADAH WINNET is descended from English ancestors, his grandfather, William Winnett, having been born in Liverpool, England. He was kidnapped in early boyhood, and carried to the American colonies, where he was bound out until twenty-one years of age. On arriving at mature age he came to Washington county, Penn., where he was married to Sally, daughter of John Strange. Both father and daughter were natives of England, and early settlers of Wilmington, Del. Mr. Winnett took a patent for a tract of land in Washington county, Penn., and made a home in what is now Fallowfield township.

William Winnett was born in September, 1761, on the home farm in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn. When a young man he was married to Rachel Young, who was born in 1766, in Washington county, a daughter of Lot Young, a pioneer farmer of Washington county. William Winnett was a cooper and farmer, and at one time owned 1,000 acres of land, but afterward suffered severe financial reverses. He and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. He died in 1861, followed by his wife in 1866, both becoming centenarians. The children of this hardy couple were born as follows: John (who died in 1886, in Guernsey county, Ohio), Benjamin (a blacksmith, who died in Guernsey county, Ohio), William (drowned in Brush creek about 1830), Nathan (a blacksmith, who died in 1884, in Illinois), Thomas (a cooper by trade, moved West and died August 15, 1891, in Walla Walla, State of Washington), Lot (deceased in November, 1890, in Fallowfield township), Laban (deceased in March, 1889), Sally (wife of James Smiley), Polly (unmarried, deceased in 1888), Naomi (deceased wife of William Ward, of Guernsey county, Ohio), Rhoda (deceased wife of Noah Hardrock), and Adah.

Adah Winnett, youngest child of William and Rachel Winnett, was born in 1824, on the old place in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., and has always resided on the homestead. In 1849 he was united in marriage with Ellen Williams, a native of East Pike Run township, this county; her mother (Ruth Williams) was born in Maine, and settled in East Pike Run township many years ago, where she died in her eighty-fifth year. The home farm, which has been in the possession of the Winnett family for one hundred and fifty years, contains seventy-three acres of well-cultivated land. Adah Winnett is an ardent member of the Republican party, and in religious faith he and his wife are connected with the Ebenezer M. E. Church. The following children have been born to their union: Rachel, born March 24, 1850, died December 23, 1855; William, living in East Pike Run township, born March 29, 1851; Samuel, born February 7, 1854, living in Allen township; Milton A., born June 8, 1856, living in East Pike Run township; Henry T., born June 8, 1858, living in Greene county, Penn.; Benjamin C., born October 6, 1860; John J., born October 31, 1862, died in infancy; Addison M., born September 1, 1864, living on the homestead; Titus F., born May 14, 1869, died in his eighteenth year, and Mary R., born May 11, 1871, who was married April 27, 1891, to John H. Winnett, of Washington county, Pennsylvania.

S B. RICHARDSON is a prosperous agriculturist, enterprising citizen and patriotic ex-soldier of Fallowfield township.

Richard Richardson, father of subject, was born in 1810, in Washington county, Penn., and was a lifelong tiller of the soil. But in times of peace are soldiers trained for future service, and in that simple rural life his children gained the physical and mental power so especially necessary to success on the field of battle, whether the warfare be amid scenes of common every-day worldly strife, or in bloody carnage for "God and home and native land." Richard Richardson was united in marriage with Eliza Niblake, a native of this county, and she bore him the following children: Olive J., Josephine, Melvina, William M., S. B., Hannah, and Elvora (the last named being deceased). Mr. Richardson owns 300 acres of prime land. He is one of the most useful men in his community, and has filled various local offices.

S. B. Richardson was born in 1845, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn. In 1864 he enlisted in Company A, Twenty-second Volunteer Cavalry (Ringgold Battalion), and served until the close of the war. He participated in all the engagements of his division, and at the battle of Cedar Creek was wounded in the left leg. After the war he returned to Washington county, and for two years was engaged in the hotel business at Coal Centre, then worked two years in a steam tannery, afterward engaging in mercantile life for one year. In 1886 he was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Bigler, a native of this county, and she has borne him one daughter, Adair. Mr. Richardson has served his township in many ways; in 1890 he was appointed to take the census, and at present he is assessor and constable of Fallowfield township. Mr. and Mrs. Richardson reside on a pleasant farm lying one mile from Bentleyville, and eight miles south of Monongahela.

H IRAM WARNE, one of the representative self-made prosperous agriculturists of Franklin township, is descended from a stalwart family who came from eastern Pennsylvania, settling in Allegheny county, same State, at an early day.

Maj. James Warne, father of Hiram, was born in Allegheny county, and when yet a young man moved to Washington county, locating in Monongahela City, then called "Parkison's Ferry" (years before Joseph Parkison had laid out part of the town and named it "William's Port"), where he was married to Mary, daughter of Joseph and Margaret Parkison. Here he was engaged in various pursuits, being connected among other industries with ship building, glass-blowing and in general merchandising, in all of which he was eminently successful. Some time in 1825 or 1826 he retired from business, and moved onto a farm near town, where he died in 1856, and his wife in 1865. The children born to them are as follows: Amuzette, Margaret, Joseph P. and James (both in Washington county), David, Mary and Susan (all three deceased), and Hiram and Eliza J. (the latter living in Missouri). Major Warne was a loyal Democrat of the Jeffersonian stamp, and was a fearless as well as an able exponent of the party. From his youth he had been connected for many years with the Presbyterian Church, but in advanced life he united with the Methodist Episcopal Society.

Hiram Warne was born February 16, 1822, in what is now Monongahela City, Washington Co., Penn., and was a small boy when the family moved into the country. His education was more of a business than a literary nature, and the success he has made in life is due entirely to his own natural abilities, brought into active play by indomitable energy and perseverance. On December 2, 1856, he was married to Elizabeth, daughter of James and Rebecca (Devore) Nichols, of Allegheny county, Penn., the latter of whom was a daughter of Moses Devore, of the same county. Mr. and Mrs. Nichols were parents of the following named children: Mary, Lucinda, Samuel, William, Catherine, David, Harvey, Sarah, James, Nancy, Rebecca, Elizabeth and Martha J. Politically Mr. Nichols was a Whig, and in religion a Presbyterian. After marriage our subject and his wife located on a farm in Somerset township, thence moved to Nottingham township, and finally came to their present pleasant home. Their union has been blessed with the following named children: James C., Florence, William W., Allen C., Boyd E., Howard F. and Mary Etta May. Mr. and Mrs. Warne and daughters are all members of the Third Presbyterian Church of Washington, in which he is an elder, and he assisted in the building of the Second and Third Presbyterian Churches. In his political connections Mr. Warne was a Democrat until 1860, when he united with the Republican party, of which he has since been a consistent member.

THE CLELAND FAMILY were natives of Ireland, the first of whom to immigrate to America was one William Cleland, a native of County Down, Ireland, where he had married Elizabeth Cleland (it is not known whether she was a relative or not) and was a farmer. In 1820 the family—then consisting of the parents and three children, John, Robert and Sarah Jane—sailed for America. After a stormy passage of sixteen weeks they landed at Baltimore, Md., when sickness entered the family; strangers in a strange land, with no friends, and their little hard-earned savings spent, their condition was most pitiable, but with undaunted courage the father persevered, resolved that his wife or little ones should never suffer, so long as God gave him strength to provide, and after some search obtained employment as a watchman on a vessel. Fortune soon began to smile on the brave pioneers, the sick recovered, and the cloud of darkness rose from their sight. As soon as sufficient capital was saved, the family started on the long journey to Brooke county, W. Va. On arriving at Pittsburgh, Penn., a pause was made, employment secured and the financial exchequer replenished. They then proceeded on their way, and made a location in Brooke county, W. Va., where they remained but a short time, afterward removing to Washington county, and settling in the southern part of Hanover township, this county, near Hanlin Station, where the parents died, having passed their lives in instilling principles of enterprise and progression into the minds of their children, which aided them to succeed in later years. Of the children, Sarah Jane was married to James Hindman; Robert was a farmer, and lived to see his seventieth birthday, and John.

John Cleland was born January 6, 1806, in Ireland, and was but a lad of fourteen years when he came to America. His education was limited, as he had a great deal of hard work to do, and was thus deprived of an opportunity for extensive learning. He learned the trade of a stone mason, following that business for some time. In about 1837 he was married to Rebecca Hindman, who bore him the following children: A son, deceased in infancy; William; Samuel, who died in West Virginia; Elizabeth, married to Robert Cleland; Catherine, Mrs. Edward Hindman; Robert; and Rebecca, Mrs. J. J. Andrews, of Hanover township. In 1851 the mother of this family died, and was buried in Warsaw, Coshocton Co., Ohio. Mr. Cleland afterward made a second choice in the person of Susanna (Scott) White, widow of Moses White. After his marriage John Cleland resided in Hanover township, this county, thence moving, about 1846, to Coshocton county, Ohio, where he cleared up a farm, which he soon sold at a good profit and then took another from which he also realized a handsome profit. After disposing of these farms, he returned to Washington county, locating in Hanover township about one and one-fourth miles northeast of Florence, and there passed his remaining days. Year by year new additions were made to his lands, and he owned nearly 500 acres at the time of his death, which occurred December 19, 1876. His life was a practical demonstration of the old axiom, "Where there is a will, there is always a way." Mr. Cleland was a very successful man, and the fact could only be attributed to his own exertions. In politics he was a lifelong Democrat, taking an interest in the success of his party.

WILLIAM CLELAND was born December 20, 1839, in Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn., where his life has been passed. He attended the common schools, and received his first knowledge of agricultural duties on the farm of his father. On January 25, 1870, he was married to Ella McConnell, who was born February 17, 1841, a daughter of John and Sarah (Morrison) McConnell, of Hanover township, this county. Mr. and Mrs. Cleland passed their first years of married life in Hanover township, on a part of the old homestead, where he resided till 1891, engaged in general farming and stock raising. He then moved to Florence, this county, where he yet resides, having rented a farm. In politics he is a Democrat. Two children were born to William and Ella Cleland: a son, who died in infancy, and Sarah M., born November 19, 1881, who died March 25, 1892, her loss being mourned with double sorrow by the bereaved and childless parents.

ROBERT CLELAND was born in December, 1847, in Coshocton county, Ohio, where his parents were living at that time. His mother died when he was but a child of four years, and he was brought to Washington county, Penn., where he lived with his uncle until the return of his father to Washington county, in 1856. He was reared to farm work, and attended the common schools. On March 10, 1870, he was united in marriage with Ida Livingston, who was born in 1848, in Hanover township, a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Bunce) Livingston. The children of Robert and Ida Cleland are as follows: Rebecca, William L. (deceased), Mary E., Susan R., John H., Robert D., La Bida E. and Harry E. He is a systematic farmer and a leader in the business community. In politics he is a Democrat, and has been called upon to fill several offices in his township. Both he and his wife are members of the Cross Roads Presbyterian Church.

GEORGE W. CONN, a retired merchant and farmer of Florence, Penn., is descended from natives of the Emerald Isle. Thomas Conn, his grandfather, was born in Ireland and was a shoemaker by trade. About 1800 he and his family came to America, first locating in Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn., about two and a half miles east of Florence. He followed his trade and, as was then the custom of shoemakers, went from one house to another, and while there usually made enough shoes to last the whole family a season. They were the parents of the following children, some of whom were born in Ireland: Jane, Sarah, Maria, Rebecca, Elizabeth, William, Thomas, James, Isaac and Francis. The parents afterward located near Port Washington, on Buck Horn Waters, in Tuscarawas county; Ohio.

James Conn was born about 1799, and his literary advantages were limited to about thirty or forty days of schooling altogether. In later years he managed to acquire a good practical education, which, combined with good common sense, laid the foundation for a successful life. He learned the mason's and bricklayer's trades, which he followed for many years. About 1830 he was married to Mrs. Eleanor (Brown) Miller (who was born in 1880), widow of Hugh Miller, and the daughter of Andrew Brown, a native of Scotland. At the time of her second marriage Mrs. Miller had one child, Elizabeth (now living in Beaver county, Penn.). To the union of James and Eleanor (Miller) Conn were born the following children: Nancy (widow of Joseph Anderson, living in Beaver county, Penn.), George W. (our subject), Sarah (deceased wife of Tallinau Hooker, of Hancock county, W. Va.), James (a bricklayer, living in Kansas City), Ann (who was first married to William Finnegan, then to Isaac Evans; she died in Salineville, Ohio), Maria (Mrs. Phillips, of Allegheny county), Andrew B. (residing in Noblestown, Allegheny Co., Penn.), Ella (Mrs. John Woodrow, of McDonald, Penn.), Maggie (deceased wife of Daniel Greer), Pierce B. (deceased), Mary (married to Matthew Provines, now living in Grass Valley, Cal.) and Lorenzo D. (deceased). The parents were for some time residents of Beaver county, Penn., but passed the greater part of their lives in Hanover township, Washington county, where the father followed his trade. In politics he was a lifelong Democrat. He and his wife were both members of the M. E. Church. He died in 1878 in Beaver county, Penn., and on May 8, same year, his wife passed away.

George W. Conn was born September 14, 1823, in Beaver county, Penn. His early life was spent on the farm, and, being an apt scholar, he obtained a good education from the meager advantages then offered. He learned and followed the trades of mason and bricklayer for about fifteen years. On August 31, 1848, he was married to Mary Anderson, who was born in 1826, a daughter of John and Margaret (Kryder) Anderson. Mr. and Mrs. Conn have no children of their own, but have reared from infancy one who received parental care, Flora Anderson (deceased wife of Rev. A. F. Alexander). In 1861 Mr. Conn entered mercantile life in Florence, this county, and being an excellent judge of his class of goods did an extensive and profitable trade, which continued to increase until he owned the most extensive business of the kind in Florence. He made semi-annual trips to the East, there making his purchases, and in 1875 disposed of his merchandise at a good profit. He then gave his attention to his farm, which was situated east of Florence, but continued to reside in town, having tenants on the farm. His health failing in 1880, he has since virtually lived a retired life, although yet instructing in the management of the farm. In politics he is a Democrat. He has ever been active and energetic, and beginning life with no capital, has amassed a comfortable property, and is now a representative citizen of Florence.

JAMES THOMAS. This enterprising and well-known gentleman is one of the leading agriculturists and most extensive stock raisers of Nottingham township, and a son of James Thomas.

James Thomas, the father, was born December 13, 1771, in Sussex county, Del., and during early life followed distilling, afterward becoming a farmer. When a young man he was married to Lydia Haines, who was born in 1779, in Lancaster county, Penn., and twelve children were born to them, of whom are yet living: Elizabeth (Mrs. Teeple, of Pennsylvania), Catherine (Mrs. Ferguson, residing in Ohio), Mrs. Lavina T. Hair (of Chicago), Samuel and James (both living in Nottingham township), and Uriah, a resident of Ohio. The father died in this county in 1860; the mother was called over the river in 1859.

James Thomas was born in 1818 in Nottingham township, Washington Co., Penn., receiving his education in the district schools of the home place. After attaining his majority, he and a brother began life for themselves as stock farmers, keeping "bachelor's hall" for two or three years. On December 14, 1852, he was united in marriage with Eliza Kinkey, a native of this county, and daughter of George Kinkey, who was born in 1806, in this county, and in early life followed carpentry, afterward devoting his time to farming. He was captain in the militia for a number of years; he died in 1873.

To the union of James and Eliza (Kinkey) Thomas fourteen children have been born, seven of whom are yet living, namely: Josiah, James B., John (all three married), Anna (Mrs. Best), David, Franklin and Lucinda (at home). On the old farm where his parents lived and died is the beautiful home of Mr. Thomas. The place contains 300 acres of fertile land, all of which is cultivated to the highest degree by this progressive agriculturist. He also owns three other farms, one located in Ohio county, W. Va., and all four are under the direct supervision of the owner. An oil well is in preparation on one of these farms. Mr. Thomas makes a specialty of sheep raising, also breeding fine horses. The total value of his property is about $32,000. Politically, he is a firm believer in the principles embodied in the platform of the Democratic party.

BOYD A. EMERY, M. D., a very successful and well known physician of Somerset township, this county, is a native of the same, born on the home farm November 16, 1851. His father, Joshua Emery, was born September 27, 1805, in Washington county, Penn. He commenced reading medicine under Dr. Leatherman, of Canonsburg, Penn., and graduated in 1830. On September 20, 1831, was united in marriage with Mary McCullough, who bore him three children, all deceased. His first wife died December 31, 1839, and on May 4, 1841, Dr. Emery was married to Anna Graham, of Washington county, Penn. They had seven children, namely: Ebenezer G., Martha G. (married to W. S. Caner, a resident of Chicago, Ill.), James A. (living in Dunningville, Washington Co., Penn.), Boyd A. (whose name opens this sketch), William H. (a farmer of Somerset township), Anna W. (wife of J. H. McNary), and one deceased. Dr. Emery settled permanently in Washington county after his marriage. He was an active worker and elder in the Presbyterian Church for a number of years. His wife died September 28, 1873, and September 7, 1885, he too passed away.

Boyd A. Emery received a common-school education, and then attended Canonsburg Academy for four years. In 1875 he graduated from Washington and Jefferson College, then studied medicine with his father, graduating as an M. D. in 1878. On November 27, 1883, he was united in marriage with Katie W. Townsend, who was born December 15, 1859, daughter of C. W. and Margaret (Wright) Townsend, the father being a physician of Washington county. After his marriage Dr. Emery practiced medicine with his father until the death of the latter, and he now enjoys an extensive and lucrative practice. Two children have brightened the home of Dr. and Mrs. Emery: Charles T., born October 5, 1884, and an unnamed infant (deceased), born July 29, 1889. The Doctor and his wife are both members of the Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek.

W. H. PHILLIPS, M. D. This well-known physician represents an old and prominent family of Washington county. He is a grandson of Solomon Phillips, who came to this country many years ago, and locating on a farm in East Pike Run township, carried on agriculture and stock raising. He was married to Martha Nicolls. In politics he voted with the Whig party, and in religious faith he was a member of the Society of Friends. He died on the farm in East Pike Run township, leaving children, of whom James is the only one mentioned.

James Phillips was born and reared on the home place in East Pike Run township, this county, where he attended the subscription schools, the Bible being his only text-book. He was united in marriage with Edith, daughter of John and Mary Dixon, the former of whom was born in New Jersey, and when fourteen years old came on foot to the western part of Fayette county, Penn., there passing the remainder of his life. He followed farming and stock raising, becoming a wealthy agriculturist. In politics he was a Tory, in religious faith a member of the Society of Friends, attending their meetings at Brownsville twice a week. James and Edith (Dixon) Phillips resided on a farm in East Pike Run township for some years after their marriage, when he built the dwelling now occupied by his son, W. H., who is the only one now living of eight children born to this couple. Mr. Phillips was an energetic agriculturist, in politics an active member of the Whig party, and in religious faith an adherent of the Hicksite Quaker Church. He died in 1884.

Dr. W. H. Phillips was born February 12, 1838, in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn. He attended the Johnson Academy, at California, this county, afterward taking a three-and-one-half years course at Washington and Jefferson College. He then began the study of medicine with Dr. Hunter, at Coal Centre, this county, and attended the University of Pennsylvania three terms, when he graduated. In 1869 Dr. Phillips began the practice of his chosen profession at Coal Centre, remaining there two years, and finally came to his present home in California. Here he was married, on June 21, 1873, to Hattie N., daughter of Edward Riggs, of that place. Dr. Phillips is a staunch Democrat, and in religious faith a member of the Disciple Church.

JAMES M. HERVEY, a well-known citizen of the county, is a son of Francis Hervey, who was born in Cecil county, Md. William Hervey, father of Francis, emigrated from Campbelltown, Scotland, to Maryland, where he died. His children were: Francis, Andrew, Benjamin, Mary, Eliza, Rachel and Esther. He was a member of the Seceder Church.

Francis Hervey spent his youth in Maryland, where he enjoyed exceptional educational advantages. In 1804 he removed to Washington county, Penn., and in 1806 was married to Miss Jane Wherry, daughter of Joseph and Rachel Wherry. Soon after his marriage he located in Trumbull county, Ohio, and remained there till 1817, when he returned to Pennsylvania, and made his home in Canton township, this county, where he lived until his death, which occurred in 1854. His family were: Joseph W., Rachel, Mary M., Elizabeth, James M., Ebenezer W., Jane A. and William. Mr. Hervey was an active member of the Democratic party, and with his family was a member of the Presbyterian Church. His wife died in 1863, and their remains are interred in the cemetery at Washington.

James M. Hervey, the subject of our present sketch, was born November 6, 1816, in Trumbull county, Ohio, but when an infant was brought to Canton township, Washington Co., Penn., and there passed his early life. His education, being received at the common schools, was necessarily limited. On November 6, 1846, he was united in marriage with Nancy, daughter of John and Nancy Morgan. The young people began their married life in Chartiers township, and remained there till 1853, when they removed to their present home in Mt. Pleasant township. They have three children: John M., Meletta and Joseph W. Politically Mr. Hervey is a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church. He is known as an upright citizen, one who has made a success of life by his own industrious efforts, and is intelligent and well informed.

JC. McCLELLAND. This gentleman is a worthy representative of the Scottish patriots whose blood flows in his veins. Many years ago, during the rebellion in Scotland, one William McClelland left his native heath, and made a new home in the North of Ireland, where his life was passed in agricultural pursuits. Three children were there born to him as follows: Hans, James and William.

Hans McClelland was born in 1756, and when a young man emigrated to America, locating on a farm about two and a half miles from Canonsburg, in Washington county, Penn., where he became engaged in distilling and general farming. He was married to Catherine Carson, a native of Ireland, who bore him the following children: William, James, Ebenezer, John, Ann, Nancy and Sarah, all of whom lived to be over fifty years of age. The father died in 1818; he was a member of Miller's Run Presbyterian Church, and in politics was a Democrat.

Ebenezer McClelland was born September 16, 1792, in Cecil township, Washington county, Penn. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, and became one of the most extensive wool buyers in Washington and neighboring counties, his annual purchase of wool sometimes amounting to as much as 1,300,000 pounds. He was also one of the most extensive breeders of fine-wool sheep in Washington county, having been one of the first to introduce the Merino. In 1823 he was married to Esther, daughter of John Campbell, of Cecil township, this county, a native of Scotland, who came to Washington county in pioneer times; he was often obliged to flee from the Indians, and his father was killed May 26, 1782, at "Crawford's defeat." To the union of Ebenezer and Esther (Campbell) McClelland children were born as follows: J. C., Sarah J. (Mrs. A. G. McPherson), Thomas J., William, Ebenezer, James and Catherine, of whom three are yet living: James, Ebenezer and J. C. The father of this family was emphatically a self-made man; politically he was a Democrat, and in religious faith he was a member of the Union Church.

J. C. McClelland was born August 11, 1824, in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn., and when eight years of age came with his parents to North Strabane township. He attended Jefferson College, and being the eldest son, became his father's principal assistant in business. On May 23, 1858, he was united in marriage with Caroline, daughter of Jacob Probasco, a leading stockman of Muskingum county, Ohio, and the young people settled near Cambridge, that State, where Mrs. McClelland died February 22, 1878, leaving the following children: Ebenezer, William, James, and Campbellena (wife of Joseph Kerr, a prominent business man of Union township, this county); there was also one that died in infancy. Of this family all are yet living at home save William, who is chief engineer of the Homestead Iron Works, Penn. After the death of his wife, Mr. McClelland moved with his family to their present home in Peters township, Washington county. He does an extensive business in general farming, and keeps a fine grade of stock. The place contains 160 acres of the finest land, underlaid with a rich vein of coal. Politically he affiliates with the Democratic party, of which he is a valued member, and in religious faith he supports the Presbyterian Church.

THE PARKISON FAMILY. A complete history of this representative, influential and numerous family would necessarily include a comprehensive outline of the settlement and growth of Monongahela and the adjoining country. Many years ago they located near Parkison's Ferry, which was thus called in honor of the earliest pioneer of that name. As a race the Parkisons have been men of energetic, sanguine temperament, possessing mechanical propensities, which have led them to choose manufacturing pursuits in preference to other branches of trade. The earliest pioneers of this illustrious family were of English birth, and came with Lord Baltimore to America, first settling in Maryland, where they became members of the historic "Conococheague" settlement. Between the years 1768 and 1770 five Parkison brothers—Joseph, Benjamin, Thomas, James and William—came from Virginia to the Monongahela Valley in Washington county, Penn. Many old letters, papers and memoranda, which were written in those days, are yet extant, and give ample proof that those early settlers possessed educational advantages and culture far surpassing the usual curriculum of the time. These documents are composed of coarse paper, but have been inscribed with the old-fashioned quill pen, some of the work being beautifully executed and tastefully designed. The Parkison brothers came to Pennsylvania in search of a valuable mill site, which was then the primary object of nearly all the earliest pioneers in that region. Mills were then being erected at all points along the river, and also on some of the smaller streams, which afforded more water power at that date than in the present day. The Parkisons were among the first to erect a river mill, at that time an undertaking of great magnitude, on account of the necessary expense. This fact, combined with the constant danger of their destruction by ice or floods, deterred many from investing their time and capital in so hazardous an enterprise. But if the mills were once completed with reasonable safety from destruction, they were a veritable mine of wealth to the fortunate owner. The brothers before mentioned devoted their energies almost without exception to manufacturing industries, and among the commodities then produced are named whisky, woolen goods, flour, furniture, guns, timber, boats, glass, and paper.

Benjamin Parkison (a nephew of the Benjamin Parkison above mentioned, who was an active participant in the Whiskey Insurrection) was born in 1720, near Carlisle, Penn. He erected the river mills opposite Mingo, the location of which there is nothing yet remaining to indicate, although pilots on the steamer point daily with the course of the boats the "old chutes," which are now submerged by slack water, but yet afford the deepest channel. These dams were constructed with a long cribbing of logs filled in with stone, extending up stream on both sides of an opening in the dam, through which keels of flatboats could pass up or down. This was the "chute," and "running the chute" is an expression yet used on the river, though one looks in vain to see any break in the current. The dam itself was not more than three feet in height, and the power was obtained by placing an underchute or breast-wheel of about thirty inches in diameter immediately below the comb of the dam in such a position that the current striking it on the upper side, passed under it. These wheels were sometimes twenty-eight feet or more in length, and so great was the power obtained that no machinery attached ever stopped their movement. If it became disarranged, or choked and clogged, the trundle-shaft, ten or twelve inches in size, constructed of the strongest wood, was instantly twisted off, while the wheel continued to revolve in the current. As the smaller mills were stopped during the dry weather, the settler came from a distance of many miles to the river mills. They were often compelled to wait several days for their turn, meanwhile camping out or staying with the hospitable mill owner. Night and day, week in and week out, was heard the incessant clatter of the mill, and the swash of the wheel constantly mingled with the movement of the hurrying stream. Stories of wild animals, Indians, or the ghostly banshee furnished an unfailling supply of material for the many blood-curdling tales with which the men were wont to beguile their waiting hours. Thrice was the old Parkison mill torn from its foundations by ice gorges in the river, only to be rebuilt. Finally a boat load of salt was wrecked on the dam, and an interminable lawsuit followed, which was many times more expensive than the original value of the salt. This affair so impoverished the owner that when the ice again destroyed the mill it was never rebuilt, and thus this historical landmark faded forever. Several years later the old Parkison homestead, a large brick house of fourteen rooms, was burned, and many valuable relics and papers were then destroyed. Among the former were the remains of an English pipe-organ, and through the scattered reeds the wind drew weird music, so that those who heard the eerie strains declared the place to be haunted.

Benjamin Parkison was married in 1796 to Olivia Rodgers, daughter of James Rodgers, who emigrated from the North of Ireland, and in 1786 located in Washington county, Penn. The parents died soon after their arrival, leaving a family of seven children, of whom are named: Moses, Andrew, Ebenezer and Olivia. Benjamin Parkison is described as a proud, stately man, very fond of personal adornment. Every morning his hair was powdered, and on special occasions silver buckles were worn; and when he rode, his horse was elegantly caparisoned, with mane and tail braided, as was then the style. Mrs. Parkison was no less remarkable for her love of display, and they were known as an unusually handsome and distinguished looking couple. He was accustomed to make annual trips with flour to New Orleans and the French settlements in Louisiana, and the silver obtained for each barrel of flour would, it is said, sometimes cover the top of the barrel. When making these trips by flatboat he took a horse on which to ride home, a distance of 1,200 or 1,500 miles. On one occasion, while crossing a bend of the Mississippi, he was taken prisoner by Indians, but a thunderstorm so terrified his captors that he was enabled to escape the same night.

One who often visited at his house says that Mr. Parkison frequently carried a large amount of silver and gold coin from the mills in a bandanna handkerchief, and would playfully empty it into his wife's lap.

William Parkison, son of Benjamin and Olivia Parkison, was born at the homestead in Allegheny county, Penn. He grew to manhood there, commenced early following the river, and at one time he and his brother, James, owned and ran several steamboats. He finally built a sawmill and carried on boat-building, then erected a paper mill at Elkhorn, just below the old homestead. He went to Alabama soon after the war, intending to conduct a lumber business on the Tennessee river, but finding the place near Decatur, where he had contemplated locating, was already occupied, he purchased a cotton plantation. Here he remained three years, and then returned to Pennsylvania. When a young man he was united in marriage with Catherine M., daughter of Hon. James Rodgers, a representative of the Rodgers family above mentioned, who came to America in 1770. She bore him five children, viz.: A. R., Mrs. Ella J. Spriggs (of Creston, Ill.), Rosalie, Mary M., and Mrs. Olivia Kelly (deceased). For his second wife Mr. Parkison was married to Sophia Playford, of Brownsville, Penn. He was a man of untiring energy, and fearlessly undertook any enterprise with which he became favorably impressed. His wife survives him.

A. R. PARKISON, son of William and Catherine M. (Rodgers) Parkison, is the sole living male representative of his family, and the only male descendant of the early pioneers of that name near Monongahela, where he is now in business.

MORRIS R. WEIR is a member of one of the most prominent families of Franklin township, and was born January 21, 1846, on the Joseph Weir farm, near Van Buren, this county. He is a son of Joseph Weir, who was born in 1800, and reared on the old home place in Washington county. In early life he was united in marriage with Jemima Squiers, also a resident of Washington county, and to their union were born children as follows: Samuel C., William L., Elizabeth and John B. For his second wife Mr. Weir was married to Mrs. Phoebe Hanna, mother of John V. Hanna, and she bore him two children: Morris R. and Margaret (Mrs. John M. Day). Mr. Weir was a very successful farmer, and engaged extensively in sheep raising, being one of the first in his neighborhood to raise Merino sheep.

Morris R. Weir passed his boyhood on the farm, and received a common-school education, which he has improved by an extensive course of reading.

On October 24, 1872, he was married to Sarah J., daughter of James McClain. Since his marriage Mr. Weir has resided in the township several years, and has been a resident of Washington borough. In 1891 he removed to his present home, on which he is making many improvements. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Washington, and in politics he is an active worker in the Democratic party.

SAMUEL ANDREW CARTER, a representative farmer of East Finley township, is a native of Washington county, Penn., born in Amwell township, September 17, 1840. His ancestors were of English descent, his grandfather's parents having immigrated to New Jersey, where their son John was born, and lived until his marriage with Rebecca McFarland, when he moved to Amwell township, this county, and here reared a family of eleven children.

Jesse Carter was born in 1808 on the farm in Amwell township, Washington county, and passed his early years at home, receiving but sparse educational advantages. He was united in marriage with Susan Hughes, born in 1807, a daughter of James Hughes, of Amwell township, and she bore him the following children: Sarah Ann (deceased wife of Francis Day), James (engaged in the hotel business in Waynesburgh, Greene Co., Penn.), Rebecca (wife of J. W. Swart, living in Amwell township), George (a butcher in Jacktown, Greene Co., Penn.), Maggie (residing at home), Samuel A., John (a successful farmer of Greene county, Penn.), Henry (a farmer in Kansas) and Mary (who died in infancy). Mr. Carter died in 1874, followed in 1876 by his faithful wife.

Samuel Andrew Carter received a limited education at the schools of his district. He assisted his father on the farm until August, 1862, when he enlisted in Company K, Sixteenth P. V. C., at Washington, Penn., and took part in the engagements at Gettysburg, Stony Creek Station and many others, returning home at the close of the conflict. On January 31, 1867, he was united in marriage with Julia Parkinson, who was born October 3, 1844, a daughter of John Parkinson, of Morris township, Greene Co., Penn., whose ancestors were natives of New Jersey, and they have had four children, all of whom reside with their parents: Lee Anna, born January 1, 1868; Dean, born November 10, 1870; Maggie, born December 4, 1872, and John Clarence, born March 21, 1880. After his marriage Mr. Carter continued to live some time on his father's farm in Greene county, and then purchased one in Morris township, same county, upon which he lived fourteen years, and in 1883 purchased his present place, the "Old Carroll" farm in East Finley township, this county, situated three miles southeast of East Finley postoffice, and on the headwaters of Wheeling creek. Politically Mr. Carter has always been a Republican, and in religion he and his wife are members of the Valley Union M. E. Church.

JAMES M. DUVALL was born November 24, 1839, in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn. He is a grandson of Jacob and Jane (Patterson) Duvall, who were natives of Maryland and descended from Irish ancestry. They came to Washington county, Penn., many years ago, where the following children were born to them: Mary, widow of Moses Billingsley, of California, Penn.; Harriet, widow of Robert Duvall, of Illinois; Samantha, wife of Lewis J. Weaver, a farmer of East Pike Run township; Jefferson, a resident of East Pike Run township, and eight others who are now deceased. The parents died in East Pike Run township.

Alexander Duvall was born in 1810, on the home farm in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his youth under the parental roof. He was married to Jemima Hannon, who was born in 1809, and they were the parents of seven children, namely: Henry, a farmer of Fayette county, Penn.; Jacob, an agriculturist of Allen township, Washington county; James M., of whom a sketch follows; Jefferson, a farmer of East Pike Run township; Isabella, wife of Jacob Crow, now of Madison county, Iowa; Mary M., wife of Isaac W. Richards, and Julia, married to William H. Jackman, a farmer of East Pike Run township. The father of this family died in 1884, and in 1887 the mother passed away. They were members of the M. E. Church.

James M. Duvall was reared and educated on the home place, and on April 10, 1865, was united in marriage with Martha A. Crow, who was born in 1846, in Allen township, this county, daughter of Azariah and Sarah A. (Murphy) Crow, both natives of Washington county, Penn., where the father has followed farming. Mr. and Mrs. Crow have had six children, namely: Jacob, John, Martha A. (wife of James M. Duvall), Jane (married to Theodore Jackman), Benjamin, and one deceased in infancy. The father of this family is now farming in Howell county, Missouri.

To the union of James M. and Martha (Crow) Duvall have been born two children, viz.: Alva J. and Minnie M., wife of Eli Harnal, a farmer of East Pike Run township. James M. Duvall is a very progressive, energetic citizen, and is an active member of the Republican party. He has served three terms as township assessor, two as constable, and has been school director for about fourteen years. Socially he is a member of the American Master Mechanics, Lodge No. 371, at Coal Centre, Penn. The home place, a well-improved farm, is situated two miles northwest of Coal Centre.

EDWARD H. DAUGHERTY, a prominent resident of Canton township, is a son of John Daugherty, who was a native of County Derry, Ireland, and who, soon after his marriage to Martha Hayes (who was also a resident of the same county), emigrated to America, landing first at New York.

Thence he proceeded to Washington county, Penn., where he settled in Mt. Pleasant township, and began work upon a farm. Together this brave young couple toiled, sharing their burdens and blessings until they crossed the dark river and were again united. Frugal and industrious in their habits, Mr. and Mrs. Daugherty soon acquired a goodly share of this world's wealth. The children born to them were: Matilda (Mrs. James Ferguson), Edward H., Sarah (Mrs. Thomas Agnew), James, Alexander, Robert and John. Mr. Daugherty was formerly a Whig, and after the party was organized became a Republican. He was connected with church and school work for many years, and ever took an active interest in all questions pertaining to the advancement of his township.

Edward H. Daugherty was born October 22, 1822, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and passed his earlier years upon the farm. When a young man he engaged in teaming through different parts of western Pennsylvania. In December, 1849, he was united in marriage with Sarah Nesbit, a member of one of the pioneer families of Canton township, and they have had the following family of children: Mary A. (Mrs. J. L. Henderson), John H. (deceased), Martha Agnes (wife of John Welsh), Margaret Jane (deceased), Sarah Selena and Willard W. (latter deceased). Mr. Daugherty has a fine well-improved farm of 143 acres, situated in the northern part of Canton township, and equipped with comfortable, commodious buildings. His success in life has been achieved by hard work, and he is now reaping the reward of years of labor. He is a very active worker in the ranks of the Republican party, and is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Cross Roads, as is also his wife.

WILLIAM H. DICKERSON, a representative of an influential family of Franklin township, is a son of William Dickerson, whose father moved to Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., in an early day. He there located on a small farm, which was a portion of the place now owned by Mr. Dickerson. A fort was erected on his property to protect the colonists from the depredations of the savages, who surrounded the homes of the early settlers. Here in the lonely wilderness were born the children of this pioneer couple, namely: John and William. Mr. Dickerson's life was, like that of all frontiersmen, filled with toil and danger; he passed his days in tilling the virgin soil, and aided considerably in the development of the county. In politics he was a Whig.

William Dickerson was born on his father's farm in Franklin township, Washington county, where he passed his youth, learning the practical lessons of industry and economy, which were of far more value to the early settlers than a mere text-book education. When yet a young man he was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Jolly, also a resident of Franklin township, and to their union were born four children: Asa, Lydia (Mrs. Melvin Riggs), John and Sarah (Mrs. William Sturges). Mr. Dickerson married, for his second wife, Martha Clark, a native of Greene county, Penn., and to this marriage came children as follows: Jane (Mrs. William Leonard), Mary A. (Mrs. James Crosby) and William H. Mr. Dickerson was an enterprising man, and secured his property through his own efforts. Politically he was first a Whig, and upon the formation of the party became a Republican. He died in 1860 and his widow in 1890, and the remains of both are interred in the family cemetery, which is on the home farm.

William H. Dickerson was born January 5, 1840, on the home farm in Franklin township, and passed his boyhood in the usual farm duties, and in attending the neighboring schools. On October 18, 1877, he was united in marriage with Millie, daughter of Christopher Bibby, a resident of Waynesburg, Greene Co., Penn., and one of its earliest settlers. Mr. and Mrs. Dickerson have had the following children: Sarah (deceased), Archie and Bessie. Mr. Dickerson is one of the enterprising citizens of the township, and is an active member of the Republican party.

HENRY LANDEFELD, one of the most extensive travelers in Washington county, and proprietor of the largest clothing establishment in Monongahela, is of German birth, a son of Matthias Landefeld.

Matthias Landefeld was born in 1794, in Hessen-Cassel, Germany, where he grew to manhood and received a thorough education. At the age of seventeen years he entered the German army as a volunteer under Blucher, and participated in all of the engagements led by that general, taking part in the world-renowned contest at Waterloo. He had three brothers in the service, all of whom died, and after the war he returned home and followed coal mining the rest of his life. In early manhood he was married in Hessen-Cassel to Mary Schenewolf, who bore him twelve children, of whom are named the following: Louisa, Jacob,

A Landefeld

Louis, William, Reinhardt, Elizabeth, Eliza, Christina and Henry.

Henry Landefeld was born September 17, 1846, in Hessen-Cassel, Germany, and, as is characteristic of the Germans, enjoyed the advantages of a good education. He then spent four years in learning the tailor's trade, paying $60 tuition fee, and furnishing his own clothes in the meanwhile; a long, tedious, and, according to the ideas of many Americans, useless apprenticeship. But if the American people were more prone to emulate the painstaking, tedious preparation by which the Germans fit themselves for a chosen vocation, it would result in better workmen, higher pay, and better times. "Slow but sure" has ever been the excellent motto of the German Empire, and is the watchword of a nation of skilled workmen who can be excelled by none other in their special departments. After serving his time Henry Landefeld started on a journeyman's tour, and from 1864 to 1865 remained at Hamburg, thence traveling through Holstein to Mecklenburg. He then spent four weeks in Hamburg, and from there went to Scotland, working in Leith and Edinburgh. He lay ill six months at the latter place, and upon recovering attempted in vain to secure work in Glasgow, so returned to Edinburgh. Some time afterward he again went to Glasgow and worked there several years; then spent three weeks in Liverpool, from which place he proceeded to Manchester, and in 1867 returned to Liverpool. He then enlisted in the Fifty-second British regiment, and remained with it five years, having been in the service during the Fenian trouble at Dublin, Ireland. From Dublin they marched to Limerick, and one year later went to Cork, thence to Malta, where they were stationed four years. He there deserted the army, and after remaining on the island three weeks, escaped as a stowaway on a vessel bound for Constantinople, Turkey. From Constantinople, he went to Egypt and Tripoli; thence to Gibraltar, where he lay sick several weeks. On recovering, he embarked at Gibraltar on an American-bound vessel, and, working his way across, first landed in New York. He then left the vessel, and in 1872, after a short stay in New York, went to Pittsburgh, Penn., where he was married on September 17, 1874, to Emily Steinecke, and there followed his trade until 1875. He then went to Salineville, Ohio, remaining there one year, and finally coming to Monongahela, engaged as a tailor and cutter with Silas Haley, for whom he worked twenty-three months. At the end of that time he began business for himself as a tailor and clothing merchant, and six years later purchased another establishment, which he remodeled in 1884. In 1890 he erected his present place of business, which is 135x33 feet in size, and four stories in height, being one of the finest buildings in the Monongahela Valley. This is the largest merchant tailor establishment near Pittsburgh, and also carries a full line of furnishing goods and ready-made clothing. Mr. Landefeld has won his remarkable success by his own efforts, and is deeply interested in all public improvements. His children have been born as follows: Minnie C., Charles H., Theodore S., Russell A., Reinhardt L., Frederick W., William M. and Charles W.

MRS. NANCY EALY, widow of Martin Ealy, was born September 10, 1828, in Greene county, Penn., daughter of Benjamin McConnell, of that county. On June 20, 1846, she was married to Martin Ealy, an industrious and successful farmer of East Finley township, Washington county.

Martin Ealy was born January 15, 1826, in East Finley township, and passed his early youth in assisting his father in the duties of the farm. On attaining the age of maturity he was united in marriage, as above related, with Miss Nancy McConnell, and to their union were born children, of which the following is a brief record: Rosanna, born April 20, 1847, in early womanhood was married to Albert Sampson, and died October 14, 1870; Silas, born June 10, 1849, is now living in East Finley township, Washington Co., Penn., married to Belle Almus; Martha Jane, born August 10, 1851, is the wife of James Snyler, and they reside in West Alexander, Washington Co., Penn.; Clarissa, born March 17, 1853, married George Smith, and resides in Greene county, Penn.; Lucinda, born December 10, 1854, is the wife of John Hunt, and is also living in Greene county; Hannah Minerva, born December 25, 1857, and is living in West Alexander, Donegal township, this county, wife of Wilson Rockey; John Richard, born June 29, 1859, is married to Addie Whitam, their home being also in West Alexander, this county; Mary Ellen, born December 28, 1861, married to John Burns, and lives in East Finley township, this county; Juda Ann, born January 22, 1865, is married to John Booth, and lives in West Alexander, Penn.; Sarah Catherine and Ida Florine (twins), born November 17, 1868, died in infancy; Martin Ellsworth, born October 26, 1869, is united in marriage with Miss Addie Sprowls (they are residents of East Finley township); James Albert, born March 25, 1872, is living at home with his widowed mother, and has attended to the work of the farm since the death of his father.

After his marriage Mr. Ealy settled on his father's farm, which is situated in East Finley township, opposite East Finley postoffice, and there made his home sixteen years, when he purchased the well-improved farm upon which his widow resides. Mr. Ealy was a very successful farmer, and a man whose death was deeply mourned by the community in which he lived. He was a member of the U. B. Church at Fairmount, and contributed liberally to its support. In politics he was an active worker in the Republican party. Mr. Ealy died March 19, 1885, and his widow now manages the farm with much skill. She is a member of the Baptist Church at Enon.

ANDREW JACKSON GRIMES, a prosperous farmer of Buffalo township, is a grandson of William Grimes, Sr., who was born east of the mountains in Pennsylvania, and became a pioneer settler of Washington county. He married and settled in Donegal township, where he reared nine children.

William Grimes, son of the above, was born in 1818, on the old homestead in Donegal township, this county, and in early manhood removed to Ohio, where he lived twenty years. He finally returned to Pennsylvania, and passed the remaining years of his life on the farm in Buffalo township, which is now occupied by his son, Andrew. He was a successful farmer. Mr. Grimes passed from earth in 1881.

Andrew Jackson Grimes was born in the year 1860, and passed his youth in assisting his father on the farm and in attending school, receiving a good education. His sister Sallie resides with him on a portion of the old farm. Mr. Grimes is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Taylors-town, this county, and in politics is a Democrat, but is not an aspirant for political honors.

JOHN McPHERSON, a prominent pioneer of Buffalo township, was born April 1, 1812, in Lancaster county, Penn. His grandfather, John McPherson, was a native of Ireland, where his entire life was passed, and where he died at an advanced age, leaving a son named John.

John McPherson (father of the subject of this sketch) remained in Ireland until about twenty years of age, when he came to America, and settled in Lancaster county, Penn. He was married to Ann Logan, and she bore him children as follows: William, James, John, Daniel, Ann and Mary. Of this family all are deceased except Ann and John.

John McPherson remained in Lancaster county, Penn., until he was five years old, when he accompanied his parents to Washington county, same State. He received his early education at a log-cabin subscription school, which was near his present home. Mr. McPherson is now a venerable but hale old gentleman, and is highly esteemed by all who know him. In politics he is a Democrat of the old school, but has never permitted himself to become prominently connected with political questions.

COLIN R. PRALL, an enterprising and thrifty citizen and prominent agriculturist of Amwell township, is a native of the same, having been born May 9, 1850, on the old farm near "Dunning Hart's."

His grandfather, John Prall, came in an early day from New Jersey to Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., and located on the old Van-Kirk farm, where he passed the remainder of his life. He was twice married, and reared the following family of children: William Harrison (deceased), Benjamin (deceased), Jackson, Mary (Mrs. Lacoek), and Marguerite (wife of Mr. Stout). Mr. Prall took an active part in assisting to organize and develop the county, and did all in his power to promote any enterprise for the public good. He was a Democrat, but not a politician. He died in his eighty-second year, mourned by many friends.

Jackson Prall was born in 1815 on the old farm in Amwell township, Washington county, and lived there until about a year after his marriage. He was united in marriage with Mary Jane Carile, a granddaughter of Mollie Stark, of Revolutionary fame. They had one son and one daughter: Colin R., and Mrs. Lizzie Jane Ward, residing in Washington county, Penn. After his marriage Mr. Prall purchased a farm of sixty-six acres, now a part of the "Dunning Hart" place, upon which he resided twenty-two years, when he removed to the old farm just south of Martinsburg, South Strabane township, and lived there eleven years, then came to the place on the National pike, east of Washington, where he now lives, retired from the more active scenes of life, in his seventy-sixth year. Mr. Prall has always given his voice and vote to the advancement of good government, but has never been an active politician. His wife died in 1878.

Colin R. Prall, son of Jackson and Sarah Prall, remained on the home farm until he was thirty-one years of age, and received a good common-school education. On September 28, 1871, he was married to Chris A. Slusher, who was born in 1850, a daughter of Michael and Lavina Slusher. In 1882 Mr. Prall purchased the farm of ninety acres which he now occupies, and which is one of the most valuable tracts in the township. He has, unaided, become a prosperous business man. Politically, he is a Democrat.

GEORGE CUNNINGHAM is a son of Launcelot Cunningham, who emigrated in 1812 from County Donegal, Ireland, and, landing at Philadelphia, first settled in Jefferson township, Washington Co., Penn. In early manhood he was married to Hannah Virtue, also a native of Ireland, who immigrated with her family to America, and the young people began their wedded life on the farm in this county which is yet owned by their descendants. Three children blessed their union, namely: George; Isabelle, born in 1821, and Hannah, born in 1823.

George Cunningham was born April 27, 1819, on the home farm in Jefferson township, this county, where he is now residing, and passed his youth in the usual duties incumbent upon a farmer's son. In 1841 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Steen, who was born January 27, 1820, on the old Steen homestead in Jefferson township, daughter of Robert Steen, who was of Irish descent. To the union of George and Elizabeth Cunningham the following children were born: Hannah Ann (Mrs. McCleary), Robert (married to Jane Ann Scott), Elizabeth, George (married to Annie McCray) and Launcelot. The mother of these children died December 13, 1881. George Cunningham began life on a very modest little farm, but worked away with an unflinching will and tireless industry. When his father died he bought out the interest of the other heirs in the old place and kept the property in the family name, and he now owns between three and four hundred acres of fertile and well-improved farm land. In politics he has always voted with the Democratic party, and is a counselor and adviser of that faction. In religious connection he is a member of the United Presbyterian Church, in which he has served as trustee, steward, and in various other capacities.

ROBERT B. VANCE is a representative of an old and highly esteemed family of Independence township. He is of Scotch descent, the first ancestor of the family to immigrate to America being one Joseph Vance, who was born in Scotland about the middle of the seventeenth century. In early manhood Joseph Vance left the "bonny braes" of Scotland, landing in America some time after, and becoming a pioneer settler of Pennsylvania. He located in Cross Creek township, Washington county, while the Indians were still numerous, and soon achieved a widespread reputation as an Indian fighter, many of the dusky warriors having fallen by his unerring rifle. Few if any were more prominently identified with the early settlement of the western portion of Washington county than was Mr. Vance. He married and passed the remainder of his life in the wilderness where his first log cabin was erected; during his lifetime the uncultivated land had become a fertile farm. He and his wife passed to their rest at an advanced age, leaving their children to finish the work so nobly begun.

Among these children was a son William, born in 1776, and reared in Washington county, amid the usual trials and dangers of pioneer life. His education was necessarily limited, as schools were few, and at best afforded but meager opportunities. He was first married to Rachel Patterson, a resident of Cross Creek township, who bore him six children. She died, and a few years afterward he married, for his second wife, Hannah Patterson, a member of an old family of Cross Creek township. To this union also were born six children. Mr. Vance always lived in Cross Creek township, and was one of the representative men of the day. He died in 1856. He was a Whig in politics, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church.

James Vance (the third child of his father's first marriage) was born July 22, 1804, in Cross Creek township, and passed his boyhood days on his father's farm, receiving instruction in the principles of agriculture, of which he made so practical a use in later life. He received a somewhat limited education in the subscription schools, and in 1829 was united in marriage with Susan Walker, who was born December 22, 1809, daughter of Alexander Walker, of Cross Creek township. The children born to their union were: Alvira (Mrs. James Dodds, of Independence township), Rachel (Mrs. Perry Liggett, of West Middletown, Penn.) and Robert B. (subject of this sketch). Mr. Vance continued to live in Cross Creek township until 1837, when he came to Independence township, locating about two miles east of the village of that name, and there made his permanent home. Mr. Vance was formerly an Old-line Whig, and on the formation of the new party united with the Republicans. Much of the success in his business life was due to his own efforts and sagacious management. Mr. Vance died in 1881, and September 29, 1889, was followed by his widow, who was laid to rest by the side of her husband. Both were consistent members of the Presbyterian Church.

Robert B. Vance was born August 30, 1842, on the old farm in Independence township, which is his present home. He attended the district schools, and assisted in the farm work. On March 8, 1866, he was married to Rebecca McCleary, who was born January 1, 1844, daughter of Éwing McCleary, of Brooke county, W. Va., and the following children were born to them: Cynthia (Mrs. Samuel Dunbar, of Smith township), Alvira, James E. and Sadie, the latter three living with their parents. Mr. Vance has always resided on the home place, and follows general farming and stock raising, being especially successful with the latter business. He is a well-known and popular citizen; in politics he is an active member of the Democratic party, and has been called upon to fill various township offices. Although Mr. Vance is not a church member, he believes in and supports the cause of religion. The "Golden Rule" is his motto, and by observing the precept which it contains he and his family have won the esteem and friendship of all who know them.

JACOB ZELT, one of the well-known and prosperous farmers of Canton township, is a son of Jacob Zelt, a record of whom appears on page 1035, in sketch of Albert Zelt. Our subject was born April 21, 1850, in Washington, Washington Co., Penn., where he continued to reside for many years. His early education was received at the common schools of his native town, where he received an excellent course of training, which was the foundation of his success in later life. On May 25, 1875, he was united in marriage with Miss Mary J., daughter of Thomas Elwood. After marriage the young couple took up their residence on the home farm, which our subject purchased after the death of his father, who passed away May 10, 1882. They have two children: Mary E. and Thomas A. Mr. Zelt is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Washington, to which he gives a very liberal support. In politics he has always been a Democrat, and is one of the most enterprising and intelligent citizens of his township.

ROBERT MANIFOLD, a leading citizen of North Strabane township, was born October 29, 1820. He is a grandson of Joseph Manifold, who was a native of York county, Penn., where he was married and passed his entire life. His son, Benjamin Manifold, was born in 1773, and passed his youth in his native county, where he was married to Ann Gamble, a resident of the same place. The following children were born to their union: Elizabeth (Mrs. Robert Black), Ellen (Mrs. William Black), Nancy (wife of William Oates), Joseph, John, Mary, Jane and Robert. In 1818 Mr. Manifold brought his family to Washington county, Penn., and located on the Morgan farm in South Strabane township, where they lived until 1840, when they purchased the farm now owned by Robert, and there passed the remainder of their lives. Mr. Manifold was a Whig, and although not an active politician, was a staunch supporter of his party. He was an industrious man, and much interested in all public enterprises. He was one of the leading members of the Presbyterian Church.

Robert Manifold passed his early years on the home farm in North Strabane township, and attended the school at Washington borough some years. He afterward shared in the management of the home place, together with his brothers John and James, which they purchased after renting it for several years. Mr. Manifold has never married and his sister keeps house for him. About three years ago the brothers made a division of the property, and the home place fell to the share of Robert. He then built a large house and barn, and made many other improvements. Politically he was formerly a Whig, and, since the organization of the party, has been a staunch Republican, although never accepting political office. He is a member of the Chartiers Presbyterian Church, to which he contributes liberally.

SAMUEL CLARK WEIR, a prosperous and successful farmer of Morris township, is the youngest in a family of seven children born to Samuel Clark and Annie (Parkinson) Weir. Samuel Clark Weir, Sr., was born in 1815, and in 1847 was married to Annie Parkinson, who was born in Washington county in 1823, daughter of Robert Parkinson, of Morris township. They had seven children, namely: Hallace, Robert A., Mary Ellen, Elizabeth Ann, Adam and a twin brother, unnamed, who both died soon after birth, and Samuel Clark. Of this family but two are living: Robert A., who married Inez Andrew and resides in Amwell township, and Samuel C., the subject of this sketch.

Samuel C. Weir was but an infant when his mother died, and he was reared by Zebulon Lindley, with whom he made his home until 1878. He was married in that year to Eliza Jane Post, who was born March 13, 1855, a daughter of Munson Post, of Morris township, and to this union were born three children: Mary Elizabeth, born March 31, 1881; and twins, born March 2, 1891, who lived but a short time. Mr. Weir gives especial attention to stock raising, dealing principally in horses. He is a Democrat in politics, and in religion both he and Mrs. Weir are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Old Concord.

JOHAN W. STEWART. This enterprising, representative citizen of Buffalo township is a grandson of Thomas Stewart, a native of Ireland, who in early manhood immigrated to America, making his permanent home in Washington county, Penn., where he became one of the most prosperous and highly respected farmer citizens of Donegal township.

John Welch Stewart, father of the subject of this sketch, was born April 1, 1806, in Donegal township, near Claysville, Washington Co., Penn., and received an unusually good education for that period, although his earlier instruction was received in the traditional primitive log schoolhouse. He commenced life as a traveling salesman, carrying his goods by wagon, and selling them by wholesale to the retail dealers in the smaller towns. Afterward he rented a farm, commencing a successful agricultural career; later he resided near Washington, in Canton township, and in 1840 bought a farm in Buffalo township. He was married April 5, 1831, to Jane, daughter of William

J. W. Stewart

McCall (deceased), a native of Washington county, born December 20, 1808, and their family consisted of the following children: William M., born February 24, 1832, died November, 1862; Thomas, born December 27, 1833, living in New Jersey; Mary M., born February 2, 1836, died January 26, 1885; Robert, born June 23, 1837, a practicing physician in Allegheny county, Penn.; Jane, born September 11, 1841, deceased at the age of eight years; two that died in infancy; Anna M., born August 17, 1845, married to Samuel Wright, of Buffalo township; John W., and James M., the latter born January 25, 1850. The father died August 31, 1866, the mother February 13, 1885.

John W. Stewart, son of John Welch and Jane (McCall) Stewart, was born November 3, 1847, on his father's farm in Buffalo township, and received a good education at the common schools of his district. When his father died, John W. took charge of the home place of 217 acres, upon which he now resides. He was united in marriage October 11, 1877, with Maggie, daughter of R. S. Caldwell, of Hopewell township, this county, and they have three children: Robert Vance, born April 18, 1879; Irene, born January 31, 1883, and John Lloyd, born January 27, 1887. Mr. Stewart is one of the most successful and progressive farmers and stock raisers in Washington county, and grows annually a large amount of wool, having at the present time a fine flock of 300 sheep. He takes an active interest in politics as a member of the Republican party. He and his wife are both connected with the North Buffalo United Presbyterian Church.

JAMES F. WELCH, a leading merchant of West Middletown, was born June 22, 1848, in West Finley township, Washington Co., Penn. He is a grandson of James Welch, the latter of whom was born and reared in eastern Pennsylvania, and when a young man came to Washington county. James Welch was there married to Margaret Johnson, daughter of one of the earliest pioneers of the county, who made a home in Independence township, suffering much from the Indians, who were then very hostile. To Mr. and Mrs. Welch were born the following children: Andrew (deceased in youth), Rachel (Mrs. James Haggerty), Robert, Ephraim, Jane (Mrs. James Hunter), Abel, Mary (wife of Andrew Paxton), Eliza (married to Dr. William Smith), Nimrod (living in Iowa), John, James and Aaron. After his marriage Mr. Welch settled on the unimproved farm in Independence township, which has since been cultivated by the family, in whose possession it has remained. Politically James Welch was a Whig, taking an active part in local politics. He was a leading member of the Associate Reformed Church, in which he served as an elder many years, and toward which he was a liberal contributor. He is buried at Mt. Hope.

Aaron Welch was born June 16, 1819, in Independence township, this county; he passed his early life on the home farm, and received his education at the log schoolhouse, with its puncheon floor and huge fireplace. In 1843 he was united in marriage with Ann, daughter of James Futey, of Cross Creek township, an old settler of this county. Mr. Welch remained on the home place some years after his marriage, and then moved to West Finley township, this county, but soon after purchased a farm in Cross Creek township. This he sold, and bought a farm in Hopewell township, where he remained till spring; then traded for another place in the same township, where he remained but a short time, and then moved to Independence township. Some time afterward he purchased a farm near West Middletown, where he made a permanent home. Children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Welch as follows: Elizabeth M. (Mrs. A. W. McConnell), Lucretia A. (deceased), James F., Mary J. (Mrs. D. A. Scott), Edith A. (wife of Nathaniel Paxton), Rachel M. (deceased wife of T. M. Cowden), Maria M. (Mrs. John Nolan), and one that died in infancy. Mr. Welch was formerly a Whig and then a Republican. He took an active part in local politics, and served his township in various capacities. In religion he was first a member of the Associate Reformed Church, afterward uniting with the United Presbyterian Society, in which he was an elder for years. He was actively interested in church matters, giving liberally to all worthy enterprises. He died January 13, 1879, having been preceded by his wife in 1870, and both are buried in the cemetery at Mt. Hope.

James F. Welch remained on the home farm near West Middletown, until about twenty-one years of age, when he engaged in teaching school. He followed this profession several years, then worked two years in his brother-in-law's store at Venice, this county, and in 1875 commenced business at West Middletown. On September 16, 1875, he was united in marriage with Lizzie R., daughter of William Berry, who was born June 31, 1819, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county. His grandfather, John Berry, was born in Ireland, and there learned the shoemaker's trade. He then came to America, settling in Lancaster county, Penn., where he lived some years, and afterward moved to Washington county, where he purchased a farm from part of the grant given to George Washington. He was engaged in the distillery business.

John Berry was born in Lancaster county, Penn., and was reared and educated on the home place. He was married to Rachel Phillips, who bore him the following named children: Jonathan, Eliza A.

(Mrs. Alexander May), Mary (wife of Robert Riddle), John, William and Samuel. Mr. Berry followed farming all his life. In politics he was a Whig, then an Abolitionist, and afterward a Republican. He was a member and elder of the Associate Reformed Church for many years, then united with the U. P. Church. He died in 1870, his wife in 1860.

William Berry spent his early years on the home place in Lancaster county, Penn., and there passed his whole life. In 1849 he was married to Martha J., daughter of John Colkins, and their children were, Lizzie R. (Mrs. J. F. Welch), Martha L., Mary (wife of David A. McCalmont), Ella B., Ida and James G. Mrs. Berry died January 8, 1865, and was buried at Venice. On January 30, 1878, Mr. Berry was united in marriage with Jane G. Reed. He was a Whig and Abolitionist, then a Republican, and finally a Prohibitionist. He was a member of the Associate Reformed Church, and afterward united with the U. P. Society.

To Mr. and Mrs. James F. Welch have been born the following children: Anna M., Edith M. and Nellie T. Mr. Welch is a successful business man, and in politics was a Republican, now being a Prohibitionist. He has served faithfully in various offices. In religious connection he is a member and elder of the U. P. Church.

JOHAN P. MANES. The family which this gentleman represents are among the earliest pioneers of Allegheny county, Penn. The first one of whom we have an authentic record is one Culbert Manes, who was born August 14, 1799, and reared in New Jersey, and came to Allegheny county, Penn., in the latter part of the past century. He was there united in marriage with Susan, daughter of Samuel Van Kirk, who was of New Jersey descent, and a member of one of the oldest families in the county. They were prominent in the Revolutionary war, many of them having served under Washington: Mr. Van Kirk took an active part in the battle of Brandywine. While living in New Jersey he was married to Mary Price, who bore him children as follows: Samuel, Joseph, John, Isaac, Thomas, William, Sarah, Betsey, Mary, Ruth and Susan (who became the wife of Culbert Manes). In politics Mr. Van Kirk was a Democrat: he followed farming and stock raising.

After his marriage Mr. Manes settled on a place in Allegheny county, Penn., where he remained until 1857, when he purchased a farm in North Strabane township, Washington county, where he made a permanent residence. His children were: John P. (subject of sketch), Mary J. (Mrs. Wesley Greer), Samuel, Margaret (Mrs. T. H. Lyon) and Joseph V. Mr. Manes always followed the business of farming and stock raising. Politically he was a Democrat, and was frequently called upon to serve the township in different capacities. He was a member and liberal supporter of the Presbyterian Church.

John P. Manes passed his youth on the home farm in Allegheny county, Penn., and received a common-school education. In 1849 he went to St. Joseph, Mo., and purchased mules for a Pittsburgh company, continuing in that business about six months, and then, joining a party of gold seekers, went to California, where he remained seven years, engaged in mining and other occupations. He then returned to Pennsylvania, and on August 8, 1858, was married to Mary, daughter of John McMillan. Soon after his marriage, Mr. Manes settled on the farm in North Strabane township, this county, which is his present home, and has since been engaged in farming and stock raising. He has three children: Culbert, Mary A. (Mrs. David Crone) and John A. Mr. Manes is one of the leading citizens of Washington county, but has recently retired from active life. He takes an active interest in church matters, and is a member of the Presbyterian Society, in which he serves as trustee. He votes independently of any party, but favors the Democratic platform.

JAMES ALBERT RICHEY. The pioneer ancestor of the Richey family was John Richey, a native of Ireland, who came to America in a very early day, and settled on 300 acres of land in Marshall county, W. Va., for which he paid $2 per acre. He procured the necessary amount of money by raising flax, which was then spun and woven into fine linen. He was married and had three children, namely: John, James and Moses.

James Richey (grandfather of subject) was born in 1773, in Marshall county, W. Va., and passed his youth in working on the home farm. He was married to Miss Nancy Taylor, of Marshall county, born near Wolf Run, and they continued to live on the home farm the rest of their lives. The following children were born to them: Ellen (Mrs. Edwards), Anna (Mrs. Cummins), Martha (Mrs. Sayers), Nancy (Mrs. Seaton), Lucy (Mrs. Lewis), Jane (Mrs. Fish), Margaret (deceased in youth), John (father of our subject), James, Moses, Crosier and Taylor (these four died in childhood).

John Richey was born October 24, 1819, in Marshall county, W. Va., and passed his youth at home, assisting in the general duties of the farm. On March 28, 1844, he was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Kimmins, who was born March 21, 1824, in Washington county, Penn. After their marriage the young people settled in Honeytown, W. Va., where Mr. Richey followed mercantile business two years, and then removed to a farm at Rosby's Rock, W. Va., where he lived about twenty-five years, thence removing to the farm in West Finley township, this county, where he died. Eleven children were born to them: Andrew K., born in June, 1845 (was killed in the war in 1865); Sarah M., born in March, 1846; Nancy E., born December 21, 1847; John Taylor, born November 19, 1849; James A., born March 16, 1853; William C., born November 13, 1854 (deceased in youth); Eva J., born May 1, 1856; Samuel W., born September 14, 1858; Anna S., born November 17, 1860; Frank M., born December 7, 1862 (died in youth); and R. Swau, born March 11, 1865.

James A. Richey was born on the old farm in Marshall county, W. Va., and passed his youth with his parents. On December 24, 1874, he was married to Miss Louisa, daughter of John Mooney, of Marshall county, W. Va. To their union was born one child, which lived but six days, and on July 12, 1887, the mother followed it to the grave. The desolate husband and father sought forgetfulness in western travel, and was afterward married to Viola McCully, of Marshall county, W. Va.; she was born February 5, 1868, on the farm of her father, Alexander McCully. Mr. and Mrs. Richey have one daughter, Radia Florence, born October 12, 1890. Mr. Richey began life as a farmer, but his health failing, he was forced to seek lighter employment, and selling his farm (with the exception of ten acres) became a stock and wool dealer. He then engaged in mercantile business with his father for two years, but soon resumed his former vocation. He has kept free from debt, and owns two houses and lots in Businessburgh, Ohio, besides about 100 acres of land. In politics he is a pillar of the Republican party.

JACOB LEGLER is one of the successful agriculturists of Union township. He is a son of Jacob Legler, who was born in Wittenberg, Germany, where he was married to Rosanna Freob, who was born on the farm near Ruplesburg, where her husband lived. They settled on a farm in their native country, and children were born to them as follows: George, Andrew, Jacob, Catherine, Rosanna and Fredrick, of whom Catherine and Andrew are deceased. Jacob and Andrew came to America in 1852, where Andrew followed the business of a journeyman baker; he died of cholera during the year of their arrival in the New World.

Jacob Legler was born August 19, 1837, on the home place in Wittenberg, Germany, and was but fourteen years of age when he and his brother emigrated. Upon landing in the New World he was apprenticed to a baker, and after the death of his brother continued working in the shop for three years, then followed the trade for two years as a journeyman baker, afterward working three years as a pastry cook in different hotels. After his marriage Mr. Legler was next employed for five years as steward on a steamboat, and in 1865 opened a confectionery store in Monongahela, in which business he continued for twelve years. He finally bought 105 acres of land in Union township, Washington county, and started a coal works, employing from fifty to 120 men. He conducted this enterprise ten years, when, on account of the railroad switch being torn up, they abandoned the works. He then entered into partnership with Messrs. Fritchman & Florsheim, and they opened the Germania Coal Works, which have proved more profitable than the original plant, and employ from 150 to 160 men. In politics Mr. Legler is a staunch advocate of Republican principles, and in religion he is a member of the German Lutheran Church. In 1859 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Gliess, of Allegheny county, Penn., who died some years ago, leaving the following named children: Jacob C., John, William, Elizabeth, Sarah, George, Margaret, Mary and James B. For his second wife he married Sarah, daughter of Jacob Rhine, a retired boat builder of Monongahela, and they are living on the farm in Union township.

R D. HAMILTON, a leading agriculturist of Chartiers township, first saw the light of day on the farm which is now his home, in that township. He attended the common schools and afterward took a three years' course at Washington and Jefferson College. He intended to enter the ministry, but ill health compelled him to abandon this, and he became a "tiller of the soil." On November 28, 1881, he was married to Sadie B., daughter of R. M. and Mary (Martin) Morgan. Mr. Morgan has been an elder in the Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg and Miller's Run for many years. Five children have blessed the union of R. D. and Sadie B. Hamilton, namely: Bertie M., Cora E., Claire B., Elsie M. and Hazel B. The entire family are members of the Presbyterian Church, in which Mr. Hamilton has been an elder for the past six years, also serving as Sabbath-school superintendent. In political opinion he is a Democrat. The home farm contains 104 acres, and upon the pastures large flocks of sheep are grazing, to which he gives especial care. He is a member of the National Delaine Stock Breeders Association.

JOHN MALDOON, one of the progressive and popular young agriculturists of Donegal township, is a son of Franklin Maldoon, who was born in 1793, in County Down, Ireland. The latter immigrated to America, and locating in Donegal township, married Jane Roberts, born in 1818, whose parents were among the pioneer settlers of the community. The children born to this union were Thomas (now living in Pettis county, Mo.), John (deceased in infancy), Mary Ann and Sarah J. (twins, now deceased), Nancy (now Mrs. James Gray, of Wheeling, W. Va.), Robert, George, Matilda and Moses (all four deceased), Felix (farming in Ohio county, W. Va.), Margaret (Mrs. Wayts, of Ohio county, W. Va.), Iantha (Mrs. John Wherry, residing in Ohio county, W. Va.), Felicia (unmarried, who lived with her father) and John (the subject of this sketch). After his marriage Franklin Maldoon made his permanent home on the farm, where he died in 1881, and was followed to the grave by his wife in 1888. He was a successful farmer, and a typical son of the Emerald Isle, possessing the true native energy and enterprise. He accumulated a comfortable property and enjoyed the friendship and respect of his neighbors.

John Maldoon, whose name opens this sketch, was born March 3, 1862, on the farm which he now owns and lives upon. It is situated about three and one-half miles north of West Alexander, in Donegal township, near the West Virginia line. His boyhood was passed on his father's farm and in attending the common schools. On May 25, 1887, he was united in marriage with Annie Rogers, who was born April 24, 1864, a daughter of James Rogers, of Ohio county, W. Va., and three children have been born to them, namely: James Francis, Harry Edgar (deceased in infancy) and an infant daughter. Mr. Maldoon has always lived on the home farm, and followed agricultural pursuits. He is an active and industrious young man, and gives fair promise of becoming one of the prominent men in his community. Politically, he is a Democrat.

MICHAEL WOLFE, deceased farmer of Allen township, was born in 1791, in Virginia. His father, George Wolfe, was born in the Shenandoah Valley, Va., and he and his wife afterward moved to Western Virginia, where they died.

Michael Wolfe was reared and educated in Virginia, and in early manhood came to Allen township, Washington Co., Penn., where he followed farming and river life. He was there married to Sallie Allen, who was a great-grandchild of Joseph and Deborah (Hill) Allen. The latter couple were natives of eastern Pennsylvania, and coming to Washington county prior to the Revolution, took up a vast tract of land under a Virginia certificate, and became identified with the earliest history of this county. They were Quakers. Eli Allen, son of Joseph and Deborah (Hill) Allen, was born in eastern Pennsylvania, and came on horseback from Chester county to Fayette county, Penn., where he was married to Sarah Griffith, and finally settled on his father's tract in Washington county, Penn. He died in Indiana.

Joseph Allen, son of Eli and Sarah Allen, was born in Fayette county, where he was reared and educated. In early life he was united in marriage with Alma Thompson, a native of Fayette county, and they moved to a farm in Allen township, Washington county, and he followed his vocation of boat-building. In political opinion he was a Jacksonian Democrat, and was an esteemed citizen. He died December 10, 1832, leaving a widow, since deceased. They were the parents of the following children: Letitia, born in March, 1808 (deceased wife of Allen Stockdale); Ruth, born August 30, 1809 (Mrs. Michael Wolfe), deceased many years ago; Eli, born January 23, 1811 (deceased in infancy); Sarah (widow of Michael Wolfe), born June 12, 1812; Eli, born March 22, 1814 (deceased in Fayette county, Penn., January 18, 1884, married to Martha Donaldson); Joanna, born September 15, 1815 (wife of Francis McKee, of Uniontown, Penn.); Joseph, born December 4, 1817 (married to Jane Lyons, and living in Beaver county, Penn.); and Barbara (deceased in infancy).

Michael and Sallie (Allen) Wolfe began wedded life on a portion of the Allen tract, in Allen township, and his widow is yet living on seventy-five acres adjoining Stockdale, and rents the home farm. In political opinion Mr. Wolfe was a Democrat. He died November 2, 1880.

JOHAN M. DUNN. Foremost among the young business men of Morris township stands the gentleman whose name opens this sketch. He is a son of Daniel Dunn, Jr., of Scotch-Irish descent, whose grandparents emigrated from England in early colonial days.

Joseph Dunn came to Washington county at a time when it was but a vast wilderness, carrying his possessions in a bandanna handkerchief. He blazed trees, raised sheep and stock, and when he died he possessed a large estate. He settled over the line in Greene county and there died. He married Elizabeth Montgomery, of Washington county, Penn., and to this union nine children were born: Sarah, Daniel, James M., Elizabeth, Joseph, Caroline, Hannah, Cassius and William. Of these James M., Joseph, Hannah, Elizabeth and William are living.

Daniel Dunn, Jr. (father of subject), was born October 21, 1830. He was reared to farm life, received a common-school education, and afterward entered Waynesburg College, from which—but for the untimely death of his father—he would have graduated. He taught school, and after his father's

Respectfully Yours,
John M. Dunn,

death virtually assumed charge of the vast estate which the latter had left. His excellent business ability was here shown, his management of the estate being of a nature which would have done credit to one of much greater experience in business affairs. In 1856 he married Eunice Minton, who was born April 8, 1836, a daughter of John Minton, of Morris township, and of this union there were the following children: John M.; Joseph Lincoln, born December 25, 1859; Isadore, born August 12, 1862, died November 25, 1865; Clara, born July 29, 1865. Mr. Dunn was a successful and prominent business man, giving a considerable portion of his time to the settlement of estates entrusted to his care. He was elder and superintendent for years in West Union Cumberland Presbyterian Church and an active worker in church matters. He died June 14, 1886. His widow makes her home with her son, J. Lincoln, who resides on the old home farm near Dunn's Station, Morris township.

John Minton Dunn was born June 7, 1857. He attended the common schools until he attained the age of seventeen, when he entered Waynesburgh College, where he pursued his studies for three years. On account of the failing health of his father, whose position of trust in business and individual possessions required considerable attention, he was called home at the expiration of this time to render necessary assistance. His father's health being partially regained, John M. went to Iowa, and located in Des Moines, engaging in the dry-goods business, but the failing health of his father again called him to the old home to assist in the management and settlement of business trusts, and here he remained until after his father's death, which occurred in 1886. On December 12, 1882, Mr. Dunn married Annie Ross, who was born August 18, 1862, a daughter of Timothy Ross, of Morris township, and of English origin, her great grandparents having been natives of England. Of this union the following children were born: Ross Allen, born October 2, 1884; Laura Isadore, born April 25, 1886; Harold J., born July 5, 1889; and Annie E., born December 23, 1892. For four years after his marriage Mr. Dunn lived on the home farm with his father, and then purchased adjoining land, where he has since resided.

Mr. Dunn is an enterprising business man, and one of the busiest in Washington county, having within the last two years settled four estates. He is secretary of the Morris Oil & Gas Company, deals quite extensively in real estate, owns considerable farm property, which is worked under his personal direction, and is also a dealer in wool. In politics he is an active Republican, and for six years has been a school director, for two successive terms in a Democratic township, which has two Democrats to one Republican, and was president of the school board. He was last elected by a much larger majority than at first; he is a man who stands for his convictions in the face of opposition, and of advanced ideas in educational matters. He and his wife are members of the West Union Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which he is elder and Sunday-school superintendent. He is stated clerk of the Pennsylvania Presbytery of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in Pennsylvania (the oldest Presbytery of the State), a position he has held for some eight or nine years, being the first elder that ever held the position. He represented the eldership of this Presbytery in the General Assembly at Memphis, Tenn., in May, 1892. He has been trustee of Waynesburgh College four years, and has been re-elected three times; has been secretary and treasurer of the church for ten or twelve years; has held many positions of trust in his county, and has always declined re-election or re-appointment, never being set aside, and he enters heart and soul into all matters he undertakes. The Morris Oil & Gas Company was organized in 1889, and Mr. Dunn was at once chosen secretary and general manager. He is serving his third term as a member of the county vigilance committee, and has served twice on the county executive committee. He has been director in the W. Mt. M. N. & W. Telephone Company since the completion of the line in 1889.

Timothy Ross, father of Mrs. John M. Dunn, was a prosperous farmer of Greene county, and was a buyer of cattle, wool, etc. The county line ran through his farm, and he chose Morris township as a living place. He married Joanna Tharp (daughter of Samuel Tharp), and both died many years ago of typhoid fever, the father dying first, the mother a few weeks later. When the wife of our subject was small, an uncle of our subject, Daniel Dunn, Sr., helped nurse them, and he, too, died. Mr. and Mrs. Ross had six children: Ella, Thomas, Hiram, Virginia (deceased), Annie (Mrs. Dunn) and Laura (wife of James Miner, of Jefferson, Greene county). Mrs. Dunn's home was in Jefferson, where she attended college and graduated.

WILLIAM RUSSELL is a prominent and influential member of a pioneer family, the first of whom to settle in Washington county being Abraham Russell, who was born in Ireland, and came to America soon after the war of the Revolution. He married in this country, and became one of the earliest settlers of Smith township, this county, at a time when the Indians were yet troublesome to the white pioneers. He was a successful farmer, and served his country in the war of 1812, and died at an advanced age, leaving the following children who lived to adult age: William (mentioned elsewhere in this record), James and John (twins, the latter deceased in Allegheny county, Penn.) and Nancy (wife of Jacob Drake, a farmer of Armstrong county, Penn.).

James Russell (a son of Abraham) was born and reared on his father's farm in Smith township, assisting his father both with the farm work and in distilling, which was then a common vocation among the farmers. About 1819 he was married to Rachel, daughter of Abraham Scott, and children were born to them as follows: Abraham, Jane (who died of cancer at the age of twenty-eight years), Samuel (living in Guernsey county, Ohio), Sarah (widow of William Aten), James (of Beaver county, Penn.), Mary (Mrs. Alexander McConnell, of the town of Beaver, Penn.), William (subject of this sketch) and Margaret (deceased wife of Lorenzo Cohen). Mr. and Mrs. James Russell passed their married life in Robinson township, this county, both living to a good old age. Like his ancestors before him, he was an excellent citizen, steady and industrious, winning and retaining the respect of his neighbors. Politically he was a Democrat, deeply interested in the success of his party. His widow survived him ten years, and was then laid to rest by his side.

William Russell (the subject of this biography) was born February 23, 1830, in Robinson township, this county, and began work on the farm as soon as he was old enough to be useful. On October 20, 1859, he was married to Rebecca Gordon, who was born in 1837, a daughter of David Gordon, of Robinson township, this county, and they have had the following children: James, Rachel, David M. (a farmer living on the home farm in Robinson township), Alice J. and William M. William Russell and his wife first settled on the home farm which he yet owns, and resided upon till 1885. He then came to Smith township, locating on the fertile farm of 170 acres which he is now occupying, situated near the headwaters of Raccoon creek, about three and a half miles south of Burgettstown, this county. In 1892 Mr. Russell erected a handsome residence which adds to the value and beauty of his property. He has always been a successful farmer and careful financier; he raises the best quality of stock, such as Black-Top sheep, Durham cattle and Poland-China hogs. In politics he is a Democrat, but votes for the man rather than the party, and in religion he and his wife are members of Cross Creek Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM H. FRAZIER, a worthy representative of one of the oldest and most prominent families in the county, comes of Highland-Scotch descent, his great-grandfather, Andrew Frazier, the first of the family to come to this country, having been born in Inverness, Scotland.

Andrew Frazier married, in his native land, Christina Ross, and in 1772 came with his family to the United States, making his first settlement in Chartiers township, this county, where he remained some years, and then purchased a farm in what is now West Finley township, same county, which piece of land, some four hundred acres in extent, was at that time nearly all unbroken forest. The children born to this worthy old pioneer were David, Alexander, Daniel, Elizabeth (Mrs. William McDonald) and Nancy (Mrs. John Echols). The parents of this family died in West Finley township, at advanced ages, having experienced all the trials and hardships incident to the early times of their coming here. They were members of the old "Three Ridges" Presbyterian Church, and in politics Mr. Frazier was a Democrat.

David Frazier, grandfather of William H. Frazier, was born in 1779, in Washington county, Penn., and the days of his boyhood and youth were passed on his father's farm in Finley township, a few weeks in the winter season being devoted to attending the primitive subscription schools of the neighborhood. While yet a young man he was married to Jane Ross, of Finley, and then purchased a farm in that township, where he passed the rest of his days, diligently and successfully engaged in general agriculture. He had in early life studied civil engineering, which he followed to some extent in the county. To David and Jane (Ross) Frazier were born seven children, as follows: Thomas, Margaret, Andrew B., Jane (Mrs. Daniel McCoy), Christina O. (Mrs. Perry E. Whitam), William and Alfred Ross, all now deceased except Andrew B., who is a Presbyterian minister in Bethany, Ill. The father died in 1839, the mother in 1866. They were members and liberal supporters of the Presbyterian Church at West Alexander. Politically, Mr. Frazier was a Democrat, and held many offices of honor and trust in his township, being a leader in his community. He was elected to the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, serving one term with marked ability, and he was a justice of the peace many years, in which capacity he was looked up to as a just man and a peacemaker. His walk through life was quiet, unobtrusive and Christian-like.

Thomas Frazier, the eldest son of David, was born in 1810 in that portion of Finley township now known as West Finley, and his early life was spent in Canonsburg, same county, where he was partly educated. He also attended the West Alexander Academy for a time, and then entered Jefferson College, where he graduated about the year 1831. He was twice married: On the first occasion, in 1839, to Nancy, daughter of William Hall, of West Alexander, by which union there were four children: William H. David (in New Mexico), Agnes (wife of J. W. Blayney, and residing in Washington, Penn.), and one that died in infancy. The mother of this family dying in 1862. Mr. Frazier married in 1865, for his second wife, Barbara, daughter of John McDonald. After his first marriage Mr. Frazier embarked in mercantile business in West Alexander, where he remained some years, and then moved to New Concord, Ohio, where he continued business in the same line. This he sold out after two years, and then returned to his native township, where he purchased a farm and followed agricultural pursuits, including stock raising, until 1869, in which year he moved to the borough of West Alexander, where he lived a retired life until his death which occurred September 17, 1877. His widow still survives him. He practiced civil engineering and surveying for a time, and he it was who surveyed the West Alexander cemetery, where his remains now repose. He was a lifelong Democrat, and filled many prominent local positions of trust with characteristic care and integrity, and for the office of justice of the peace, to which he was twice elected. He evinced peculiar aptness. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

William H. Frazier, the subject proper of this memoir, was born April 9, 1840, in the borough of West Alexander, Washington Co., Penn., at the common schools of which place he received his rudimentary education, afterward attending the McCluskey Academy. In 1870 he embarked in the grocery business at Bellaire, Ohio, in which he continued seven years, and then moved to West Alexander, where he has since remained. On February 12, 1889, he was married to K. R., daughter of W. H. Johnson, of Wheeling, W. Va. Politically he is a Democrat, and during President Cleveland's administration he was appointed postmaster at West Alexander, serving the incumbency four years. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church at West Alexander, and is a much respected citizen.

JOHAN HERRON, a prosperous and progressive resident of Washington county, is a son of Joseph Herron, whose father, James Herron, was brought with his father's family to America at an early day.

James Herron was born in County Down, Ireland, and remained there during his boyhood, coming to America in the latter part of the eighteenth century. He located in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., on the farm now owned by his grandson, James. In early life he was married to Rachel Reed, a resident of Ohio, and children were born to them as follows: Charles, John, William, James, Robert, John, Joseph, Thomas and Rachel. In politics Mr. Herron was an active member of the Democratic party, and in religion was connected with the Seceder Church.

Joseph Herron, son of James and Rachel (Reed) Herron, was born January 2, 1797, on the home farm in North Strabane township, and received his education at the subscription schools. On January 3, 1824, he was united in marriage with Margaret, daughter of Daniel Hastings, of Somerset township, and the young couple settled on the home farm, upon which, in 1850, Mr. Herron erected a handsome brick residence, now occupied by his son James. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Herron were Rachel, born December 15, 1824; Robert, born September 30, 1826; James, born September 18, 1828; John, born August 20, 1830; Sarah (Mrs. Jonathan Peese), born April 22, 1833; Joseph, born December 8, 1834; Margaret A. (Mrs. Robert Munnell), born October 4, 1837; and Elizabeth (Mrs. John B. Herron), born October 6, 1842. Politically Mr. Herron was a Democrat, and served as judge of elections and school director; he was a lieutenant in the militia, and in religious connection was a member and trustee of the Seceder Church, toward which he was a liberal supporter. He died January 25, 1852, his widow on March 18, 1854, and both were buried in the Pigeon Creek U. P. cemetery.

John Herron was born August 20, 1830, in North Strabane township, this county, and passed his earlier youth on the farm, where he received a common-school education. He was married October 20, 1862, to Catherine, daughter of Samuel Munnell, and their children are Calvin, William B., Robert S., Edward J., Charles M., John W. and Ray G. Mr. Herron enjoys the esteem of all his neighbors and acquaintances, having won a well-merited success by his own efforts. He is an active worker in the Democratic party, and for several years has been a member of the school board of South Strabane township, giving his aid and influence to the promotion of improvements in the schools. He is equally interested in religious matters, and assists in the support and management of the United Presbyterian Church at Mount Pleasant, in which he is an elder, and of which he is a devoted member. He is the owner of a well-improved farm, provided with comfortable and handsome buildings.

RS. WILSON is a representative of an early family of Washington county. He is a grandson of Alexander and Betsey (McGibboney) Wilson, natives of eastern Pennsylvania, who came to Washington county and made a permanent settlement in Chartiers township, where their son John was born.

John Wilson was born in 1776, on the pioneer farm in Chartiers township, and in early manhood was there married to Margaret Smith, who was born in Ireland, and immigrated with her parents to America when but a child. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Wilson settled permanently in Somerset township, Washington county. He was drafted and served in the war of 1812. In politics he was a member of the Democratic party, and in religion he and his wife were members of the old Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church. He died in 1850, followed ten years later by his wife, who had borne him children, as follows: James (living in Indiana), Elizabeth (Mrs. Jacob Yant, deceased in 1888, in Ohio) Hannah (wife of Emery Leyda, deceased in August, 1891, in Somerset township), Mary Jane (Mrs. John Messenger, of Somerset township), Margaret (who died in 1890, in Allegheny, wife of Andrew Atkinson, of Pittsburgh), John W. (living in Somerset township), Harvey (residing at Vanceville, Somerset township), R. S. (whose sketch follows), Sarah Ann (Mrs. Hiram Myer, of Somerset township), Isabelle (wife of William Milligan, of Gastonville, Penn.), Rachel (deceased in 1856), and Martha (wife of Samuel Wright, of Somerset township).

R. S. Wilson was born June 26, 1834, in Somerset township, Washington county, where he grew to manhood, receiving a district school education. In 1858 he was united in marriage with Susan, daughter of Simon and Rebecca (Crawford) Wilson, all of whom were born in Fallowfield township, this county. Her father died in 1863, followed by the mother in 1867. After his marriage R. S. Wilson resided in Somerset township until 1880, when he bought and moved upon 117 acres in Fallowfield township. He is a member of the Democratic party, and has served as road supervisor and also as a member of the school board. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are: John, who was married in 1890 to Lydia Weddle, and is now living in McKeesport, Allegheny Co., Penn.; Elmer Ellsworth, residing at Lock No. 4, who was married July 4, 1883, to Laura Province; Florence, wife of A. McGowan, of Lock No. 4, and Bertha, wife of West Piper, living at Charleroi, this county.

OLIVER P. SHIELDS, a well-known merchant and prosperous citizen of Florence, Penn., is of Irish descent. His grandparents were natives of the Emerald Isle, and John Shields (the grandfather) was a tavern-keeper along the Frankfort road in Hanover township in early days. When a young man he had married Ann Murphy, and their children were: Andrew, Robert, Hugh and William H.

William H. Shields was born June 13, 1813, and learned the trade of a plasterer, also working at shoemaking. On April 3, 1839, he was married to Sarah Martha Holmes, who was born December 23, 1816, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Boyce) Holmes, of Smith township. The following children were born to their union: Oliver P., Carrie (Mrs. Robert McCullough, of Hanover township), James (deceased in youth) and William (who died in Wellsville, Ohio, at the age of thirty-five years). The parents began their wedded life at Bulger Station, Smith township, this county, where he followed his trade. In 1850 he went to California during the "gold fever" excitement, where he remained a few years, and then returned to Bulger Station. In 1859 he came to a farm in Hanover township, and in 1863 moved to Florence, Penn. He died July 2, 1881, his wife surviving him until May 28, 1890, when she was laid by the side of her husband. In politics Mr. Shields was a Democrat, taking an active interest in the political issues of the day, and both he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church, in which he was a trustee.

Oliver P. Shields was born June 13, 1840, in Bulger, Washington Co., Penn. On May 15, 1878, he was married to Mary McConnell, who was born March 30, 1850, a daughter of John and Sarah (Morrison) McConnell, of Hanover township. Five children have been born to the union of Oliver P. and Mary Shields, namely: Sally M., Lee M., Walker F., John O., and a daughter who died in infancy. Some time previous to his marriage Oliver P. Shields had been a clerk in the store of Robert Scott, of Florence, Penn., then entered the establishment of James Cleland, in the same town. In 1874 he began business for himself, and has since followed mercantile pursuits, each year increasing both stock and custom, until he now has an excellent general store, in the best business room of Florence. Politically, he may be called—to use a political term—a "wheel-horse" of the Democratic party, and has served as justice of the peace, and in several other offices. Both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, in which he has served in various capacities.

ALLEXANDER W. GALBRAITH. Among the prosperous agriculturists and leading stock dealers of East Pike Run township, this gentleman is a prominent figure. He is a son of William Galbraith, who was born in 1812, in Ireland, and came with his parents to America when about twelve years of age. He had one brother—Robert, who married a Miss Smith—and one sister, who was married to a Mr. Shaw and lived in Ohio. He also had a half-brother—Thomas McBeath—who married and lived in Ohio. William Galbraith learned and followed the boat-building business for many years, but has devoted the latter part of his life to farming. He has been twice married, first time to Nancy Fry, who bore him five children, as follows: (1) Robert, who was twice married, first to a Miss Redd and afterward to a Miss Reynolds; by his first marriage he had children as follows: Isaac, who married Miss Nesbit, Charles and an infant (both deceased); by his second marriage he has five children. (2) Noah, married to a Miss Wilson, and now lives in Delaware county, Ohio. (3) William (now deceased). (4) Cornelia, wife of William Walker, a resident of Kentucky. (5) Emmeline, married Frank Williams, and died in October, 1880; they had five children: Maggie (married to W. Sphar), Aaron, Samuel, Nancy and George A. Linn, the last named having been born July 4, 1880. Mrs. Nancy (Fry) Galbraith died many years ago, and Mr. Galbraith afterward married Mary Hill, by whom he had the following children: Samuel, Elizabeth, John, Alexander W., Mary F. (wife of J. Mozier), Thomas M., Dr. Stephen A. B., Etta, and one that died in infancy; of whom Elizabeth and Dr. Stephen A. B. are deceased. Of this family Elizabeth married Albert Wickerham, and died in June, 1890; they had the following children: Jennie, Robert, Nancy, Mary F. (married to John Mozier, June 5, 1889, and has two children: John Thomas and Lucinda). Dr. Stephen A. B. graduated at Washington and Jefferson College, 1886, graduated at Washington and Jefferson Medical College, 1889, died December 3, 1889. William Galbraith is a representative agriculturist of Carroll township. Politically he is an active worker in the ranks of the Democratic party, and has served as township clerk, assessor and school director, as well as in various other positions of trust. Mrs. Galbraith is a member of the Presbyterian Church of Monongahela.

The ancestry of Mrs. Mary (Hill) Galbraith can be traced back some five generations. Gideon Hill, maternal great-great-grandfather of Alexander W. Galbraith, came from England, and the great-grandfather, John Hill, located near where Lancaster, Penn., now stands, and where he lived till some time in 1774 or 1775, when he moved to west of the mountains, to Fort Pitt (now Pittsburgh). He was there offered in exchange for a black horse five acres, forming the point between the Monongahela and Allegheny rivers; but he concluded there was no money in property thereabouts, so moved to Somerset township, and obtained a patent for a tract of land, "Government reserving all gold and silver ore," but saying nothing about oil and gas. This patent is dated 1778, and is now in the possession of our subject's uncle, Dr. S. E. Hill, of the same township. Greer McIlvaine, grandfather of Judge McIlvaine, owned the adjoining land, and these were the first settlers to locate in Somerset township. Dr. Hill has some relics of the past in the shape of an old conch shell or horn that used to be blown to scare wolves away: a clock that has been in the family five generations, is still going and keeping good time; also a blue dish about as old as the clock. Grandfather Hill was married February 15, 1815, to Elizabeth Woodrow, a native of near Shippensburg, Penn., and a relative of Judge Black, of the same place, or near there; Mary (Hill) (mother of subject), born March 5, 1825, and Dr. S. E. Hill, of Smithville, are the only ones living of the family of nine children born to this union, who were as follows: Abner, John and Mary, Rachel Jane, Samuel, William, Martha, Stephen A. and Elizabeth; of these Martha and Elizabeth died in infancy. Dr. S. E. Hill married, December 10, 1869, Miss Sadie E. Long, of Pittsburgh, daughter of T. H. Long, and their family are: Pauline, Pearl and Zoe. Grandfather Hill and his father kept store when salt was $8 to $10 per bushel, and whisky was 35 cents per gallon; the salt was carried on pack saddles from east of the mountains. His father was one of the first members of Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church in the days of Dr. McMillan, Dr. Brown and others, when preaching was conducted in tents, and the men were wont to go to church with their rifles for protection against the Indians. He and his son (when the latter was a young man) were the contractors for the building of the old stone church, Mr. John Atkinson being the carpenter. The same stones used for this church are now under the brick one erected near the same place, and in which services are at present held by Rev. Gilson. Gideon Hill was the second man buried in the present cemetery where there are now hundreds sleeping their last sleep. In old papers Pigeon creek was spelled "Pidgeon" creek.

Alexander W. Galbraith, the subject proper of this sketch, was born November 11, 1854, in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn. He received a liberal education at the common schools of the vicinity of his place of birth, assisting, in the meantime, in the various duties pertaining to the home farm. On February 6, 1884, he was united in marriage with Oella Bedall, a native of the county, born October 4, 1855, a daughter of John M. and Eliza J. (Jones) Bedall, both of whom were born in 1824, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., the father on August 7, the mother on November 1. They were married January 25, 1855, and two children were born to them, viz.: Clara J. (of whom mention is made farther on) and Oella (wife of Alexander W. Galbraith). Mrs. Alexander W. Galbraith's father was a lifelong farmer and stock raiser, and was very successful in business affairs.

Joseph Bedall, grandfather of Oella Galbraith, was born in New Jersey November 10, 1777, and died May 16, 1838. He came to Washington county when a young man and his brothers known to have come with him to this county were James (who lived and died on the farm owned by J. Keys Bedall (a grandson) in Fallowfield township), Levi (who owned the farm, now in possession of J. P. Duvall, at the time of his death, where he spent most of his lifetime) and Benjamin (who was a resident of Washington county, and was never married). There were also two sisters, of whom no accurate account can be given. Joseph Bedall married Sarah McCutchen, who was born December 18, 1788, and died November 20, 1844, married May 2, 1816, and they settled on the farm known as the "Bedall Homestead;" they had five children, viz.: (1) Mary Bedall, born February 24, 1817, died April 24, 1860; (2) an infant, born June 28, 1818, died October 15, 1818; (3) Eliza Jane, born October 25, 1819, died January 20, 1851, married Joseph Morton, and both are deceased; (4) Hester, born April 26, 1822, died March 21, 1851; (5) John McCutchen, born August 7, 1824, died November 24, 1880. Hugh McCutchen, the father of Sarah McCutchen Bedall, emigrated to this country at an early date from Ireland. He was a merchant by occupation, and part of his book accounts are kept in pounds, shillings and pence, one of the dates being June 12, 1781. He married Jane McCutchen, who was of Scotch descent, and they had six children, of whom we have record of five: (1) Mary, married to William Baker, of East Pike Run township, and their children were as follows: Cassandra and Jane (deceased), Ellen (wife of William Young; they reside in Kansas); (2) Sarah, married to Joseph Bedall; (3) Jane, never married; (4) Samuel, married to Melinda Furnier (they had two children, James Shannon and Sarah Jane); (5) James, married to Jane Springer and lived near Tiffin, Ohio.

Clara J. (Bedall) Chalfant, sister of Oella Galbraith, was born February 8, 1859, and married October 12, 1882, to C. A. Chalfant, who was born March 22, 1854, a son of Dr. H. S. Chalfant, of East Pike Run township. They have two children: Mary L., born February 10, 1886, and John Switzer, born May 5, 1891. They reside on the old Bedall homestead in Fallowfield township, where Mr. Chalfant is engaged in raising sheep, horses and cattle. He votes the Republican ticket, and takes an interest in all public matters; he and his wife are members of the Ebenezer M. E. Church.

JONES FAMILY. William Jones sailed from the port of Baltimore in 1769 (his son William being then six years old), and the vessel was never afterward heard from. The son, William Jones, was born May 3, 1763, at Ellicott's Mills, Md., and died March 14, 1863. He was married April 23, 1789, to Elizabeth McClung, who was born November 24, 1769, and died January 27, 1829. About 1791 they emigrated from Maryland to Washington county, Penn., near Ginger Hill, six miles from Monongahela, where they settled on a farm on which they passed the remainder of their days, and which farm is still owned by a son, William McKendree Jones. They had twelve children, viz.: (1) John Jones, born in Maryland May 23, 1790, died July 16, 1875; was twice married, first time to Rachel Frew; second time to Margaret Blaine, who was born October 12, 1805, and died October 29, 1890. By his first marriage he had the following children: William, married to Miss West; James, married to a Miss Cleaver; Elizabeth, married to David Ritchie; Joseph, married to a Miss Watkins; David, married to Miss Phillips; Samuel V. Cook (deceased), married to Miss Gregg; Mary, married to Manuel Stooddy. By his second marriage Mr. Jones had two children: Rachel and Jennie. (2) Elijah Jones, born in Maryland, November 20, 1791, died June 15, 1855; was married to Mary Warren, and their children were William, married to a Miss Frye; Eliza Jane, married to John M. Bedall; Margaret, married to John S. Carson; James, married to a Miss Van Voorhis; Wesley, married in the West; Isaac, married to a Miss McIlvaine; Noah, married to a Miss Frye. (3) Mary Jones, born November 1, 1793, died August 15, 1856, married March 8, 1819, to Joseph Alexander, who was born April 1, 1795. (4) Ruth Jones, born September 4, 1795, died January 22, 1892. (5) Delilah Jones, born February 14, 1797, died July 22, 1882; married to James Mills, who was born in 1801, died May 23, 1878, and their children were William (deceased); Andrew Bascom, died May 14, 1888, married to — Deering; Mary, married to a Mr. Dalby; Rebecca, married to Rev. Dr. Watkins; James, married; Charles S.; Wilbur Fisk, married. (6) Jesse Jones, born December 24, 1798, died February 11, 1888, married Eleanor Frew, and their children were Alexander (deceased); Jackson (married to Miss Black); Elizabeth, married to Rev. Mr. Snyder; Charles, married; Carrie B., married; Nancy, married to a Mr. Rankins (now deceased); Jesse, died June 21, 1888; Ellen, married to Mr. McDonald, now deceased; others have been lost sight of in the West. (7) Samuel Jones, born August 25, 1800, accidentally killed June 14, 1867; was twice married, first time to Jane Fell, and for his second wife to Mary Thomas; the children by his first wife were William, married to a Miss Sheplar; S. Fell, married to a Miss Thomas; Mary, married to a Dr. Watkins, both deceased; and James, married to a Miss Finley. By the second marriage Mr. Jones had children as follows: Elizabeth, Melissa, Retta, Amanda, Homer, Luther, John and Celia. (8) Rebecca Jones, born March 8, 1802, died July 3, 1838; married Andrew Mills, and they had one child, James Mills, editor of the Pittsburgh Post, who married Elvira Alexander. (9) Rose Ann Jones, born May 4, 1804, died in September, 1870; married Francis Hull Williams, and their children were Elizabeth (married to Greer McIlvaine), Elmira, John W., William, David, James and Harvey. (10) Elizabeth Jones, born January 15, 1806, died in September, 1830; married James McCauley, and their children were Ann Eliza and Mary. (11) Ann Jones, born April 22, 1808, died June 30, 1889; married John Hess, born in 1818, died in 1883, and their children were John, Elizabeth, Westley, Alcinous, Amanda and Maggie. (12) William McKendree Jones, born October 29, 1809, married Sarah Fulmer, who died in 1886; their children were Leonidas, Mary, Edward, James Mills, Margaret, Kate, Snyder, Albert, Florence and Rose.

The children born to (2) Elijah and Mary (Warren) Jones were as follows: (1) William, born in Fallowfield township, married Miss Eliza Jane Fry, and afterward moved to Brighton, Washington Co., Iowa, and still resides there; their children are as follows: Samuel W., married to Rachel, daughter of Manuel Stoodly, of this county; Mary, married to Mr. William Hide, of Washington county, Iowa; Henry, married to Miss McCain; Irilla Jane, married; Amy, married to Mr. Johnson; Josephine, married; Della (now deceased), married to Mr. Hedge. (2) Eliza Jane, married to John McCutchen Bedall, as already mentioned. (3) Margaret, married to John S. Carson, both deceased (their children were eleven in number, as follows: Isaac, married to Miss Fry; Cornelius, married to Miss Bezell; John C. (now deceased), married to Miss Raymond; Henry, married, to Miss Furnier; Robert F., married to Miss Odvert; Mary Elizabeth, deceased; Van Curtis, deceased; Margaret M., married to I. N. Carson; Caroline Jane (now deceased), married to J. W. Carson; Noah T., married to Miss Sprowls; and Joseph, married to Miss Greenlee). (4) John Wesley, married to Jane Davison, in Logan county, Ohio, and now living near Linneus, Linn Co., Mo.; they have nine children, viz.: Margaret J., married to George Hide, of Brighton, Iowa; Arabelle, married to a Mr. Watterhouse, in Iowa; Ella, married to a Mr. Hossiek; James, married and living in Iowa; John C., living near Linneus, Mo.; Annie Neal, also living near Linneus, Mo.; Helen, Hester and Isaac Willfred (unmarried and living at home). (5) James Jones (now deceased) married Miss Van Voorhis and had children. (6) Noah, married to Mary Frye, and their children are nine in number, as follows: John T. K., married to Miss Gamble; Florence C., married to Miss Bradley, in Missouri; Annie M., married to Mr. Huffman; Mortimore, married to Miss Huffman (now deceased); Eunice, married to Warren Gibson; and Frank, Bert, Noah King, Lilley, all four unmarried. (7) Isaac Warren, married to Mary Agnes McIlvaine; their children are as follows: Dora B., married to William Morrow; William, unmarried; Isaac L., married to Miss Rettig; McIlvaine, Harry and Mary A., all three unmarried.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander W. Galbraith reside on 222 acres of well-cultivated land in East Pike Run township, upon which a pleasant dwelling was erected in 1888, and a frame barn 46x60 feet, completed in 1892. He is extensively engaged in raising sheep, horses and cattle. Politically he votes the Democratic ticket, and he takes an interest in public matters. He and his wife are members of the Ebenezer M. E. Church. They have one son, Wilbur, born August 12, 1891.

ALEXANDER GAULT. The prominent and representative family, of which this gentleman was a member, are influential citizens of Nottingham township. Alexander Gault was born in 1797, on a farm in Washington county, Penn., where his youth was passed in the usual duties of farm life. On December 8, 1825, he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Wilson, who bore him five children, namely: James, Edith, Sarah (deceased), John W. (who enlisted in Company K, P. V. Cavalry, and died in the service December 7, 1862) and Alexander (deceased). The mother of these children died, and Mr. Gault was afterward married to Jane Flack, who was born in 1807. The children of this marriage were as follows: Robert, Mary J. and Addie, of whom Addie is the only one yet living. The father owned about one hundred and fifty acres of land. He died in 1872, followed by the mother February 15, 1887. Of the children now living, James owns a part of the old place, and two unmarried daughters (Edith and Addie) each own and manage 100 acres of the old homestead.

GM. STRINGER. This enterprising citizen is a native of Fayette county, Penn., son of John and Mary (Brown) Stringer. The father was a prominent farmer and lifelong citizen of Fayette county, Penn., where he passed his entire life, and died in 1874 at the age of sixty-seven years.

G. M. Stringer was born in 1818 on the farm in Fayette county, Penn., and in early manhood came to Washington county. He was a hard-working and economical young man, and was soon enabled to purchase a small tract of land in Carroil township. He now owns seventy-six acres of very fine land, upon which many improvements have been made. In early life he was united in marriage with Delilah Sprowls, who bore him the following children: Mary E., who died June 6, 1880, at the age of thirty-one years; Louisa, deceased July 25, 1867, aged twenty; William, residing in Oregon; Elmira, deceased; Eliza, deceased; and Mary, wife of John Williamston, living in Ohio. The mother of this family was called "over the river" June 18, 1876, when in her fifty-fourth year. Mr. Stringer is a member of the Republican party, and in religious faith is connected with the Lutheran Church.

WILLIAM A. McCLAY, one of the representative citizens of Canton township, was born September 9, 1846, on the farm now occupied by his brother, J. F. McClay.

His grandfather, Samuel McClay, was a native of Ireland, and immigrating to America when a child of ten years, finally settled in Chester county, Penn., and there married Sarah McClellan, a resident of the same county, whose parents had also immigrated to America. Mr. and Mrs. McClay afterward removed from Chester to Washington county, where he bought and with the aid of his children began work upon a large tract of land. The children born to this union were: Margaret (Mrs. Robert Dinsmore), Elizabeth (Mrs. William Morrow), John, David, Robert, William and Sarah Jane. The entire family were active and zealous members of the Covenantant Church, and a majority of their descendants are true to the faith of their ancestors. In politics, Mr. McClay was active to the interests of the Whig party. After an eventful and useful life he died in 1838, his wife following him to the grave in 1842, leaving a comfortable property to their heirs.

David McClay, father of subject, was born June 11, 1811, on the home farm in Canton township, this county, where his youth was passed amid the rudest of pioneer surroundings, his education consisting of hard lessons in the school of toil and privation, but, when thoroughly mastered, those lessons proved of greater value to the young pioneer than does much of our "cramming methods" benefit the modern student. By dint of close observation and practical common sense, Mr. McClay soon surmounted these early obstacles to success, and became a prosperous and well-informed man. On January 31, 1840, he married Margaret McElroy, and settled upon the farm now owned by his son, J. F., where the following children were born: James (deceased in infancy), James (who enlisted in the W. Va. Cavalry, and died February 25, 1862, from disease contracted in the service), William A., Nannie (deceased), Samuel, David (deceased) and J. F. Mr. McClay was, in politics, an active Republican; in 1855 he united with the U. P. Church at West Middletown, then under the ministry of Isaac Everett, but later he became a member of the church at Washington. He died April 5, 1887, leaving to his heirs about four hundred acres of land.

William A. McClay, the oldest living son of David McClay, passed his earlier years on the home farm in Canton township, this county, receiving a limited education, but as he possesses a retentive memory, and is an indefatigable reader, he has, notwithstanding the privations of youth, become one of the most intelligent men in his township. On May 19, 1869, Mr. McClay was married to Annie, daughter of Jonathan Swisher, a prosperous farmer of Putnam county, Ill., and the young couple immediately settled on the home place, where they have since resided. After the death of his father Mr. McClay and his three brothers divided the property among themselves without recourse to legal aid—an excellent example—and William still retains the portion allotted him, to which he has made many fine improvements. The house is of the "L" style, 36x32. The barn, which was erected with only the assistance of his children, is a commodious structure, and the well-cultivated farm affords still another evidence of the thrift and enterprise of the owner. The union of Mr. and Mrs. McClay has been blessed with three children: Harry, William and Elmer. In politics Mr. McClay is the staunchest of Republicans, and for many years has filled the office of judge of elections in his township. The family are liberal supporters and earnest members of the Disciple Church at Washington, and are ever foremost in all enterprises pertaining to the welfare of the people.

CHARLES HOWARD TRUSSELL, a prosperous, wide-awake farmer, is a representative of one of the oldest and most prominent families of Franklin township, where he was born June 25, 1848.

His grandfather, Charles Trussell, was of Virginian birth, born near Harper's Ferry, where the family had resided many years. Before leaving his native State he was married to Sarah Fleming, a resident of the same place, and soon thereafter the young couple came to this county, making a settlement in the western part, having cut for themselves a home in the forest wilds, where they passed the remainder of their lives in unremitting, patient toil and hardship. They were consistent members of the Baptist Church. Their family were: Manson (deceased), Paden, Elizabeth (married to John Brownlee), Margaret (Mrs. John Henderson, of Claysville), Ann (deceased), Jane (married to Nelson Sprowls), William (in Kansas), John (in Dallas, Va.) and Charles H.

Charles H. Trussell, father of Charles Howard, was born October 15, 1822, in Marietta, Ohio, where he was reared to agricultural pursuits and educated in the schools of the neighborhood. On September 10, 1845, he was married to Lydia, daughter of Joshua Dickerson, of Franklin township, and here spent the remainder of their lives, Mr. Trussell dying January 15, 1849. Mrs. Trussell now lives in Claysville. He was a lifelong, ardent Whig, and a man of strong but generous opinions. He was the father of two children: Charles Howard and Joshua D., the latter of whom was educated at Washington and Jefferson College, where he graduated, since when he has been engaged in teaching, and he is now principal of the Claysville public schools; in 1880 he was wedded to Hattie Selby, of Buffalo township, who has borne him one child, Howard L.

Charles Howard Trussell passed his life chiefly at the home of his grandfather, Joshua Dickerson, on the farm where he now lives. He was early inducted into the mysteries of agriculture, and has managed a farm with signal success ever since coming of age. On November 2, 1871, he was married to Sarah (daughter of John Finley, of East Finley township, who is now eighty-two years old), and soon thereafter they settled in their present home in Franklin township, the farm having been greatly improved by him since coming to it. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Trussell are: Clara Edna, Mary Matilda and Lewis B. The entire family are members of the Presbyterian Church at East Buffalo. In politics Mr. Trussell is an intelligent Republican (as is also his brother, Joshua D.), and has always taken an active part in educational developments in his section.

JARRETT COVENTRY. Prominently identified among the representative and substantial farmers of Hanover township, stands the gentleman whose name opens this sketch.

His ancestors were natives of Ireland, the land which has given to America many of our best families, among whom is the name of Coventry.

John Coventry was born in 1750, in County Donegal, Ireland, where he learned the trade of a weaver, and when a young man was married to Martha Brown, who was born in 1754. Some years after their marriage this young couple sailed to America, and after landing and securing a temporary home, their household effects were moved thence in a churn, the only child living being carried by the parents. John Coventry joined the Continental army, taking an active part in the struggle for Independence, and undergoing the terrible sufferings which were the common lot of those heroic patriots. Long and difficult marches were made, their only food consisting of cold potatoes. After the war money was scarce, and the most common articles sold for fabulous prices. A little dress which was purchased for a son cost $60 in Continental currency. In 1782 John Coventry and family concluded to secure one of the cheap homes offered to the settlers in western Pennsylvania, and packing up their few earthly possessions, started on foot to make the long and tedious journey across the mountains. The hardships which they endured can scarcely be imagined, yet on they toiled, carrying the little son Robert, who was at that time about two years of age. At last they arrived in Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn., and, purchasing a small piece of land, erected their rude log cabin in the midst of the surrounding woods; there Mr. Coventry followed his trade of a weaver in connection with farming. This cabin was soon supplanted by one more substantial, which is yet standing. With true Irish enterprise and industry, John Coventry struggled on, and prosperity finally crowned his patient efforts. When the need of a permanent piece of ground for a schoolhouse became apparent, he gave the necessary amount of land to be used for ninety-nine years, and the building which was thereon erected has ever since been known as the "Coventry School." In politics he was a Democrat, adhering closely to the principles of his chosen party. He and his wife were members of the Seceder Church, which was nearly ten miles from their house, and they walked the entire distance. A church was afterward organized at Burgettstown, to which their membership was then transferred. John Coventry died February 5, 1845, in his ninety-fifth year, and was laid to rest by the side of the wife who had gone before him April 8, 1832. Both were buried in the U. P. cemetery at Burgettstown. The following children were born to this heroic couple: Robert (deceased in Hanover township), William, James (of whom a sketch follows), John (a school teacher, who lived some time in Steubenville, Ohio, thence moving to New Philadelphia, Ohio, where some of his descendants are yet living), Jane (deceased), Elizabeth (deceased wife of William Smiley) and Martha (deceased).

James Coventry, son of John and Martha (Brown) Coventry, was born in Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn., on the farm where his father first located, there passing his early youth in attending the country schools. In 1824 he was united in marriage with Letitia Coventry, whose parents were born in Ireland. James and Letitia Coventry were the parents of the following children: Nancy (deceased), Jarrett (whose name opens our sketch), Matilda (Mrs. Joseph Searight, of Allegheny county, Penn.), Mary G. (a maiden lady, of Allegheny county), and John S. (also of Allegheny county). James Coventry resided on the farm now owned by his son, Jarrett, for some time after his marriage, then located near Murdocksville, in Allegheny county, Penn., where he died in 1851 at the age of fifty-seven years, soon followed by his wife. He was a successful farmer, and a conscientious man. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a leading member of the Seceder Church, having been one of the founders of the Robinson U. P. Church.

Jarrett Coventry, son of James and Letitia Coventry, was born in 1827, on the farm which is his present home. When a boy he attended the subscription schools, but being the eldest son was deprived of an opportunity to improve even the meager advantages offered in those primitive halls of learning. He was set to work at plowing when so small that he could scarcely reach the handles, and in early boyhood was doing a man's work. He lived with his parents on the old homestead until they died. On November 11, 1875, he was married to Catherine Malone, a daughter of William and Ruth (Wilson) Malone, and to this union three children have been born, namely: Annie L., John S. (who died in infancy), and James R. Since his marriage Mr. Coventry has made many improvements upon the old homestead, having erected a handsome new residence, barn, and other good buildings. His farm produces a paying quantity of oil. Mr. Coventry is a shrewd, farsighted man, proceeding cautiously and therefore wisely in his business transactions, and has accumulated a good property. He is well and favorably known all over the township. Since 1890 he has lived in retirement from active business. Politically he is an active Democrat, and has held various township offices. Mr. and Mrs. Coventry are consistent members of the Robinson United Presbyterian Church.

JONATHAN EALY, one of the industrious and successful farmers of East Finley township, is a grandson of George Ealy. Henry Ealy, son of George, was born in 1807, in East Finley township, this county, and remained on the farm of his father until twenty-one years of age, when he began life for himself with 25 cents in his pocket, as capital with which to begin the world. He at once engaged in farm work, and by combining industry with energy, soon saved a small sum of money with which he bought a tract of land situated about two miles down the creek from East Finley postoffice, and having paid for this, purchased more. In 1830 he was married to Hannah Barney, of Greene county, Penn., who bore him the following children: Jeremiah (farming in East Finley township), George (deceased), Philip (a successful farmer of Greene county, Penn.), Jonas (a farmer of East Finley township), and Delilah (deceased after marriage). At the time of his death Mr. Ealy owned over 1,200 acres of land, the result of his own industry and enterprise. He died in 1882, having been preceded to the grave by his wife in 1873.

Jonathan Ealy was born July 3, 1844, in East Finley township, Washington Co., Penn., where he received a common-school education, and passed his youth in farming with his father, studying a little with his mother in the evenings. On September 12, 1869, he was married to Nancy Jane Sampson, who was born February 13, 1842, daughter of David Sampson, of East Finley township, and to them were born seven children, five of whom died in infancy; the two still living are Libbens W., born December 12, 1871, and Fanny E., born June 16, 1874. Fanny has had charge of the household since the death of her mother, which occurred March 12, 1890, and Libbens assists on the farm.

Soon after his marriage Mr. Ealy moved to the "old home farm," living there about fifteen years, when he came to his present home, about one mile farther down Gordon's fork of Wheeling creek, on which place he has since resided. Mr. Ealy has been a very successful farmer, and in politics is a Democrat. He is a member of no church, but attends the Fairmount United Brethren Church. His wife was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

JOSEPH M. CLARK, one of the enterprising residents of Franklin township, was born March 19, 1858, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of David Clark, an early resident of the township. Joseph M. Clark passed his early youth on his father's farm and in attending the schools of the neighborhood. On May 11, 1882, he was united in marriage with Caroline L., daughter of J. W. Patterson, and to this union one child has been born, Wiley Patterson Clark. Mr. Clark has always been a Republican, and has taken an active interest in the success of his party. He has served as assistant assessor of the township several years, and discharged the duties of that office to the entire satisfaction of all parties interested. He and his wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Clark is yet a young man, and has before him the promise of a long and prosperous life.

SILAS PRICE is a grandson of Joseph Price, a native of France, who emigrated to America when a young man. After marriage he settled in Washington, Washington Co., Penn., and there remained until his death.

William Price, son of Joseph, was born in Washington, where he remained until his marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of John Horn, of Buffalo township, when he removed to a farm where he passed the remainder of a useful and successful life. He was the father of three children: William W., Ansodon and Silas. Mr. Price was a Republican in politics, and in religion he was an earnest worker in the church. He died February 17, 1863, and his remains rest in Washington cemetery.

Silas Price was born November 24, 1858, in Canton township, Washington Co., Penn. On March 16, 1882, he married Nona, daughter of Benjamin Ramsey, of Franklin township. They have no children. Since he has resided on his present farm Mr. Price has made many improvements, and has erected a handsome dwelling, which displays evidence of excellent taste. In political opinion he is independent, and has been elected to many offices of trust in his township, the duties of which he has discharged in a manner satisfactory to all interested. He is at present road commissioner.

BENJAMIN RAMSEY, a well-known citizen of Franklin township, was born August 2, 1828, on the home place in Washington county. He improved every opportunity for self-culture, and secured a valuable fund of general knowledge. On March 15, 1854, he selected a bride in the person of Priscilla, daughter of Isaac and Nancy (Owens) Carter, whose children were as follows: Elizabeth, wife of John Sunderland; Jane, married to Simeon McClain; Mary, wife of John Jones; William; Lucinda, wife of Benjamin Carson; Margaret, married to Albert Kelsey, and Priscilla, wife of Benjamin Ramsey. The father was a staunch adherent of the Democratic party.

Mr. and Mrs. Ramsey have passed their married life on the place where they are now living in Franklin township, and four children have blessed their union, namely: John W., married to Lydia Mosher; Nona, wife of Silas Price, of Canton township; Frank, and Herbert, who was married to Maude McClellan, of Allegheny county, Penn. They have one son, Harold H. Mr. Ramsey has been an ardent worker in the ranks of the Republican party, and in religion is a member of the M. E. Church, toward which he gives a liberal support.

HENRY S. RITCHEY, a well-known farmer of Buffalo township, is a grandson of William Ritchey, who was a native of Lancaster county, Penn. William Ritchey (father of Henry S.) was born in 1806 in Lancaster county, Penn., on his father's farm, and received his early education in the subscription schools of the period. In early manhood he moved to Ohio, settling near Columbus, but the change proved injurious to his health, and after remaining three years in Ohio he returned in 1830 to Pennsylvania, and located in Washington county. Mr. Ritchey began life as a farm laborer, afterward becoming a renter and cropper. He was married to Sarah, daughter of Henry Smith, whose family were among the earliest pioneers of Washington county. To the union of William and Sarah Ritchey were born four children: Henry S., William, George (living in Morgan county, Ohio) and Mary (deceased). Mr. Ritchey achieved success by his own industry, and at the time of his death, which occurred in 1870, he owned nearly 500 acres of land in Hopewell and Buffalo townships. Mrs. Ritchey is living in Ohio, with her son George.

Henry S. Ritchey was born in 1838 in Hopewell township, Washington Co., Penn., and received a very good education, of which he has made practical use. He was united in marriage with Jennie, daughter of John Reed, of Buffalo township, this county, and two children were born to their union: John and William, both of whom are living at home with their father; their mother died in 1879. Mr. Ritchey's farm consists of 147 acres, upon which he has made many improvements. In politics he is a Republican, and has held various township offices.

WILLIAM B. BRIGGS, a well-known agriculturist of Amwell township, comes of Irish descent, his grandfather, John Briggs, having emigrated from Ireland in 1786, locating in Washington township (now Washington borough), Washington Co., Penn., and here remained thirty years. His children were as follows: John B., Lazarus, Nathaniel, Marguerite (Mrs. Greer), Polly (Mrs. Been), Rachel (Mrs. Been), all now deceased except Mrs. Polly Been. Mr. Briggs had learned no trade, and therefore engaged in any employment he could secure. He died on a farm in Chartiers township, this county, which was owned by David Quail.

Nathaniel Briggs, son of John, was born in Washington borough, Penn., and, being a child of poor parents, was compelled to begin the struggle with life in very early youth, but made his home with his parents until about twenty-one years of age. He was married to Marguerite Been, of Chartiers township, this county (near Allison's Coal Works), and to them were born the following children: James, residing in Washington, Penn.; William B.; John, living in La Salle county, Ill.; Robert, residing in Claysville, Penn.; Mrs. Anna Eliza Gibson (deceased); Alexander (deceased); Samuel (deceased); David and Isaac, residing near Washington, Penn. In politics Mr. Briggs was a Democrat; and in religious connection he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He passed from life December 2, 1868.

William B. Briggs was born February 21, 1830, in Chartiers township, near Washington, this county, and received but three months' schooling during the winter time, in an old log schoolhouse, which was erected on a farm owned by Aaron Miller. He began to carve out his future at the juvenile age of ten years, first working by the month for Jacob Wolfe; he was then employed by Lewis Hawell five years, and afterward worked seven years for William Donelby; then returned home and worked the farm on shares. In 1850 he was married to Emily Haggerty, of Canton township, this county, and they have had eight children, those who survived infancy being Alexander (residing in Ohio), Simeon W., Mary Marguerite, Washington, John (deceased) and Newton. Mr. Briggs has a pleasant home and nice farm of 106 acres in Amwell township, which he has secured by hard labor, having been the sole architect of his own fortune. In political opinion he is a Democrat. He and his family have been members of the Presbyterian Church for thirty years.

JOHAN CROUCH is a worthy representative of one of the pioneer families of North Strabane township. He is a great-grandson of John Crouch, a native of Maryland, who, in a very early day, came with a colony to what is now North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn. He lived and died on his pioneer home, and was buried on the farm. His son John also passed his entire life on the home farm, and here ten children were born to him. Robert Crouch, the eldest son of John Crouch, was united in marriage with Anna Thomas (whose father, Edmond Thomas, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war), and she bore him three children: James L. (deceased at the age of fifty-eight years), Mary J. (wife of Harvey McVay, of Washington) and John. Mr. Crouch was an active member of the United Presbyterian Church. He died October 10, 1886, and his widow is yet living with her son John. She has also been connected with the Presbyterian Church for many years.

John Crouch, son of Robert Crouch, was born August 19, 1833, on the old farm, and passed his youth at home, attending the country schools of North Strabane township. On January 5, 1854, he was married to Isabella Bebout, who was born April 6, 1834, daughter of Peter Bebout. Mr. Bebout was a native of New Jersey, and coming to Washington county, Penn., was married to Isabella Cooper, a native of Ohio. The children born to this union were as follows: Susan (Mrs. William Bebout), Isabella (wife of John Crouch), Caroline (Mrs. Joseph V. Manes), David, Ira, Herman H., Mary J., Margaret, Joshua, Stephen and Martha J., the last five of whom are deceased. At the age of eighteen years Mr. Bebout walked from New Jersey to Washington county, and settled in North Strabane township. He died in 1861, and his wife followed him to the grave March 6, 1888. They were members of the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. and Mrs. John Crouch are the parents of the following children: Robert C., born October 2, 1859; Alphonso, born January 18, 1861; William H., born July 12, 1863; Laura B. (wife of Alexander Dice), born October 29, 1865; John B., born June 6, 1868; Sadie B., born September 23, 1872; Clarence A., born October 11, 1877; and Nannie M., born April 6, 1878. After marriage Mr. Crouch settled on the old homestead, where he has been engaged in general farming; he owns 100 acres of land in an excellent state of cultivation, and has one good gas well. He is much interested in educational matters, and has served as school director nine years. He and his wife are both members of the old Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church.

ALVIN M. SMITH. This gentleman, who is one of the leading progressive agriculturists of South Strabane township, claims, by reason of his popularity and prominence as a worthy citizen, more than a passing notice in the pages of this work.

He is a grandson of John Smith, a native of England, who when a young man immigrated to America, making a settlement in Pennsylvania, where he married and had two children—one son and one daughter—whom he reared to maturity. From the Keystone State he moved to Ohio, and there carried on a general store in Steubenville, in which town he died. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics was a Democrat.

Ezekiel Smith, father of the subject of these lines, was born in 1824, in the State of Pennsylvania, where he was educated and learned the trade of tailor, which he followed for some years. In 1845 he was married to Miss Mary, daughter of Joseph Miller, of South Strabane township, and the children born to this union were John, Alvin M., Henry and William, the last two being deceased. The father died in Steubenville, Ohio, in 1854, aged thirty years; the mother is still living and in good health. After his death the family came to South Strabane township, this county, and made their home with Joseph Miller, with whom the sons remained until they attained their majority.

Alvin M. Smith was born November 6, 1848, in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn., his education, necessarily limited on account of the early death of his father, being obtained at the public schools of the district. Early in life he commenced work as a common laborer, in South Strabane township, in which vocation he continued some ten years, at the end of which time he rented a farm for three years, in the same township, and then purchased the tract where he now resides, and where he has since been prosperously engaged in agricultural pursuits, a striking example of what may be accomplished by honest toil, unremitting perseverance, sound judgment and unquestioned integrity of purpose. On March 28, 1878, Mr. Smith was married to Harriet, daughter of Adam Beck, of South Strabane township, and the children born to this union are Auna, Harry, Clementina J., one that died in infancy, and John E. (deceased). Politically Mr. Smith is an independent Republican, and in religious faith he is a member of the United Presbyterian Church of Washington. He is a typical, representative self-made man, having risen by his own individual efforts from the bottom rung of the ladder, step by step, until he is now one of the most prosperous men of his township. On his farm was sunk the first well of the famous Smith pool fund, in the year 1886.

JAMES A. STEWART is an honored representative of a family whose name is prominently identified with the early settlement of the county. The early ancestors of these pioneers were natives of Scotland, where John Stewart, grandfather of the present generation, was born and reared. He married a maiden from the "Emerald Isle," and soon afterward came to America. They pushed westward from the Atlantic coast in search of a cheap home, and reaching western Pennsylvania, they found the object of their quest. He located in Cross Creek township, of Washington county, and taking 500 acres of land in the eastern part of the township, erected a log cabin in the wilderness. Amid dangers and hardships John Stewart and his wife began their home, but with the advent of others the Indians retreated, finally crossing the Ohio river. The visits soon grew less frequent, and the development of the country became assured as people continued to come from the populated States. John Stewart was one of those hardy, industrious Scotchmen whose aim in life is to implant the principles of honor and industry into the lives of their children. To Mr. and Mrs. Stewart were born children as follows: John (father of subject), James (who passed his entire life on the home farm), William (moved to Guernsey county, Ohio), Jane (Mrs. Everett, of Ohio), Hester (Mrs. John Thom, who lived on Raccoon creek), Mary (Mrs. Joseph Scott, who moved to Coshocton county, Ohio), (all of whom are now deceased). Mr. Stewart died on the home farm in a ripe old age, after success had begun to crown his years of toil, having been preceded to the grave by his wife.

John Stewart was born in 1788 in Cross Creek township, Washington Co., Penn., on the pioneer farm of his father, and passed his boyhood on the farm, and in attending the subscription schools. In 1818 he was married to Sally Paxton, a native of Maryland, whose parents moved to Washington county when she was a small child. To this union were born the following children: Mary (widow of Robert Liggett), James A. (subject), David M. (a farmer of Cross Creek township), Sarah J. (Mrs. James Smiley, of Cross Creek township), Eliza A. (wife of Wallace Richey, of Hopewell township), John, Nathaniel and Maria, the latter three deceased. Mr. Stewart located on the old home farm in Cross Creek township, and there passed his life. He was a man of unusually fine physique, standing over six feet two inches in his stocking feet, weighing 240 pounds. Sickness was foreign to his nature and a physician was never called to attend him until the illness preceding his death. Nature had also blessed him in an unusual manner by giving him an entire set of double teeth, not a single tooth having been in his head. He was capable of doing an immense amount of work, and always exercised his powers, being an energetic and successful farmer. Politically he was a Democrat, but not a politician. He died in 1860, and in 1868 his widow was laid beside him.

James A. Stewart was born March 15, 1821, in Cross Creek township, Washington Co., Penn., where he received his early education in the subscription schools. This was afterward improved by a course at Wotring's Academy. He then successfully followed the profession of a school teacher for thirteen years, when he began the study of medicine under Dr. Hamilton, of West Middletown, but was compelled to abandon it, owing to failing health. On July 13, 1852, he was united in marriage with Sarah C. Pogue, who was born May 15, 1825, daughter of David Pogue, and she bore him children as follows: David R., John, George, Annie, Mary and Lydia, all of whom are living at home. On account of the physical disability of the father, the sons have charge of the farm, and being energetic and industrious young men, they have the respect and good wishes of the entire community. Mr. Stewart remained in Jefferson township seventeen years after his marriage, and in 1873 came to Independence township and purchased the "Thomas White" farm, lying about two miles northeast of Independence, which is his present home. In politics he is a Democrat, and in religious connection both Mr. and Mrs. Stewart are members of the Bethel M. P. Church.

HENRY SAMPSON, an influential and prosperous farmer of East Finley township, is a grandson of David Sampson, who was born about 1768 in England, where he followed farming several years, afterward immigrating to America and locating near Baltimore, Md. He was married to Nancy Jane —, who was born in 1771, and the following children were born to them: Thomas (deceased in Washington county, Ohio), Laban (deceased in Vinton county, Ohio), Benjamin and Abraham (both deceased in East Finley township, this county), David (father of subject), William (residing in Washington county, Ohio), and a daughter (deceased in infancy, unnamed). After his marriage Mr. Sampson resided for some time in Maryland, where several of his children were born, thence moving to Washington county, Penn., he located in East Finley township, near the present post-office of England, and finally settled on the old home farm, which is situated about two miles from East Finley postoffice, where he died in 1834, having been preceded several years by his wife.

David Sampson was born in June, 1808, in Maryland, and came with his parents on their long and tedious journey over the mountains to Washington county, Penn. Their worldly property, with which to begin the struggle of life in the wilderness, was hauled in one cart by two horses driven tandem, the members of the family who could not ride following behind the load. They first located near England postoffice, and, having no property, the struggle for existence was a hard one. After some time David returned over the mountains with a hog-drover, and while in the East purchased a tract of unbroken land, erected a log cabin, and thither moved his parents, where they died in 1834. He was united in marriage with Fanny Sprows, born in 1816, daughter of Arthur Sprows, of East Finley township, this county, and the family consisted of the following children: Mary Ann (wife of James Sprows), residing in West Finley township; Catherine, widow of Jackson Elliott, living in East Finley township; Nancy Jane (deceased); Arthur and James (both deceased in infancy); Henry (subject of present sketch); John, a farmer of Marshall county, W. Va.; Phoebe, wife of William Archer, living in West Finley township, this county; Silas, residing in West Finley township; Libbens, living in Marshall county, W. Va.; Elizabeth, wife of James Martin, of West Finley township, and an unnamed infant. Mr. Sampson passed the remainder of his life on the home farm, and became a successful business man. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religious connection a member of the M. E. Church. He died in 1878, having been preceded by his wife in 1874.

Henry Sampson was born May 10, 1843, in East Finley township, and passed his youth on the farm, receiving a limited education, although his inclinations led him to improve every possible opportunity. In 1883 he was united in marriage with Adeline Maria Parkinson, who was born March 30, 1852, daughter of John Parkinson, of Morris township, Greene Co., Penn. They have one child, Libbens, born May 31, 1884. Mr. Sampson is a prosperous and popular citizen, and in addition to his vocation of general farming was for eighteen years engaged in threshing, but has recently retired from that. He is a worker in the Democratic party. He is a member of the U. B. Church, and his wife of the C. P. Church at Old Concord.

RC. BUCHANAN, a well-known citizen of Hopewell township, was born in 1864, in Independence township, this county. He is a grandson of David, whose father was Samuel Buchanan. The latter came with his wife and son John from Lancaster county, Penn., to Independence township, this county, in 1783, and on April 19, 1785, purchased 300 acres of land on "Worley's Run" of Joseph Worley, who returned to the East. After settling in Independence township, three sons were born to Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Buchanau, namely: William, Samuel and David, all of whom remained in Independence township. John took the tract of 225 acres (adjoining the farms of Henry Levens and John and Philip Doddridge) and died upon this farm; Samuel died about 1804 on the old homestead; William settled in Zanesville, Ohio, where he died. David Buchanan settled on a part of the old homestead upon which he built a tannery in 1810, but on account of a fatal accident, by which a son was drowned in the vat, he gave up the business in 1817. His son, David, afterward inherited the old Buchanan farm, now occupied by John McAllister.

R. C. Buchanan spent one year at Canonsburg Academy, also a year at Bethany College. He left school at the age of nineteen years, and commenced farming in partnership with his brother, remaining in Independence township until 1887. In 1884 he was united in marriage with Miss Cora Denny, daughter of Walter Denny. The grandfather of Walter Denny was born in eastern Pennsylvania, and there married Esther Maxwell. In 1788 he located near Canonsburg, this county, where his children were reared, as follows: Catherine, Martha, Margaret, Esther, Eleanor, James, Robert and Walter. The father of this family died in 1802, and the mother was laid by his side in 1843.

Robert Denny was born in 1785, in eastern Pennsylvania, being brought when a child to this county. In 1814 he was married to Lydia McMannis, who bore him children, as follows: Walter, Anne, Esther, James, Robert, Elizabeth, William and Catherine (twins) and Lydia. Of this family, Esther, James, Robert and Elizabeth are deceased.

Walter Denny was born April 30, 1816, in South Strabane township, this county. In 1842 he was married to Mary, daughter of John Welch, of Chartiers township, and their children were Mary Jane, Elizabeth Ann, Margaret L., Sarah L., Sarah E., Robert M., John W. and Laura (twins), Samuel T., Alice, Agnes, Cora and Martha. Mr. and Mrs. Walter Denny passed their first years of wedded life in South Strabane township, then went to Hopewell township, finally locating on the farm one mile and a half west of West Middletown, where they are now living.

To the union of R. C. and Cora (Denny) Buchanan children have been born as follows: Fannie, born in August, 1885; a son (deceased in infancy); Mary, born March 2, 1888; and Nellie, born in August, 1890. In 1887 R. C. Buchanan moved to his present home, situated two miles northeast of West Middletown. He devotes his principal attention to raising Spanish Merino sheep, also raising horses and cultivating 131 acres of land. He votes the Democratic ticket, and has been inspector of elections three years. In religious faith he and his wife are members of the Lower Buffalo Presbyterian Church.

JAMES MARSHALL is a representative of one of the oldest pioneer families of Washington county. The first pioneer of the family name was Hugh Marshall, who was born in the North of Ireland, where, in 1764, he was married to Rosanna Marshall, a native of the same county. Two children, Gilbert and Samuel, were born to them in their native land. In 1776 they emigrated to America, and after a voyage of nine weeks landed at Philadelphia, Penn., afterward moving to Washington county, and settling (about 1778) a short distance northeast of the present city of Washington, where two other children were born: James and Margaret. They soon afterward purchased a tract of 200 acres of land on Garbys fork of Wheeling creek, in East Finley township, between Gale and East Finley, and made a permanent home in the midst of the wilderness, surrounded by Indians, where their two youngest children, John and Hugh, were born. Mr. Marshall had learned the weaver's trade in Ireland, and continued to follow it in America. His land adjoined the property of Robert Carroll, whose brothers were killed by the Indians. Mr. Marshall was living in his log cabin at the time of that tragedy, but probably escaped the same fate by fleeing to the fort when the first signs of the presence of Indians were seen. Many times, before and after this occurrence, Mr. Marshall and his family sought safety at the fort, which was situated near the present site of Prosperity, but they bravely endured the hardships and dangers, nobly doing their share in developing the resources of the wild country. Mr. Marshall died in 1815, and in 1833 his widow followed him to the grave.

Gilbert Marshall was born in Ireland about 1763, and coming to America with his parents grew to manhood surrounded by the privations and dangers incident to the lives of pioneers. In 1801 he was united in marriage with Martha Bell, who was born east of the mountains about 1768, daughter of Robert Bell, of Morris township, Washington county, and to this union the following children were born: Mary, Rosanna, Hugh, Jane (widow of Hamilton Carroll), Margaret, Robert, James, Martha (widow of Joseph D. Carroll), Elizabeth (wife of J. J. Hunter, of East Finley township). Of these Mary, Rosanna, Hugh, Margaret and Robert are deceased. After his marriage Mr. Marshall bought of his father a small piece of land, lying one mile southeast of East Finley postoffice, where he passed the remainder of his life, year by year continuing to add to his property. He possessed unusual vigor and was evidently especially fitted for the life of hardships and struggles that was his portion, but in which he was so successful. In politics he was a lifelong Democrat, and in religion a member of the U. P. Church. After a most useful life he passed away, in 1864, wearied with the weight of ninety-nine years, having been preceded to the grave by his wife about the year 1857.

James Marshall was born July 10, 1813, on the home farm in East Finley township, Washington county. His only opportunity for an early education was limited to an irregular attendance at the subscription schools then in the vicinity, and his youth was passed upon the farm with his father. In 1844 he was married to Maria McCaslin, of Greene county, Penn., who bore him two children: Maxwell (deceased at the age of twelve years) and Angelina T. (living in Miami county, Kans.). This wife died in 1865, and in 1867 Mr. Marshall was married to Emery E. Guttery, of Morris township, who died February 21, 1877. In 1881 he married, for his third wife, Susan G. Potter, of East Finley township, who died October 20, 1891. After his first marriage Mr. Marshall lived on the farm of his father five years, and then resided near Prosperity, Morris township, where he remained some time; thence removed to Ritchie county, W. Va., where he still owns a farm, returning in 1883 to Washington county, Penn., and locating near Dog Wood Grove church, where he is now residing. Notwithstanding his age Mr. Marshall is yet an active man. In politics he is a Democrat, and in religion he is a member of the U. P. Church.

WILLIAM CRUMRINE. The Crumrine family, an old one in this county, is of German origin. George L. Crumrine, from whom the family in Pennsylvania is directly descended, emigrated from the Palatinate of Germany to America in 1748, locating in Maryland. A son, Abraham Crumrine, married there and reared a family of children, among whom was a son John, the father of our subject.

John Crumrine was born January 22, 1779, in what is now Carroll county, Md., near the present village of Melrose. Here he was married in 1803 to Barbara Fohrman. In 1810, having heard of the fertile land in Washington county, Penn., he concluded to seek a home in the then "far West." In order to make preparation for the reception of his family, then consisting of his wife and four children, he went ahead, walking the whole distance there, and purchased a piece of land in West Bethlehem township, near the mouth of Daniel's Run, called in the patent "Snake Den." He walked the entire distance back to Maryland, and in 1811, accompanied by his family, he started on this difficult journey. All his earthly effects were loaded into a wagon, in which there was still found room for the family. The roads were indescribably bad, and the fatigue of the trip may be imagined. With all the vigor of robust youth, he devoted himself to opening his land and supporting his family. Here twelve more children were born, making a family of sixteen. John Crumrine died January 13, 1857, having been preceded by his wife in 1850.

William Crumrine, the eighth child in the order of birth of John and Barbara Crumrine, was born March 15, 1817, in Washington county, Penn. He was reared to a full knowledge of all arduous farm life, receiving a limited education in the neighboring "log-cabin school." He began life on his own account as a farmer, in which, with the exception of sixteen years, during which he conducted a mercantile business at Lindley's Mills, he has been engaged all his life. His farm near Dennis Station is excellently improved, and yields a handsome income. In 1845 Mr. Crumrine was married to Lydia, daughter of Thomas Ross, of Ruff's Creek, Greene Co., Penn. To them eleven children have been born: John Thomas, a minister at Cedarville, N. J.; Kennedy, a wholesale paper dealer, of Pittsburgh; Ross, who died at the age of twenty-five years; Hannah Lucinda, wife of E. A. Conger, of Morris township; Mary E., a school teacher, at home; Frank, died in infancy; Homer, living at Deer Lick, Greene county; Stephen, died when young; M. D., who married Nannie McVay, and assists in the farm work at home; and Timothy and George, who died when young. In politics Mr. Crumrine is a Democrat. Both he and his wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

ISAAC WHITEMAN. Among the native-born agriculturists of West Finley township, none stands higher in the esteem and regard of the community than this gentleman. A representative self-made man, he has from the bottom rung of the ladder of life worked upward to an honorable competency, a solid reputation and a good name.

Mr. Whiteman is a son of Isaac Whiteman, who was born in 1764, in Washington county, Penn., and was reared on his father's farm to the noblest of all occupations—the cultivation of the soil. He was here married to Miss Eleanor Maughaman, also a native of the county, born March 7, 1766, and by her he had seven children, viz.: Andrew, Matthias, Esther, Susan, John, Isaac, and one that died in infancy.

Isaac Whiteman, son of Isaac and Eleanor (Maughaman) Whiteman, was born March 1, 1820, in Canton township, this county, in what was then called Razortown, and very early in life commenced working on the farm. When he was but three years of age his father died, leaving a widowed mother with a large family to be provided for; and young Isaac had his share to do in providing food and clothing for them. As a consequence his educational training—inside the school-room—was very limited and meager as compared with the practical lessons he received outside. Up to the age of forty years he worked as a farm laborer by the month, or on rented farms, the first money he earned being for mowing wheat for a neighbor, two days being occupied on the job, for which he received the munificent sum of 6¼ cents.

Our subject was married December 20, 1840, to Sarah Bedillion, of Washington county, Penn., and nine children were born to them, the following being their names and dates of birth: Christian B., 1841; Matthias J., July 27, 1843; Eleanor, August 15, 1845; Mary J., March 13, 1848; Elsie M., February 1, 1850; John B., December 29, 1852; Susanna, May 5, 1855; Sarah E., May 20, 1859, and Phoebe B., September 23, 1861, all now living except Christian B., who died young, and Mary J., who died March 16, 1879. The mother departed this life November 8, 1890, a consistent member of the Baptist Church of Enon.

About 1850 Mr. Whiteman bought a farm in West Virginia, investing all his savings in it, and when the last dollar had been paid the title turned out to be totally worthless, so all his hard-earned substance of the best part of his life went like chaff before the wind. This disaster naturally much depressed him, but being possessed of a stout heart and great will power, he again set to work to retrieve his lost fortune. This time he bought a farm in West Finley township, this county, the one he still owns, and here commenced to deal in live stock and wool, becoming known in course of time as one of the leading wool buyers in the county. By hard labor, strict economy, and indomitable perseverance Mr. Whiteman has, in spite of adversity, made life a success, being now the owner of 300 acres of fine farm land in West Finley township, besides a house and lot in the thriving little town of Businessburgh, where he is now living retired from active work. He has been a lifelong member and one of the substantial supporters of the Baptist Church at Enon, in which he is a deacon, and in politics he has always been a sterling Democrat.

MRS. MARY SPROWLS was born May 13, 1828, daughter of Hugh and Ruth (Enlow) Montgomery, of East Finley township, and is the widow of Simeon Sprowls, a successful farmer of East Finley township, Washington county.

John Sprowls, a native of Ireland, was the first of his family to settle in America. In 1784 he was united in marriage, in Ireland, with Eliza Love (also a native of Erin), and the following children were there born to them: Arthur, Jane, Edward, John, Henry, James, Elizabeth and Nancy. In 1793 Mr. Sprowls brought his family to America, landing first at Philadelphia, thence going to Carlisle, Cumberland Co., Penn., and in about 1795 settling in West Pike Run township, Washington county. Soon afterward they went to Allen township, this county, but at length made a permanent home near the postoffice of Good Intent, in East Finley township, where the remainder of their lives was passed. Two children, William and Mary, were born in America.

Simeon Sprowls was the son of James Sprowls, and grandson of the pioneer John Sprowls. He was born December 13, 1822, in East Finley township, this county, and as his parents died when he was very young, leaving very little property, Simeon was obliged to begin life for himself at the age of twelve years. He worked some time without receiving wages, and was then paid the modest sum of a "levy" per day. He continued to work at whatever would afford employment, and was one of the laborers hired to assist in building the brick residence of Mr. Thomas Stout, which was erected by Isaac Havelly. At the age of sixteen he began to learn the carpenter's trade with Albert Squires, for whom he worked several years, afterward becoming his partner. Mr. Squires finally moved to Ohio, and Mr. Sprowls continued the business. On February 24, 1848, he was united in marriage with Mary Montgomery, and the following children were born to them: Oliver M., born April 27, 1850 (living in West Finley township, this county); Albert S., born July 3, 1852 (an attorney, living in Washington, Penn.); Alexander M., born November 14, 1854 (deceased in infancy); Harvey, born November 17, 1856 (residing in East Finley township); Ruth, born July 3, 1859 (living at home); George B., born March 5, 1862 (a hardware merchant in Claysville, this county); Margaret J., born October 17, 1864 (wife of Christian Plants, living in Claysville), and William M., born September 9, 1867 (residing at home).

After his marriage Mr. Sprowls located near Prosperity, on Ten Mile creek, where he remained a short time, and in 1850 purchased, of Samuel McQuery, a farm in East Finley township, where he lived the rest of his life. He continued to farm and follow his trade until the spring of 1878, when he was suddenly taken ill, lingering only a short time, and on June 24, 1878, passed away. At the time of his death Mr. Sprowls had extensive land possessions, having each year added to his original property by hard labor and careful economy. Politically he was a Democrat. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Sprowls has resided on the home farm, which is managed under her direction. She is a member of the Windy Gap Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

HENRY SMITH. Among the representative citizens of Union township is this gentleman, who has been prominently identified with the interests of the community since locating here. His grandfather, Robert Smith, came from Maryland in 1782, and located on a farm in Allegheny county, Penn., where some of the family are yet living. An old shotgun, which was brought across the ocean by his family, has been remodeled, and is yet in their possession. Robert Smith was married to Miss Jane Moore, a native of Maryland, who bore him the following named children: Daniel, Jennie, Mary A., Nancy, Robert, Betsey, Polly, Margaret, William and John, all of whom lived to be over sixty-six years of age; Polly is the only one yet living. John Smith, son of Robert and Jane (Moore) Smith, was born on the farm in Allegheny county, Penn., where his life was devoted to tilling the soil. On March 17, 1842, he married Anna, daughter of Henry Croco, of Allegheny county, Penn. Eleven children were born to this marriage, all of whom yet enjoy robust health, namely: Elizabeth J., Margaret J., Robert, Henry, Mary A., Lucinda, John C., Belle F., Hettie R., Ann M. and Adeline M. The father was a staunch supporter of the Democratic party. He died March 15, 1882, and was buried on the fortieth anniversary of his wedding day.

Henry Smith, second son of John and Anna (Croco) Smith, was born in 1849, in Allegheny county, Penn., and passed his youth on the old place. On January 9, 1873, he was united in marriage with Amelia, daughter of Matthias Uhr, of Allegheny county, Penn. They began wedded life on their present farm in Union township, Washington Co., Penn., where children have been born to them as follows: Edward U. (attending the Pittsburgh Academy), John H., Lewis R., Howard I., and Frank M. The home place contains 157 acres of land, and in addition to general farming Mr. Smith manages an extensive dairy business. In political opinion he is a Democrat, and in religious faith a member and trustee of the Presbyterian Church at Finleyville.

ALLEXANDER H. HUSTON is a son of Hugh Huston, who was born and reared in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., where he attended the common schools. He learned the carpenter's trade, and followed it successfully for many years. He married Rachel Swan, a native of this county, who bore him three children: William, Alexander H. and Mattie. Of these, William was killed at the battle of Gettysburg, and Alexander H. is the only one now living. Hugh Huston was a Democrat in politics, and in religious connection a member of the Associate Reformed Church.

Alexander H. Huston was born in 1840, in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., where he was reared, educated and taught the carpenter's trade, at which he has since worked. In 1862 he enlisted, along with his brother William, in Company D, Tenth Regiment, P. V. I., and was sent to the army of the Potomac; he was wounded in the battle of Gettysburg, where his brother was killed, as above stated. On October 6, 1871, he was united in marriage with Lizzie E., daughter of William Harsha, of Canonsburg, Penn., a son of Thomas Harsha, a native of Pennsylvania, who in early manhood was married to Jane Hutchinson, a descendant of one of the old families of Washington county. They resided in Chartiers township and reared a large family. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics a Democrat. His son, William Harsha, was born in Chartiers township, this county, and was there educated. When a young man he married Harriet, daughter of William Fee. The young couple settled on the old place in Chartiers township, where Mr. Harsha died in 1860, leaving the following children: William G., Lizzie E. (wife of A. H. Huston), Sarah (Mrs. William Hutchinson).

Thomas and George V. The father was a Democrat, and a member of the Presbyterian Church.

To the union of Alexander H. and Lizzie E. (Harsha) Huston two daughters have been born, namely: Nettie J. and Harriet F. Mr. Huston, in politics, follows in the footsteps of his forefathers, being a straight Democrat; in religion he is a member of the U. P. Church.

DANIEL MADISON CARY, of Morris township, is a descendant of an old family of English descent. Abel Cary, the grandfather of Daniel Madison, was a native of New Jersey, born of English parentage. He married in that State, later removing with his family (a member of which was Daniel, born August 13, 1779) to Greene county, Penn. Daniel Cary spent his boyhood days on his father's farm, receiving but little schooling. In 1802 he married Mary Cooper, born July 18, 1783, a daughter of Zebulon Cooper, of Morris township. Shortly after his marriage he removed to Chenango county, N. Y., where he resided for a short time, soon afterward coming to Greene county, Penn., where he died in 1868; his wife died in 1854. To them were born ten children: Zebulon, born November 25, 1803; Abel, born October 8, 1805; Jerusha, born August 3, 1807; Mary, born July 15, 1809; Elizabeth, born December 28, 1812; Susanna, born November 13, 1814; Julian, born February 18, 1817; Sylvester, born May 6, 1819; John, born March 23, 1821; and Daniel Madison. With the exception of John, who died when young, the whole family lived to maturity.

Daniel Madison Cary was born August 5, 1823, and was trained to farm life. He received but a meager education, his schooling consisting of about four weeks' annual attendance at a subscription school. In 1844 he married Mary, a daughter of Jacob Huss, an early pioneer of Fairfield county, Ohio. After his marriage Mr. Cary lived for a while with his father in Greene county, then purchased land near Rogersville, Centre township, same county, living there ten years, when he purchased his present farm, where he has since made his home. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Cary were born children as follows: William Abel, born August 23, 1845, married Elizabeth J. Baue, of Strabane township, and now resides in Andrew county, Mo.; Harriet E., born May 17, 1848, married to Stephen Reeves, of Amwell township; Mary J., born December 22, 1850, married Simeon Martin, of Andrew county, Mo., where they now reside; Charles M., born May 22, 1854, died December 8, 1869; Elizabeth Ann, born October 6, 1857, makes her home with her parents; Sarah M., born August 25, 1860, married Axtal Day, of Chartiers township; Florence A., born May 30, 1867, married to Washington Breese, of Amwell township. Mr. Cary is one of the influential and successful men of Morris township. He is a Democrat in politics, and both he and his wife attend the Amity M. E. Church, of which she is a member.

DANIEL McPHERSON was, in his lifetime, a worthy representative of an honored race. He was a grandson of John McPherson, a native of Ireland, where he passed his entire life. He died at an advanced age, and left a family of children, one of whom was his namesake, John.

John McPherson was born in Ireland, and at the age of twenty years immigrated to America, settling in Lancaster county, Penn. He was united in marriage with Ann Logan, and their children were William, James, John, Daniel, Ann and Mary, all now deceased with the exception of Ann and John.

Daniel McPherson was born September 5, 1817, in Lancaster county, Penn., and coming with his parents to Washington county, same State, located in Buffalo township, near Atchison, where he grew to manhood, his time being employed in farm duties and in attending the common schools. On February 2, 1842, he was married to Nancy Noble, who was born July 19, 1823, a daughter of William and Rachel (Spencer) Noble, and they had the following family of children: Samuel (deceased at the age of thirty-five years), William (of whom mention is made below), Daniel (also mentioned in this sketch), Rachel, James, Florence, Sadie, Henrietta, Mary (Mrs. John Sights, of Morristown, Penn.), and John. Of these children those now living are William, Daniel and Mary.

Mr. McPherson lived on several different places in Donegal township during the earlier years of his married life, and in 1850 purchased the "Kerns Farm," situated in the northern part of Donegal township, where he passed the remainder of his life. For twenty-five years prior to his death he was unable to engage in active labor, and the principal work of the farm was done by the two sons, William and Daniel. Mr. McPherson was noted for his generosity of heart and was one of the pillars of the U. B. Church, contributing liberally to its support. Politically, he was a Democrat. He died in 1891, his loss being deeply felt by the entire community, for such men are not easily replaced. His widow is living on a comfortable home farm.

William McPherson, the son of Daniel and Nancy (Noble) McPherson, was born on July 7, 1849, on the old home farm in Donegal township, where his boyhood was passed. On March 8, 1875, he was married to Sarah E. Mealey, who was born August 2, 1840, a daughter of George and Elizabeth (Finley) Mealey, and they have had one son, John Burton, born February 7, 1876. After his marriage Mr. McPherson located near the home of his father, about two and a half miles southwest of Atchison, this county, where he has erected a handsome dwelling. Mr. McPherson assisted largely in the success of his father, by years of energetic and patient toil, and the home he now enjoys is his deserved reward. In political life, he is an active member of the Democratic party, and has filled several township offices with credit.

Daniel McPherson, a brother of William, and son of the elder Daniel McPherson, was born April 11, 1854. He received a common-school education and passed his earlier years at home. On February 15, 1881, he was united in marriage with Martha Ellen Miller, who was born February 6, 1859, daughter of Christopher and Elizabeth Miller, and they have one daughter, Lizzie, born March 22, 1886. Mr. McPherson settled on a part of the home farm, upon which he has built a comfortable dwelling. The son inherits the progressive traits of his father's character, combined with habits of industry, which are a guarantee of future success. He is a Democrat in political preference, and in religious faith is a member of the Disciple Church at Dutch Fork.

WILLIAM L. DUNN, the leading and popular shoe merchant of Canonsburg, was born in 1853, at Duncan Falls, Muskingum Co., Ohio. His grandfather, James Dunn, was born and reared in Ireland, and coming to America first settled in eastern Pennsylvania, where he was married to Miss Andrews, a native of that State. The couple soon moved to Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., and he followed agricultural pursuits. He was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Seceder Church. Four children were born to this marriage, namely: Samuel, George, Rebecca (Mrs. Robert Beish) and Isabelle (Mrs. Ritchie).

George Dunn was born in 1826, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., where his early education was received. He left home at an early age, and settled in Muskingum county, Ohio. When a young man he was married to Mary J., daughter of Philip Bedillion, of Washington county, Penn. They resided in Ohio several years, and in 1845 came to Mount Pleasant township, this county, finally settling in Chartiers township. He was an active worker in the Democratic party. In religious faith he was first a Seceder, then a member of the U. P. Church; he died June 28, 1890, leaving the following children: William L., Nathaniel, Mary J. (wife of D. Q. Crawford), Louisa and George.

William L. Dunn remained on the home place during his boyhood, and attended school at Jefferson Academy. When eighteen years of age he entered the employ of A. T. Hoff, remaining there one year. In 1873 he entered into partnership with Lewis L. Huston, in the retail shoe business, which they conducted two years. After selling out, Mr. Dunn worked two years for the purchaser; then worked three years for A. C. McNary, and in 1883 opened his present establishment in Canonsburg. On September 1, 1874, he was united in marriage with Lizzie H., daughter of John E. Black, of Canonsburg. Their union has been blessed with the following children: Charles, Alice, William, Mary and Elsie. Of these children Alice and William are yet living. Mr. Dunn began business with but little capital, and has been the architect of his own fortune. He and his family are members of the Central Presbyterian Church, and in politics he is actively identified with the Democratic party.

CHARLES SCHMIDT, than whom there has not been a more enterprising and respected citizen in South Strabane township, was a native of Germany, born in Wurtemberg, April 29, 1820.

His father, Frederick Schmidt, was of the same place, where he married, and reared a large family of children, of whom the subject of this sketch was the second in order of birth. Charles Schmidt remained under the parental roof, receiving his education at the school of the neighborhood, until he was twenty years of age, when he was drafted into the German army, in which he served nine years, a portion of the time in the corps of infantry sharpshooters, he being then a corporal. He was tailor of his company for a time, and then was appointed shoemaker, a trade he had learned of his father, and having made some improvement in the arrangement of the knapsack, he was promoted to general master of all saddlers in his regiment, a position of honor and profit. On leaving the army in 1849, Mr. Schmidt emigrated to America, landing at New York, in which city he spent a short time, then proceeded to Philadelphia, and from there to Baltimore, where he remained eight years. Here he attended school in order to make himself conversant with the English language, and was engaged in the business of maker and fitter of fine shoes; in which he was eminently successful. In 1858 he went to Pittsburgh, where for two years he worked at his trade, shoemaking, and then came to Washington, this county, remaining in the city two years, at the end of which time he purchased the farm property in South Strabane township, which by assiduous labor he improved from a wild state to its present fertile condition. Here he successfully carried on farming and the cultivation of the grape, having an extensive vineyard, and, in connection, the largest wine cellar in Washington county, stored with choice native wines of his own manufacture.

On December 3, 1850, Mr. Schmidt was married to Wilhelmina Dittis, of Baltimore, Md., daughter of John and Margaret Dittis, and to this union have been born the following named children: Charles, Caroline (Mrs. George Becker), Francis and Mary (Mrs. John Becker). Mr. Schmidt was called from earth February 14, 1892, and his business and farm are now being conducted by his son Francis. He had been a Democrat ever since receiving his franchise, and was an active worker in his party. He was a justice of the peace for ten years, and served as school director for several terms.

JOHNS LIGGETT was born August 25, 1849, on the home farm in Independence township. He is descended from one of the earliest and most prominent families of pioneer times in Washington county, whose ancestors were born in Scotland.

Two brothers of the Liggett family left their Highland home and crossed the ocean to America. Landing at Baltimore, Md., they there remained but a short time and then pushed westward, finally locating in Washington county, Penn. One of these brothers, Thomas Liggett, was married to Parnelia Dempster, a resident of Washington county, and passed his life in Independence township. He was a man of stalwart frame, six feet tall, well proportioned in every way, and possessing great courage and powers of endurance. He was noted for his positive character and sturdy adherence to his word, which principles were implanted on the minds and were evident in the lives of all his children, whose names were Joshua (a farmer of Tuscarawas county, Ohio), Elizabeth (deceased in Iowa), James (deceased in Coshocton county, Ohio), Harriet (widow of Laban Headington), Robert (of whom special mention is made further on), Mary Ann (deceased in Illinois), Sarah (widow of John Hemphill), William (sketch of whom appears elsewhere), Thomas (a farmer in Hopewell township), David A. (a merchant of Independence, Penn.), Anderson (living in Hot Springs, Ark.). Mr. Liggett died January 29, 1861, Mrs. Liggett September 17, 1882.

Robert Liggett was born February 25, 1815, in Independence township, Washington county, and remained on the home farm until some years after attaining his majority. His education was restricted to the advantages found in the pioneer log schoolhouse, with its split-log benches and desks supported by pegs driven in the wall. The huge fireplace sent out so fierce a heat that "the children's hot faces were streaming, the while they were freezing their backs." Young Robert walked a long distance through the woods to glean knowledge from these schools for a few weeks during the winter season. They were maintained by popular subscription, while the teacher "boarded round" among the parents, whose children graduated after having fathomed the hidden mysteries of "tare and tret" and the "single rule of three." Amid such surroundings Robert Liggett received his education and grew to manhood. In 1843 he was united in marriage with Mary M. Stewart, a native of Washington county, and the offspring of their union were as follows: Thomas Madison, Sarah A. (Mrs. J. J. Cairns, of Eldersville, Penn.), and John S. Mr. Liggett began wedded life with $500 and an old horse as capital stock. He lived on his father's farm for a short time, then came to the place where the remainder of his life was passed, which is situated one mile east of Independence, in Independence township. Upon this farm he erected one of the finest residences in the township, there following agricultural pursuits, and by industry combined with economical business dealings, eventually became the owner of a vast estate. Mr. Liggett never took part in any speculations, but devoted his entire time to energetic toil and careful management of his property, achieving success by slow but steady upward steps. Mr. Liggett was quiet and unassuming in public, with a reserved and dignified manner. His integrity was unimpeachable; firm and unswerving in opinions, he never lowered his standard of right to any man. Although, as previously stated, his literary advantages were necessarily limited, yet he succeeded, by dint of close application and keen observation, in securing a thorough practical knowledge of current topics and business matters. His example is most worthy of emulation, and may well encourage the young men who read these lines to persevere in every honest effort; for true success comes only to those who toil and wait patiently for the harvest, which though long delayed, is ever sure—as we sow so shall we reap in due season, but the harvest will be according to the seeds planted. In politics Robert Liggett was a Democrat. He died September 4, 1886, and was laid to rest in West Middletown cemetery; on December 3, 1890, his body was removed to the beautiful new cemetery at Independence, then laid out on a portion of his farm. He left an estate worth over $50,000, the result of his own toil and business sagacity. Since his demise, the widow has resided on the home farm with a son.

THOMAS MADISON LIGGETT (the elder son of Robert and Mary M. (Stewart) Liggett) was born January 25, 1845, in Independence township, this county. He passed his boyhood and youth on the home place, and October 17, 1878, was united in marriage with Letitia Griffith, who was born on October 22, 1852, daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth (Esler) Griffith, of Mt. Pleasant township, this county. They have had five children: Montee M., Dora (deceased at the age of four years), Robert, Olive L. and Hattie May. Mr. and Mrs. Liggett have resided since their marriage on what is known as the James Beall farm, lying half a mile east of Independence, in this county. He inherits the spirit of progress and industry, so characteristic of his father's life, and is a prominent agriculturist, devoting special attention to raising first-class stock, handling and fattening stock for the market. He votes the Democratic ticket, but gives his whole time to the interests of his business, which is yielding a larger income with every year. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church. He is a charter member of the Independence Cemetery Company, serving as secretary of that company since it first started. His wife, Letitia, is truly a helpmate, completely interesting herself in her department, and in every operation tending to the advancement of her family's interest.

JOHN S. LIGGETT (the younger son of Robert and Mary M. (Stewart) Liggett) received a common-school education, and then began dealing in stock and general farming, soon managing an extensive business. By treating his customers in a fair and honest manner, he has succeeded in winning the confidence and patronage of many. On January 23, 1879, he married Harriet A. Griffith, who was born March 20, 1856, daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth (Esler) Griffith, of Mt. Pleasant township, this county. Two daughters were born to this union, viz.: Mary A., born January 8, 1885, died of pneumonia May 26, 1885, and Alice B., born July 22, 1889. Mr. and Mrs. Liggett have resided on the home farm since their marriage, and the place gives evidence of the cultured taste of the present owners. Mr. Liggett possesses a rare judgment and practical knowledge of live stock, which has contributed largely to his success in business. Politically he is a Democrat, and has filled various offices of trust in his township. In religion he and his wife are both members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he is a trustee.

JOHN SCOTT DANLEY. Among the old families of East Finley township none hold a more prominent place than the Danleys. George Danley, grandfather of John S., was a native of the North of Ireland, where he carried on farming, as did his father before him. Immigrating to America, he made his new home in Washington county, Penn., near West Middletown, where his wife (also a native of Ireland) bore him three children: John, Mattie and S. S. About 1819 the parents died, and the children, who were yet young, passed into the care of others, S. S. being given in charge of an uncle, John Scott; Mattie, who was also reared by relatives, is now a resident of Cambridge, Ohio, and is the only survivor of the family.

S. S. Danley, father of our subject, was born April 29, 1818, in Independence township, Washington Co., Penn., and, as already stated, was reared by his uncle, John Scott, a resident of East Finley township, his education being received at the subscription schools of the period, somewhat limited in their facilities as compared with more modern schools; but Mr. Danley was a close student and a great reader, and lost no opportunity of improving his education. He lived with his relatives until his marriage, January 2, 1838, with Ruth Enlow, who was born June 20, 1817, a daughter of Henry Enlow, of East Finley township, whose ancestors were New Englanders and early settlers in Washington county. To this union were born the following named children: Elizabeth E., born October 16, 1839, married to John Elliott, and living in Morris township; Margaret J., born February 15, 1841, married to George England, and resides in Washington county, Iowa; Henry P., born May 18, 1842, a farmer in East Finley township; John S.; George H., born May 24, 1847, died January 10, 1859. After his marriage S. S. Danley located on the property left him by his uncle, situated near the headwaters of the Templeton fork of Wheeling creek, and a short distance from Bartholdi postoffice, in East Finley township, and here he passed the remainder of his busy life, improving the property and adding to his possessions, which at the time of his death were extensive. He died April 1, 1891, his wife August 14, 1880. They were active, influential citizens, and highly respected members of the Dog Wood Grove U. P. Church. Politically Mr. Danley was first a Whig and afterward, on the formation of the party, a staunch Republican.

John Scott Danley was born September 12, 1845, in East Finley township, Washington Co., Penn., his education being received at the common schools of the district. In 1869 he was married to Martha L. McCleary, who was born August 16, 1850, a daughter of William McCleary, of East Finley township. This union has been blessed with the following children: Osco Wayne, born November 5, 1870, died August 1, 1880; George W., born May 28, 1872; James L., born February 23, 1874; Ruth E., born July 21, 1877; Idesta and Roberta (twins), born August 5, 1880, all at home, and Laura, born May 20, 1883, deceased in infancy. The mother of these children died June 20, 1883, and April 29, 1886, Mr. Danley married Mrs. Jennie M. (Gunn) Nelly, a native of East Finley township, born September 10, 1858, a daughter of Moses Gunn, and widow of Moses Nelly. After his first marriage Mr. Danley resided with his parents until their death, since when he has continued on the old home farm. He is one of the prosperous and influential citizens of his township, and in general knowledge is considerably above the average farmer. He and his refined and intelligent wife are members of the Dog Wood Grove U. P. Church, and in politics he is a prominent and active Republican.

PA. THROCKMORTON, a well-to-do farmer of Morris township, comes of good English stock. His grandfather, Daniel Throckmorton, a native of New Jersey, of English parentage, removed to western Pennsylvania about 1800, locating in Greene county, where he devoted himself to farming. Here he married and reared five children. After the death of his first wife he married a widow, Mrs. Duval, who died in 1846, followed by her husband in 1848.

Daniel Throckmorton, the third son of Daniel, was born in 1802, received a limited education and spent his boyhood days on his father's farm. In 1837 he married Hannah, a daughter of Philip Axtel, of Morris township, and to them three children were born: P. A.; Oliver, born January 27, 1842, is unmarried and resides with his brother, P. A. Throckmorton, and Judson, born March 1, 1844, died November 1, 1862, in the service of the Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry. The father died in 1851.

Philip Axtel Throckmorton was born March 19, 1839, in Washington county, Penn. He resided with his parents until the death of his father which occurred when he was twelve years of age; then he hired out by the month and helped in the support of the family. On October 2, 1869, he married Martha Ann, daughter of William Sanders, of Morris township, and to them four children have been born: Flora Vidella, born October 30, 1870; Hannah Mary, born October 20, 1874; William Edgar, born November 26, 1877, and Rollin A., born May 24, 1885, all of whom are living with their parents. Mr. Throckmorton is nicely situated in his home, having recently erected a beautiful and commodious residence. In politics he is a Prohibitionist, formerly a Democrat. He is a member of the Baptist Church at Mt. Hermon, and his wife is identified with the Presbyterian Church at Prosperity.

JH. REDD is a grandson of Solomon and Mary (Scott) Redd, natives of Washington county, Penn., who settled on the home farm in Allen township many years ago. He died in Virginia, and in 1860 his widow passed away in the same State.

Thomas C. Redd, son of Solomon Redd, was born in April, 1822, in Allen township, Washington county, receiving his education in the schools of Allen and Fallowfield townships. In early life he was married to Elmira Conrad, a native of Fallowfield township, where they resided for several years, afterward moving to Allen township; they finally bought the Conrad place in Fallowfield township, where the remainder of their lives was passed. He was an active member of the Republican party, and in religion he and his wife were identified with the Ebenezer M. E. Church. They were the parents of eleven children, of whom the following are yet living: Marvin P., proprietor of the Redd Hotel at Charleroi, this county; Josie, living in Nottingham township, on Pigeon creek; Melissa, wife of Sanford Carson, of Charleroi; J. H., whose name opens this sketch; Ellsworth, a farmer of Fallowfield township; William, living in Charleroi; Maggie and Charley, also residents of Charleroi. The father of this family died in February, 1892, and his widow is now living in Charleroi.

J. H. Redd was born in 1860, on his present farm in Allen township, this county, where he grew to manhood, receiving an education in the district schools of Fallowfield township; he has always followed farming. In May, 1880, he was united in marriage with Gertrude, daughter of John and Lucy Ann (Scott) Sphar, natives of Allen township, where they are now living. Mr. and Mrs. Redd resided in Fallowfield township until 1884, when he bought and moved upon the 125 acres in Allen township, of which he has recently sold twenty-four acres. He has been actively identified with the Republican party, and in religion is a member of the Ebenezer M. E. Church, with which his wife is also connected. They have four children, namely: Vedy, Lucy Ann, Thomas Oakland and an infant.

WILLIAM M. McELHANY, of the firm of McElhany & Scott, cabinet-makers, Burgettstown, is an example of the possible success which lies before all those now at the bottom of the ladder, who possess intelligence, coupled with willing hearts and hands. He is to-day one of the most prosperous business men of Burgettstown, although he began life with no financial aid.

William McElhany was born July 15, 1849, in Allegheny county, Penn., and moved to West Virginia with his parents when but nine and a half years of age. The father died when the son was a lad of twelve years, and the little fellow began life for himself. He first learned the carpenter's trade, which vocation he followed several years with marked success, but afterward learned the trade of a cabinet-maker, eventually opening a furniture store in Burgettstown, Smith township. Some time afterward he became associated with Mr. Scott, and they have since carried on the business with much profit. On November 21, 188-, he was united in marriage with Rachel, daughter of William Russell, a pioneer resident of this county. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. McElhany are Jennie M. and Tilla M. (twins), William M. (deceased) and Maggie G. In politics William McElhany was originally a Democrat, and served his township and the borough of Burgettstown in various official capacities; since 1890 he has espoused the cause of the Prohibition party. He has been a member of the Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown for many years, and is now filling the position of elder.

JAMES D. STROUD, a progressive and intelligent agriculturist of Fallowfield township, is a native of Washington county, born on the family homestead, April 6, 1856. He is a son of John Stroud, whose father, a native of Maryland, made a settlement in Pennsylvania.

John Stroud was born in 1818 in Washington county, Penn., and learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed during a considerable part of his younger life. In 1855 he was married to Martha Yant, who bore him two sons, James D. and William A., the latter of whom was married to a daughter of Clark Crow. After his marriage John Stroud abandoned his trade, and gave his undivided attention to farming and stock raising. In 1880 he was laid to rest; his widow is yet living on the old place in Fallowfield township.

James D. Stroud, the subject proper of this biographical memoir, has passed all his life in his native township. On August 7, 1880, he was united in marriage with Jennie, daughter of Henry Hannan, a prominent farmer of Washington county, and three sons and one daughter have blessed their union, namely: Charley A., John W. B., Walter L. and Bessie Viola. Mr. Stroud's farm, on which he has resided eleven years, contains 117 acres of well-cultivated land, lying six miles southwest of Monongahela, and here he carries on general agriculture, devoting considerable attention to the raising of sheep and other live stock.

JAMES C. POLLOCK, an old and respected citizen of Hanover township, was born December 22, 1812, in Chester county, Penn., the third in order of birth of the children born to Edwin and Margaret (Boyd) Pollock. Edwin Pollock was a native of County Down, Ireland, and was educated for the ministry, but to avoid being forced to enter the army, his relatives smuggled him on board a vessel bound for America, and he died in this country, when his son James was but a little fellow.

James C. Pollock was educated at the rate schools of Chester county, Penn. After the death of his father, his mother was married to one Frederick Aulthouse, of Chester county, Penn., and in later years young James came to Washington county with his mother and stepfather. The journey over the mountains was made in a wagon, which contained the family and household goods. On arriving in Washington county, they crossed the Monongahela river at Brownsville, locating near Monongahela City, where the stepfather resided the remainder of his days, devoting his time to rural life.

James C. Pollock began business for himself at an early age, and for some time drove stage on the old National pike from Monongahela City to Robbstown, Penn., then became a teamster in Monongahela City. In 1831 he was married to Eliza Carney, who was born in 1813, a daughter of James Carney, a native of Ireland. To this union one son was born: William F., now a practicing physician of Pittsburgh, Penn. The mother died in 1841, and on February 23, 1843, James C. Pollock was married to Julia Ann Crouer, who was born June 7, 1817, in Somerset county, Penn., a daughter of Abraham and Elizabeth (Brown) Crouer. The children of James C. and Julia A. (Crouer) Pollock are as follows: Joseph H.; living with his father, who has charge of the farm, in connection with his brother; Elizabeth L., deceased wife of William A. Jackson; James D., one of two sons in partnership with their father; Margaret, wife of Marshall Wright, of Brooke county, W. Va., and Sarah M., deceased wife of Thomas Peterson. In 1844 the family removed from Monongahela City to Cross Creek township, where they remained a short time, then moved to Burgettstown, where Mr. Pollock was the manager of the "Keystone Hotel." He then went to Florence, and conducted a hotel which was the stopping place for stages on the Pittsburgh & Steubenville pike, remaining there for several years, and finally purchasing a place in Hanover township, since which time he has been farming and stock raising. In 1855 he removed to his present pleasant home situated about a quarter of a mile north of Florence, and his two sons now have charge of the farm. Mr. Pollock has succeeded in gathering a goodly amount of property, although he began life as a poor boy. He gives much attention to the breeding of fine horses, and the presence on his farm of two such well-known specimens of the equine race as "Careless" and "Judge Hoadly" is ample evidence of his judgment concerning horses. Two such animals as those above mentioned, descended from the best sires ever known to the American trotting turf, will surely advance the quality of the horses through the entire neighborhood. In politics Mr. Pollock is a member of the Democratic party, to which he has given a faithful support; he has filled several offices of trust with credit to himself, among which may be mentioned those of jury commissioner, constable, register and assessor of Hanover township. Since 1890 Mr. Pollock has retired from active work, and is now living in seclusion from business.

ROBERT W. HAGERTY. This gentleman, one of the leading agriculturists of the county, but now retired, having rented his farm in Buffalo township, is a grandson of Joseph Hagerty, who came from Ireland to this country in an early day, and had married, in his native land, Mrs. Hannah Fleming, a widow; they both died in Washington county, Penn., whither they had come in 1812. They had a family of thirteen children, of whom there is record of the following: John, Joseph, Robert, Blair and William are all deceased; Joseph and David were twins, of whom Joseph lives in Kansas and David in Washington, Penn.; Nancy is the deceased wife of Joseph Van Kirk; Mary is the deceased wife of Samuel Wilkey; Betsy died unmarried; and one died at the age of three years. The father of this family passed from earth in 1825, at the age of one hundred and ten years; the mother at the home of her son William, in 1850, when aged ninety-three years.

William Hagerty, father of Robert W., was born in 1813, in this county, near Canonsburg, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. In 1838 he married Miss Emily, daughter of Robert Wilson, of Franklin township, and they then settled on a farm in Buffalo township. The children born to this union were as follows: John, in Buffalo township; Elizabeth, wife of William Moore, also in Buffalo township; Hannah, wife of William Hepler, in Washington; Robert W., and Martha, married to Richard Mounts, of Buffalo township. In February, 1884, the mother was taken away by death, and the father then came into the borough of Washington, where he passed the remainder of his days, dying in 1886 at the age of seventy-three years. Politically he was a Democrat, and held various township offices. He was a thoroughly representative go-ahead American, climbing from the bottom of the ladder of success to the top, rung by rung, entirely by his own individual efforts, beginning life a poor boy, and dying the owner of two fine farms in Buffalo township, which are still in the family's possession. He and his wife were members of the United Presbyterian Church.

R W Sargent

Robert W. Hagerty, the chief subject of these lines, is a native of the county, born in Buffalo township, May 24, 1851. His education was secured during the winter months at the common schools of the district, while the remainder of the year was passed in laboring on the home farm, learning the many important and arduous duties incident to agricultural pursuits. In January, 1887, Mr. Hagerty married Miss Frances, daughter of Robert and Eliza A. (Lafferty) Hagerty (the latter of whom was a sister of Dr. Lafferty, of Brownsville), of Pittsburgh, and they had one child that died in infancy. In 1889 Mr. and Mrs. Hagerty came to Washington, he having rented his farm, which has fourteen producing oil wells on it, one of them the largest in the township, yielding 115 barrels per hour. This farm is in Buffalo township, some five and a half miles from Washington, on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Politically, our subject is a Democrat, and in religion he and his wife are members of the Christian Church. Their home in the borough is situated on a high piece of ground commanding a fine view, on the corner of Main street and Prospect avenue.

FRANK W. JONES, a prosperous young agriculturist of Smith township, is a representative of one of the old pioneer families of Washington county.

Samuel Jones, grandfather of subject, was born in 1794, at Squirrel Hill (now a suburb of Pittsburgh), Allegheny Co., Penn. His father's family came to Allegheny county from the eastern part of the State, and among other lands then for sale Mr. Jones was offered the tract known as "The Point" (now a portion of Pittsburgh), for the sum of $4.50 per acre; but it was very swampy and almost covered with willow bushes, so they settled on "Squirrel Hill," where Samuel was born. Samuel Jones worked on his father's farm and attended the rate schools during his boyhood. About 1817 he was married to Sarah Deller, who was born about 1800, also a native of "Squirrel Hill," a daughter of Samuel Deller, who came to Allegheny county from near Carlisle, Penn. The children born to this union were: James (a carpenter, of Midway, Penn., where he died at the age of sixty years), John (a farmer, of Smith township, deceased when forty years of age), Samuel (father of subject), Isaac (a resident of Burgettstown and Midway, Penn., deceased), Julia (wife of Michael Hanley, a farmer of Beaver county, Penn.), Sarah (Mrs. Hunter Pinkerton, of Robinson township, this county) and William (a druggist of Midway, Penn.). After his marriage Samuel Jones moved to Washington county, Penn., locating near Midway, in Robinson township, where he passed the remainder of his life in agricultural pursuits, becoming very successful in his chosen vocation. In political opinion he was a lifelong Democrat. He died in 1854, his widow continuing to reside on the home place until her death, which occurred in 1863, when she was buried by the side of her husband.

Samuel Jones was born in 1822, in Robinson township, this county, and after receiving a limited education, learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed several years. In 1860 he was united in marriage with Nancy, daughter of William and Margaret (Marshall) Aiken, who bore him two children: Samuel D. (a farmer of Mt. Pleasant township) and Frank W. (subject of sketch). Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Jones first located near Midway, Penn., and in 1868 came to Smith township, this county, purchasing the farm where he afterward resided, which was one-quarter of a mile south of Bulger, this county. He was a successful farmer and a good citizen; in politics he voted the Democratic ticket. He died in April, 1880, and since his death Mrs. Jones has resided on the farm, upon which her sons have erected a handsome residence. She is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Midway, this county.

Frank W. Jones was born September 17, 1868, near Midway, Robinson township, this county, and when a small boy came with his parents to his present farm. Since the death of his father Mr. Jones has had charge of the place, which he has managed with marked success, and is considered one of the leading young business men of the community. Like his father, he is a Democrat in politics, and in religion is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Midway.

JOHN FISHER WHITE possesses a reputation for business integrity and sterling worth which many a man, apparently more successful, would give much to obtain.

He is a representative of a pioneer family. His grandfather, James White, was born in eastern Pennsylvania, and with two brothers crossed the mountains in early life to seek his fortune in the West. He located on, and patented, a large tract of land near Canonsburg, this county, where his life was passed. He possessed a taste for mechanical work, and, it is said, was able to make anything that could be made out of wood. He learned the wagon-making trade, to which most of his life was devoted. He was a consistent, faithful follower of the Master, and an active, liberal member of the United Presbyterian Church. He died at an advanced age, leaving seven children, viz.: James, John, David, Moses, Patterson, Margaret and Elizabeth.

David White was born on his father's farm near Canonsburg, Washington county, where his youth was passed. He learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for some years, then moved to Holmes county, Ohio, where he was married to Lucretia, daughter of John Fisher, a prominent farmer of Holmes county, who was killed while rolling logs. Mr. and Mrs. White had six children, viz.: James, John, Alexander, William, David and Thomas. Some time after his marriage the father returned to Pennsylvania, and resided in Pittsburgh, where his wife died in 1846. The family were then scattered, and each of the sons, choosing a vocation, began life for themselves.

John Fisher White was born September 21, 1831, in Pittsburgh, Penn., and when fourteen years of age went to live upon a farm, attending school during the winter months. In 1852 he entered the milling business with Capt. Thomas Esby, of Allegheny county, Penn., where he remained twenty years. He was united in marriage with Sarah Jane, daughter of Isaac Rankin, of Peterson, Allegheny county, Penn. Isaac Rankin is a representative of a prominent Irish family, who were closely identified with the early history of Allegheny county. The following children have been born to the union of John and Sarah Jane (Rankin) White: Elizabeth (Mrs. Stevens), Anna Belle, Clarinda, Emma, Ella Huffman, Thomas Esby, Nora May and Oliver G. Mr. White votes the Republican ticket, and is now serving his third term as school director of Somerset township, having been elected as president of the board. He and his family are members of the Methodist Church.

His noble character is well illustrated in the following incident: A rival mill was established near that of Mr. White several years ago, and the proprietor was suddenly taken ill. He was a poor man, dependent on his daily earnings for the support of himself and family, but no one in the neighborhood understood the business well enough to supply his place even for a short time. He dared not hope to retain his patrons, but what could be done? Sick and helpless he lay, while the business which had provided the necessities of life was in immediate danger of being utterly destroyed. But help was near; John White heard of his unfortunate rival's situation, and, leaving his own mill in the hands of trusted employes, donned his floury hat, and, taking charge of his neighbor's mill, conducted the business until the proprietor had regained his usual health. The reader will easily understand why Mr. White is so popular and respected a citizen.

LEWIS CALVIN McCLEARY, one of the most prosperous young farmers of East Finley township, was born June 6, 1855, in East Finley township, this county. William McCleary, his father, was born of Irish parentage, a son of Thomas and Mary (Linn) McCleary, who emigrated from Ireland and made a permanent home in Virginia, where they reared a large family of children, of whom William was born February 18, 1805, and passed his early life in Virginia.

In 1830 he moved to Washington county, Penn., and for eighteen years drove stage on the National pike, afterward served five years as constable of Donegal township. He then served as toll collector near West Alexander, and finally settled on the farm in East Finley township, which is now the property of his heirs. On January 17, 1836, he was united in marriage with Susan G. Wilkinson, of Fayette county, Penn., daughter of Thomas and Prudence (Lewis) Wilkinson, and she bore him the following children: Thomas J., born February 20, 1837 (married to Martha Russell); James C., born January 3, 1839 (married to Maggie Hair); John E., born June 24, 1841 (married to Cornelia Carter); Mary J., born December 17, 1843 (wife of Robert Bell); Sarah E., born January 16, 1846 (Mrs. Porter McCarrell); William L., born May 23, 1848 (married to Mary E. Brinton); Martha L., born August 16, 1850 (wife of John Donely); Francis M., born July 18, 1853 (married to Adelpia Mitchell); Lewis Calvin (subject of sketch); Martin L., born August 13, 1857 (married to Laura Stoy); and Caroline A., born December 6, 1860 (residing at home). William McCleary was an earnest member of the Baptist Church. In politics he was active in the Democratic party, and served three years as superintendent of the Cumberland road. On April 3, 1882, he passed from this life, leaving an honorable and enviable record.

Lewis Calvin McCleary was born on the farm of his father near the headwaters of the Templeton fork of Wheeling creek, and received his education at Pleasant Grove school, in West Finley township. He assisted his father on the farm until 1876, when he began working for Robert Bell, of Franklin township, this county, being in his employ for more than two years; then returned home and remained there until the death of his father. In May, 1882, he was married to Violet A. Porter, who was born December 10, 1857, a daughter of John Porter, of Donegal township, this county, and the following children were born to them: Beatrice Lenora, born April 17, 1883; Annie Myrtle, born November 2, 1884 (deceased May 10, 1886); Nellie May, born September 19, 1886; Bessie Evelyn, born January 11, 1888; Herbert Raymond, born May 15, 1890.

After the death of his father Mr. McCleary purchased a one-third interest in the home farm, and has also an interest in 500 acres of farm land in Marshall county, W. Va. Since purchasing the home farm, Mr. McCleary has resided there, engaged in agriculture, and very prominently identified with stock raising. He has introduced some of the very finest breeds of cattle and sheep to be found in the county, and, with a brother, was the first to introduce, from direct importation, Dorset sheep in East Finley township. He is also much interested in breeding Holstein cattle, and owns some very fine imported specimens of that stock, and which he breeds for sale. Politically Mr. McCleary is a Democrat, and is always in demand during every political crisis; he has held several township offices. In religious faith he and his wife are both members of the Baptist Church at Pleasant Grove.

MRS. JANE SAVAGE, one of the highly esteemed ladies of Hanover township, is the widow of William Savage, whose father, Henry Savage, came from Ireland to this country about 1795, and located in Allegheny county, Penn., near what is now the village of Noblestown. He was there married to Jane Robinson, who bore him the following children: John (of Ohio), William, Alexander (who lived in California), Henry (of Iowa), Jane (Mrs. Hugh Riddle) and Elizabeth (Mrs. Creighton), all now deceased. The father was a successful farmer of Allegheny county, and he and his wife lived to old age, dying near Noblestown.

William Savage was born about 1800 near Noblestown, Allegheny county, and attended the subscription schools of the period. In 1821 he was married to Nancy Riddle, a daughter of Rev. Riddle, pastor of what is now Robinson's Run U. P. Church, and she bore him children as follows: Alexander (who was twice married, and died in Iowa), Margaret Ann (married three times, and died in Allegheny county, Penn.), Jane (Mrs. John Cook, of Washington, Iowa), Henry (a merchant, of Kansas) and Nancy (Mrs. Connor, of Iowa, now deceased). The mother of this family died, and was buried at Robinson's Run church, and for his second wife Mr. Savage married, on January 16, 1851, Mrs. Margaret Ann (Leeper) Wallace, by whom he had three children, viz.: one deceased in infancy; Robert, who enlisted in the One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment, P. V. I., and was killed at Spottsylvania Courthouse, and Anna Mary (Mrs. Cooper), of Iowa. The mother of these dying, William Savage married, for his third wife, Jane Duncan, who was born June 7, 1816, in Hanover township, this county, a daughter of Robert Duncan, who came from eastern Pennsylvania to Hanover township in early days. To the union of William Savage and Jane Duncan two children were born, namely: William J., now residing on the home farm, and who is a representative agriculturist of the township, and Jeanette, Mrs. Cyrus Arnold, of Hanover township. During the earlier years of his married life Mr. Savage resided near Noblestown, Allegheny Co., Penn., then moved to Muskingum county, Ohio, but not liking the country returned to his native county, and passed the remainder of his days in farming and stock raising. He was a good citizen and a strong supporter of the Whig party, which was afterward merged into the Republican party. He died April 8, 1862, and was buried in the cemetery of Robinson's Run U. P. church, of which he was a member. After his death Mrs. Savage remained on the home farm for a short time, then moved to Frankfort, Beaver Co., Penn., where she resided some years, and educated her two children. In 1869 she purchased a home in Hanover township, which is situated three and one-half miles north-east of Florence, Penn., where she is now living, her son William J. having charge of the place. Mrs. Savage is an intelligent lady, and she possesses an excellent memory. She is a member of Frankfort U. P. Church.

W W. VANCE. Of the prominent merchants of Burgettstown, Penn., this gentleman is among the most prosperous. He was born April 1, 1812, in Cross Creek township, this county. The blood of Scottish patriots flows in his veins, his great-grandfather, Joseph Vance, having been born in the Highlands of Scotland in the eighteenth century. In early manhood he immigrated to America, and first settled in Winchester, Va., coming in 1774 to Pennsylvania. He located in Cross Creek township, Washington county, while the Indians were still very numerous, and soon achieved a wide-spread reputation as an Indian fighter, many of the dusky warriors having fallen by his unerring rifle. Few, if any, were more prominently identified with the early settlement of the western portion of Washington county, than was Joseph Vance. He married and passed the remainder of of his life in the wilderness where his first log cabin was erected; the uncultivated land has now become a fertile farm. He and his wife were called to their rest at an advanced age, leaving their children to finish the work so nobly begun.

Among these children was a son, William, who was born in 1776, and reared in Washington county, amid the trials and dangers of pioneer life. His education was necessarily limited, as schools were few, and at best afforded but meager opportunities. He was first married to Rachel Patterson, a resident of Cross Creek township, who bore him six children. She died, and a few years afterward he married, for his second wife, Hannah Patterson, a member of an old family of Cross Creek township. To this union, also, there were born six children. Mr. Vance always lived in Cross Creek township, and was one of the representative men of the day. He died in 1856. He was a Whig in politics, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Thomas P. Vance, son of William and Hannah (Patterson) Vance, was born July 15, 1819. He was reared on the pioneer farm, partaking of the privations of early frontiersmen and receiving his education at the subscription schools. In early manhood Thomas P. Vance was united in marriage with Mary W., daughter of George Newell, of Ohio. Mr. Newell was married to Mary Marquis, and their children were Hugh, Jane, Marquis, Margaret, David, Mary W., Ann and Sarah. Mr. Newell was a Democrat, and in church connection was a member of and elder in the Presbyterian Church. Mr. and Mrs. Vance settled on a farm in Cross Creek township, this county, where he passed his life in agricultural pursuits. He paid much attention to stock raising, making a speciality of sheep. He was formerly a Whig, and upon the organization of the party, became a Republican, and in religion he was a prominent member of the Presbyterian Church at Cross Creek and Burgettstown. On May 31, 1891, he was laid to rest in Cross Creek cemetery by the side of his wife, who had preceded him, leaving two children: W. W., and Mary E. (Mrs. W. S. Lee).

W. W. Vance, son of Thomas P. and Mary W. (Newell) Vance, was reared and educated in Cross Creek township, this county, and passed his early life in farming. In September, 1853, he was united in marriage with Ann J. Porter. In 1882 Mr. Vance came to Burgettstown and formed a partnership with S. C. McGregor, in the general merchandise business, and at present has the largest stock of goods in the town, realizing a good profit from the daily sales. In politics he has always been an active Republican. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and one of its most liberal supporters.

JOHAN SHANTON, an agriculturist of Carroll township, is descended from natives of the "Blue Grass" State. His grandfather, Abram Shanton, was born in Bourbon county, Ky., where his boyhood was passed on the farm. In 1820 he and his family moved to Pickaway county, Ohio, where he died, leaving several children.

Raymond Shanton was born and reared in Kentucky, and came to Ohio with his father in 1820. He was married to Margaret, daughter of John McClain, a native of Kentucky, and their children were Jane (wife of Lewis Fry), Margaret (married to J. D. Kline, of Ross county, Ohio), Nancy (deceased) and John. The father died about sixty years ago.

John Shanton was born July 22, 1830, in Pick-away county, Ohio, where he attended the log-cabin school, and studied from the text-books of the day, viz.: Webster's Speller and Calculator. In 1848 young Shanton left his native State, and went to Pennsylvania, locating in Fallowfield township, Washington county. In 1849 he was married to Louisa Fry, at which time he had but 5 cents with which to begin housekeeping. She was born in 1820, a member of the prominent Fry family of Washington county. Mr. and Mrs. Shanton moved to Belle Vernon, Fayette Co., Penn., the year after their marriage, and he worked on a sawmill there for several years. In 1855 they went to Ross county, Ohio, where he conducted a hotel four years. They then returned to Washington county, and locating on a farm, followed stock raising and distilling. He now owns eighty-seven acres of good land, and has accumulated a comfortable property, notwithstanding the fact that he lost about $6,000 by fire in the distillery. Politically he votes with the Republican party.

ROBERT J. ELWOOD, one of the leading and most prosperous of Washington county's intelligent representative farmer citizens, is a son of an old pioneer of this part of the State, by name William Elwood, a native of Belmont county, Ohio, who came hither in 1818.

William Elwood was poor, both in this world's goods and in what an education might have given him, but he had received none. When he entered Washington county, all his belongings he carried in a bandanna handkerchief; but the hand that it was held in was rich in honesty and industry, destined ultimately to place its owner on the top rung of the ladder of success. He was a blacksmith by trade, at which he worked assiduously in Centreville, this county, and by indomitable perseverance, close attention to business, and judicious economy, he not only made money, but saved it. By and by he bought a house and lot, then sixty-six acres of land, then 122, then 211 acres near Fredericktown, and, finally, yet another tract of 128 acres, all in East Bethlehem township, and every foot of it earned by honest labor. (This tract is now owned and occupied by his son Robert J., the principal improvements being placed on it by the latter, including an elegant and commodious residence costing $2,000.) This son of toil, this nobleman of nature, surrounded by the blessings he had gathered about him, was called from the scene of his labors in 1871. In politics he was a Democrat, in religion a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. His wife, who had been reared in the Quaker faith, died in 1885.

William Elwood married a Miss Greer, who bore him seven children, all now deceased, as is also their mother. After her death he married, for his second wife, Ruth Lilley, who was born in 1812, a daughter of Thomas Lilley, a native of Ireland, and the children of this union were Thomas W., a resident of Charleroi, this county; Robert J.; J. U., a machinist in McKeesport, Penn., and one that died in infancy.

Robert J. Elwood was born December 25, 1849, in East Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., was educated in the common schools of his neighborhood, and reared to agricultural pursuits. On the death of his father he took charge of the homestead, and cared for his widowed mother until her death in 1885. Mr. Elwood was married May 3, 1873, to Maggie E., daughter of John and Mary (Reynolds) Deems, of West Pike Run township (now deceased), and the children of this union were Alverdi R. (attending the Southwestern State Normal School at California, Penn.), and John William (who died in infancy). Mr. Elwood is a Democrat, and has held the office of school director six years, also judge of election for a time. Mrs. Elwood is a member of the Methodist Church.

THE PARK FAMILY are numbered with the earliest settlers of Washington county, Penn. In the fall of 1777 one Samuel Park came from Lancaster, Penn., to Washington county, and bought 566 acres of land on Chartiers creek, of Matthew Rodgers. He then returned home, and sent out his two sons John and James, with their sister Isabella to keep house for them. The rest of the family soon followed, and to the original tract other lands were added. This Samuel Park died in 1794, followed by his wife in 1808. Their children were John, James, Mary, Isabella and Hugh.

John Park was born December 18, 1758, in Donegal, Lancaster Co., Penn., coming with the family to Washington county when a young man. In 1787 he married Sarah McDowell, a native of South Strabane township, this county. They resided on the Park farm several years, and April 20, 1809, bought and moved upon the homestead in Cecil township, this county. The following children were born to this marriage: Rebecca (Mrs. James Rankin), William, and McDowell (a wealthy landowner who resided on a part of the homestead. He was never married).

William Park, second child of John and Sarah (McDowell) Park, was born July 15, 1797. In 1831 he bought a 300-acre farm in Peters township, this county, and having prepared the home, lost no time in securing a life companion. On October 29, 1833, he was united in marriage with Miss Jane Law, and settling on the place devoted his time to sheep raising and wool growing. Of the seven children born to this couple, John is living in Cecil township, Robert resides in Peters township, James M. lives in Canonsburg, and Sarah, married to J. L. Thompson, is living in Westmoreland county, Penn. The father was trustee of Jefferson College thirty years, and also director of the Chartiers Valley Railroad Company. He died November 6, 1870, in his seventy-third year.

JAMES M. PARK was born December 25, 1850, and attended the schools of the home district during his boyhood. He was married to Nancy J., daughter of Thomas Hill, a resident of Peters township, this county, and she has borne him two children, William and Clara. Some years after his marriage Mr. Park moved to Allegheny, Penn., residing in that city for some time, where he was interested in musical enterprises. He then came to Canonsburg, this county, and opened the general merchandise business which he is now conducting. Politically he is an active member of the Republican party. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg, and has for some time led the choir.

WILLIAM KERR, who was in his lifetime a much respected citizen of East Finley township, was descended from Irish ancestry. His grandfather, Hugh Kerr, was a prominent weaver and manufacturer of County Down, Ireland.

Andrew Kerr, son of Hugh, was born February 14, 1768, in Ireland, and learned the trade of a weaver. He emigrated to America at the age of eighteen, landing, after a voyage of thirteen weeks, at New York, and thence proceeding to Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., where in the spring of 1787 he purchased about six hundred acres of land, situated nearly four and a half miles northeast of Claysville, this county. There in the unbroken wilderness he erected his cabin home, and in 1805 was married to Esther Stevenson, born November 18, 1782, near the present village of Coon Island; she was the daughter of James Stevenson, a native of Washington county. To this union were born the following named children: Jane (Mrs. Jessie Bane), born October 30, 1806; Robert (married to Nancy Vanderhuff), born May 6, 1808; James, born December 18, 1810; William (subject of the present memoir); Elizabeth, born December 17, 1816, and Esther, born December 15, 1818, all of whom lived to an adult age. Several years after the marriage of Andrew Kerr, his aged parents left their native land to spend their declining years with their son. His mother was a physician, and successfully followed that profession in this country until 1822, when both she and her husband died of yellow fever. Andrew became a wealthy farmer, but afterward sold the greater portion of his property to "give bail" for a nephew, and this expense almost ruined him. He continued to live on the farm until his death, which occurred July 15, 1850, his wife having preceded him August 14, 1849. They were both buried in Pleasant Grove cemetery, East Finley township, this county, and their children rest beside them. Mr. Kerr was an active supporter of the Democratic party. In religious connection he united with the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, and the letter of recommendation which he brought to America in 1786 is still in the possession of his grandchildren.

William Kerr was born December 27, 1813, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., and received a somewhat limited education, spending his boyhood days on the farm of his father. He also acquired a general knowledge of carpentry from practical experience. On October 31, 1837, he was united in marriage with Cynthia Peden, born April 15, 1817, daughter of Joseph and Hannah (Pilton) Peden, and to this union were born children as follows: James, born March 29, 1838 (a skilled carpenter and contractor, residing in Wheeling, W. Va.); Robert, born September 26, 1839, farming on the home place; Andrew, born July 30, 1841 (deceased December 5, 1881); and Hannah, born January 28, 1843 (living with her mother on the home farm). After his marriage Mr. Kerr purchased, of David Peden, a tract of land in East Finley township, situated about two miles west of Pleasant Grove, where he lived and followed farming until his death, which occurred May 2, 1890. In politics he was always a Democrat, and in religion he was an adherent of the Pleasant Grove Baptist Church, of which his widow was a charter member, and one of the three who are still living. Mrs. Kerr resides with her son Robert and daughter Hannah, who manage the home farm.

WR. BURNS, a well-known young farmer of Hanover township, familiarly known as "Dick," is the descendant of an old Scotch family. His great-grandfather, one John Burns, was born in Scotland, and coming to America, located in Allegheny county, Penn., many years ago. He married, and reared the following sons: John, Robert, James, Thomas, Samuel, Alexander and William. The names of the daughters in this family have not been ascertained. The parents died in Allegheny county.

John Burns, a son of this early pioneer, was born in Allegheny county, Penn., and attended the rate schools, afterward supplementing this early training with a good practical education. He learned the cooper's trade, which he followed for some time. He was united in marriage with Jane Crooks, who was born near Candor, in Washington county, Penn., a daughter of Henry Crooks. The children of John and Jane Burns were as follows: Nancy, married to Samuel Nichols, a native of Ireland; Alexander, who lived near Clinton, Allegheny Co., Penn.; Jane, Mrs. Robert Aten; Henry; Mary, Mrs. John White, of Beaver county, Penn.; John; William; Margaret, widow of James Hood, living in Hanover township; and George a farmer of Allegheny county, living on the old homestead. Of this family Margaret and George are yet living. The father followed farming for many years in connection with his trade, and lived to a ripe old age. In politics he was a lifelong Whig, and in religion he and his wife were members of Hopewell Presbyterian Church. Both were buried in the cemetery of that church.

William Burus was born in 1811, in Allegheny county, Penn., and during boyhood worked on the farm, and attended the rate schools of his neighborhood. About 1836 he was married to a Miss Saxton, of Hanover township, Washington county, who bore him four children, namely: John (deceased in youth), Elizabeth (Mrs. James Purdy, of Allegheny county), Melissa (twice married, first to Samuel Simpson, then to a Mr. Parkinson) and Sarah J. (Mrs. James Cain, of Beaver county, Penn.). The mother died, and for his second wife Mr. Burns was married to Nancy Crouse, of Hanover township, daughter of Jacob Crouse. Their children were Eveline (deceased), W. R. (subject), Ida (Mrs. Roscoe McClintock) and Andrew G. After his marriage William Burns located on the home farm in Hanover township, carrying on a successful business in general farming, and giving especial attention to the culture of small fruits. Politically he was an enthusiastic Whig and Republican. He died in 1879, and was buried in Frankfort cemetery. After his death his widow continued to reside on the old place left by her husband, which she managed until the time of her tragic death, in February, 1890. She was standing as a spectator by a boiler house (used by a pipeline company to transport oil) which had been erected on her property, when the boiler exploded and Mrs. Burns sustained injuries which resulted in her death three days later. She was laid by her husband in Frankfort cemetery. They were both members of the Presbyterian Church at Frankfort, in which he had served in various capacities.

W. R. Burns was born December 22, 1863, in Hanover township, this county, and passed his boyhood on the old place. On September 30, 1886, he was married to Lizzie Moore, who was born in 1865, a daughter of Russell and Hannah (Livingston) Moore, of Florence, this county. The young couple first located in Frankfort, Beaver Co., Penn., where he followed teaming in the oil fields, continuing in that business after coming to his present home. He has erected a very pleasant new residence on a part of the old homestead, where he is now living. He is a progressive young farmer of Hanover township, and in politics votes with the Republican party. Mr. and Mrs. Burns have three children: William L., Ralph L. and Nancy M., all living at home.

THOMAS SANDERS, a prominent farmer of Morris township, is a son of Stephen Sanders, and the only living representative of his family. Our subject was born in 1825, and received a limited education at the subscription schools of the section in which his father lived. The only business training he received was on the farm, on which he labored until maturity. In 1846 he married Jane Baldwin, born in 1827, a daughter of Selah Baldwin, at the time a resident of Morris township, but who afterward moved West. Mr. Sanders has resided at his present place of residence, three miles northeast of Prosperity, since his marriage. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Sanders has come one child, Lavina, born in 1847; she was married to A. O. Wilson, and is now a resident of Morris township. Mrs. Sanders died February 16, 1866, and in 1867 Mr. Sanders married Catherine McCullough, who was born April 7, 1836. To this union were born five children: Hannah Jane, born December 2, 1867; Manan, born January 4, 1870; Judson B., born August 9, 1872; John Forrest, born April 23, 1875; and Addie Arizona, born April 21, 1877, all of whom are living and make their homes with their father. In politics Mr. Sanders is a Democrat, and both he and his wife are members of the Mt. Hermon Baptist Church. In 1882 he erected the handsome dwelling which they now occupy, and he has retired from the active labor of the farm, which is carried on by his sons under his personal supervision.

WILLIAM WILLSON is a prominent business man of Claysville, Washington county. His paternal grandfather was a native of the Emerald Isle, where he married, and soon afterward with his wife and child immigrated to America. He first went to Philadelphia, and some time later moved to Dauphin county, Penn., remaining there until his death. He had three children: James (a tailor and clothier in Philadelphia, Penn.), Elizabeth (Mrs. William Rogers) and William. After the death of her father, Mrs. Rogers lived with her brother James for some time, and then moved with her husband to Ohio, where she died.

William Willson was born March 18, 1789, in Dauphin county, Penn., and there learned the wheelwright's trade, which he afterward followed in both Dauphin and Washington counties. He enlisted in the war of 1812, participating in the battle of Baltimore, and served until the close of the war, when he came to Washington county and bought a small tract of land in Buffalo township, where the remainder of his life was passed. On October 10, 1822, he was united in marriage with Rachel, daughter of James Keer, of Buffalo township, and their children were as follows: Elizabeth, Jane, James, Margaret (Mrs. Thomas Hodgson), John M., Mary (Mrs. George M. Warick), Emily, Rachel, and William. Mr. Willson was an intelligent and active business man. Politically he was a Democrat, and filled various township offices. In religion he was an ardent worker in and a trustee of the Presbyterian Church at Claysville. His wife died August 2, 1848, and he was laid beside her April 27, 1869.

William Willson (subject of our sketch) was born May 9, 1843, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., and attended the common schools of the township until about seventeen years of age, when he entered the employ of a builder and contractor. He remained with this man until he had mastered the various details of that business, and at the age of twenty-two years engaged with Alexander Buchanan in general contracting, which he continued for some time with marked success. Mr. Willson then began business for himself, and soon became one of the best architects and builders of his locality. He possessed very original ideas, and soon studied out entirely new designs, some of which were models of grace. After following this business for several years, he entered into partnership with D. M. Campsey in a general hardware store. They remained together about ten years, when Mr. Willson united with J. W. Barnes in the grocery business; two years later, Mr. Barnes sold his share of the property to the present partner of Mr. Willson, and they now carry a full line of goods, and conduct the largest grocery in Claysville. On October 6, 1868, Mr. Willson was united in marriage with Sadie C., daughter of Dr. John McCabe, of Buffalo township, this county. They have no children. He has ever favored all public enterprises which tended to advance the common interests, and in political views he is an active worker in the Democratic party. In church connection, he is an earnest worker in the Presbyterian Church at Claysville, being especially interested in the Sunday-school, in which he is an officer.

MRS. MARTHA RANKIN is the widow of James Rankin, who was a grandson of John Rankin. John Rankin was born in Winchester, Va., and came with his parents to Washington county, Penn., about 1775, bringing colored help with them from Virginia. He had a family of eight sons and two daughters, nearly all of whom were born in Winchester, Va. He located in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, securing 1,800 acres of choice land, then a vast wilderness, which is now transformed into some of the finest farms of Washington county. Here he erected a log cabin, and made such improvements as were possible, being in constant danger from the treacherous savages. But bravely and patiently he struggled on, establishing the pioneer home. After his sons had grown to manhood, one of them, James, joined a party who went to establish a colony in Kentucky. They arrived safely, but during the return trip were attacked by the Indians, and James was killed, his fate being but one addition to that of the many pioneers who were practically martyrs to colonization. The parents of James passed the remainder of their lives on the frontier farm, both dying the same year.

Samuel Rankin, youngest son of John, was born July 18, 1769, in Winchester, Va., and came to this county in 1774. On January 7, 1796, he was married to Jane McConahey, who was born February 18, 1775, daughter of a pioneer settler, and the following children were born to their union: William, John, David, Matthew, Samuel, Stephen, James, Matilda, Abigail and Jane. Of these children Jane (unmarried) is the only one now living; the others lived to an adult age and were citizens of Washington county. Samuel Rankin became a wealthy farmer, and lived on the old home farm, which is situated about two miles northwest of Hickory, this county. In politics he was a Democrat, and was one of the famous "minute men." In religion he and his wife were members of the Union Church. He died in October, 1820, being followed by his wife July 20, 1869, in her ninety-fourth year. The remains of both lie in the U. P. cemetery at Hickory, Mt. Pleasant township, this county. Their children were as follows: William, born November 24, 1796 (deceased January 13, 1884), John, born April 4, 1798 (deceased in April, 1866), David, born February 15, 1800 (deceased July 27, 1858), Matthew, born February 15, 1802 (deceased in June, 1880), Matilda, born March 22, 1804 (deceased in February, 1875), Samuel, born June 3, 1806 (deceased May 27, 1834), Abigail, born in October, 1808 (lived on the old homestead), James (deceased, mentioned below), Stephen, born August 20, 1813 (deceased in February, 1877), and Jane, born February 6, 1817 (living in Burgettstown).

James Rankin was born March 24, 1811, in Mt. Pleasant township, and passed his youth on the old home place, receiving his education in the log schoolhouse of the day. In December, 1834, he was married to Martha V. Stevenson, who was born in 1813, daughter of James Stevenson, of Smith township, this county. James Stevenson was a native of Washington county, and was here married to Jane Vance, who bore him children as follows: Ann (Mrs. Alexander Hays), John S., Elizabeth (Mrs. S. J. Ghist), Mary (wife of Patterson Vance), Martha V. (married to James Rankin), Joseph, Edgar, and Rachel J. (wife of John B. Phillis). Mr. Stevenson followed the vocation of a miller, afterward opening a carding mill, and was also engaged in the undertaking business. He was first a Democrat in politics, then became a Whig, afterward uniting with the Republican party. He was formerly a member of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church, and when the Burgettstown Church was organized, became a regular attendant thereof.

James and Martha (Stevenson) Rankin first settled on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and in 1868 moved to an adjoining place, coming to Burgettstown in 1884. They had the following children: Samuel N. (who enlisted in Company D, Twenty-eighth N. Y. Regiment, serving three months, then in 1863 entered the secret service under Gen. Banks, and was missing while en route to Richmond); James E., living in Mt. Pleasant township; Jane E., Mrs. John P. Campbell; William Ray, who was drowned in 1846; John O., living in Baker City, Oregon; Joseph Vance, living in Wichita, Kans.; and Anna M. James Rankin was a popular and enterprising citizen, having won success by his own exertions. He was a warm friend of educational progress, and in religion was a member of the Mt. Prospect Presbyterian Church, of which he was a ruling elder for twenty-eight years. He died July 27, 1887, at Burgettstown, this county, where his widow is yet living. He was a justice of the peace for many years.

MRS. MARGARET HOOD is the widow of James Hood, who was born October 23, 1805, in Allegheny county, Penn., son of John Hood, a native of Ireland. James Hood was educated in the old-fashioned log schoolhouse of those days, and began to learn the trade of a tanner at an early age, but owing to failing health was compelled to abandon that business. On June 26, 1834, he was married to Margaret Burns, who was born November 23, 1814, in Allegheny county, Penn., daughter of John and Jane (Crooks) Burns. The children born to James and Margaret Hood were as follows: Jane, Mary, Nancy (who first married Samuel Ackleson, and is now the widow of Thomas Ramsey), Catherine (widow of William Moreland), John (a farmer of Hanover township), William (a farmer of Hanover township), Annie (now Mrs. William Banford, of Robinson township), James, Amanda, and George B. (farming on the home place). Of these children Jane, Mary, James and Amanda are deceased. After his marriage James Hood worked for some time at his trade, and then located on the farm near Murdocksville, Hanover township, this county, where he successfully followed agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred July 13, 1866. He was buried in the Hopewell Church cemetery, Allegheny county, Penn. Mr. Hood was one of the leading members of the Hopewell Church, serving as an elder for some time. He was a prosperous and influential citizen. Since the death of her husband, Mrs. Hood has resided on the home place, surrounded by many friends, who hold her in the highest esteem. She is remarkably well preserved for a lady of her age. She has been a member of Hebron Church for thirty years.

HIRAM RABE. Among the most extensive stock-dealers and wealthy agriculturists of Carroll township, this gentleman is a very prominent figure. He is a son of Jacob Rabe, an early farmer of Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn., who died when his son was yet a small child.

Hiram Rabe was born on the old Rabe homestead, and after the death of his father resided with his grandparents until arriving at mature age, when he began life as a farm laborer at $5 per month. When a young man he married Catherine Fredreck, a native of Clover Hill, Washington Co., Penn., and she bore him five children, namely: W. T., living at home; David G., an agriculturist of Carroll township; James A., living with his father; Florence, now Mrs. Tucker, of Carroll township, and Anna M., married to a Mr. Blackenberger, of Monongahela. The mother of these children died January 29, 1876, and on April 4, 1877, Hiram Rabe was married to Matilda Teagarden, who was born in Ohio, daughter of William Teagarden. At the time of his first marriage Mr. Rabe had but $500, which he invested with such excellent judgment that he is now a wealthy man, having acquired his property solely by personal enterprise and industry. He served at one time as grand jurymen at Scranton, Penn., and was then complimented by the judge for his ability in giving decisions according to the evidence. He has traveled quite extensively throughout the West, having visited Chicago, St. Louis, and other principal cities. He owns 400 acres of land in Carroll township, where he is now conducting an extensive stock farm, keeping an average of 100 head of cattle, and also owning valuable real estate in Monongahela. Politically, he votes with the Republican party, and has served as school director, supervisor, and in various other local offices.

WA. VAN SCYOC is a native of East Finley township, this county, having been born there November 24, 1853. He is a grandson of Enoch Van Seyoc, who was born in eastern Pennsylvania, and came to Washington county in an early day, when the country had few settlers. He located in Pleasant Grove, in East Finley township, becoming prominently identified with the early history of the county, and there reared his family, but in later years removed to Greene county, Penn., locating near Jacktown, where he died in 1864.

Jesse M. Van Seyoc was born January 29, 1823, near the present village of Pleasant Grove, East Finley township, Washington Co., Penn., where he received very limited educational opportunities, and assisted his father on the home farm until some time after his marriage. In 1845 he was married to Mary Rogers, who was born March 31, 1825, daughter of James Rogers, of Morris township, Washington county, and to their union children were born as follows: Phoebe Sibylline, born June 18, 1846, died July 6, 1853; John A., born October 21, 1848, died July 19, 1853; Mary Elizabeth, born January 30, 1851 (wife of George Moring, a glass manufacturer, living in Muncie, Ind.); W. A.; Lavina H., born October 6, 1856 (Mrs. B. F. Day, living in Bellaire, Ohio); James A., born August 13, 1859, died May 29, 1883; Mason V., born July 26, 1862 (a carpenter of Washington, Penn.); and Isadore Etoy, born January 9, 1866 (wife of Edward Reisher, a telegraph operator, living in Washington). Some time after his marriage Mr. Van Seyoc moved to a place near Prosperity, Morris township, this county, and conducted a gristmill several years. Afterward he embarked in mercantile business at Pleasant Grove, East Finley township, which he followed till 1876, then began farming on land which he afterward purchased, and several years later moved to Washington borough, same county, where he and his wife now live retired.

W. A. Van Seyoc received a common-school education, and began mercantile business in his father's store at Pleasant Grove, which vocation he followed several years. On November 30, 1876, he was united in marriage with Maggie A. Ryan, who was born December 7, 1860, daughter of Joseph Ryan, of East Finley township, and their children were as follows: Gertrude E., born October 17, 1877; Ora B., born September 23, 1880; Mand W., born November 2, 1882; Letcher D., born March 8, 1886; an infant son (deceased), born January 24, 1889; and Vina Verbal, born January 24, 1890, all of whom remain at home. After his marriage Mr. Van Seyoc lived on and managed his father's farm several years; then, in 1881, he resumed mercantile business at Pleasant Grove, East Finley township, and disposing of that, in 1890 purchased the "Old Ryan farm," situated about one mile south of Pleasant Grove, where he yet resides, and where he successfully followed farming. He is a prominent member of the Republican party. He and his wife are members of the Baptist Church at Pleasant Grove.

SAMUEL LOGAN is a leading representative of one of the oldest and most prominent families in Buffalo township. His grandfather, John Logan, was born and reared in Ireland, and there passed the earlier portion of his life. When well advanced in years, John Logan immigrated to America with his wife and the following children: Hugh, John, Samuel, James, William, Nancy and Jane. He landed in New York, and then came west to Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., where he purchased, from one Williamson, 416 acres of land. It was then in a very rude state of cultivation, and Mr. Logan, with the aid of his sons, at once began the long and arduous task of clearing the pioneer farm. That his efforts were crowned with deserved success, is evident from the air of thrift and prosperity which surrounds that portion of the estate which is still in the possession of his descendants. Mr. Logan was an earnest Christian, and an honest and thrifty citizen—a grand specimen of pure and noble manhood. He died in 1819, and was laid to rest amid the sorrow of all who knew him. His children all lived to an adult age, but are now deceased.

Samuel Logan (father of subject) was born in 1785 in Ireland, and received a good education in the common schools of his native country. He was twenty-one years of age when he came with his father's family to America, and on the death of Mr. Logan, Samuel assumed the management of his portion of the estate, which he had assisted in clearing. His brother James learned and followed the blacksmith's trade in Ireland, and another brother, Hugh, learned and followed the weaver's trade, in the old country. After his father's death, Samuel was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of James Lattimer, who was of Scottish birth, and a pioneer settler of Washington county. Being a soldier in the Revolutionary war, he suffered all the hardships incident to military life; he died in 1845 in Perry county, Ohio. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. (Lattimer) Logan were born children as follows: Sarah Jane, Margaret, Mary and Samuel. Of this family Mary and Samuel are the only living children. Mr. Logan added many improvements to the home farm before his death.

Samuel Logan was born October 29, 18—, on the farm in Buffalo township which is yet in his possession. He attended the subscription schools, and succeeded in obtaining a good education. His early youth was passed on the home farm, and in 1854 he was united in marriage with Sarah Ann, daughter of James Byers, and to their union the following children have been born: Mary (wife of Nelson Doak, of Buffalo township), William (living in Sugar Hill, Franklin Co., Penn.), Anna (wife of Jacob Weirich, a prominent agriculturist of Buffalo township, this county), Eva (Mrs. Boyd McCoy, living in South Strabane township, Washington county), James (residing with his father on the old homestead), Rebecca, Nettie Olive, Bertha, Maud and Herbert, also living at home. Mr. Logan's farm consists of 100 acres of fine land, lying in the center of a prosperous and enterprising community, and he devotes his time to its cultivation, and to stock raising. In political opinion he is a Republican, and, although not an active politician, he is much interested in the welfare of his party. His family are members of the United Presbyterian Church, and he is highly respected by the community in which he resides.

ELLIS JONES is one of the most genial, popular and eminently successful agriculturists of Independence township. He is a grandson of Charles Jones, who was born east of the mountains, where he married, and reared a family of six children. Little is known of his life.

Charles Jones (a son of Charles) was born in 1774, in an eastern State, and in early life came to Brooke county, W. Va., where he followed farming and distilling, a practice then much in vogue among farmers. He was married in West Virginia to Keziah Cole, who was born in 1802 in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., and she bore him the following children: Susan (deceased wife of John Null, of Marshall county, W. Va.), Hannah (widow of Thomas McQuerry, of Marshall county, W. Va.), David, George, Barnet, Ellis, Charles and William. Of these Susan, David, George, Charles and William are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Jones resided in Brooke county, W. Va., for some time after their marriage, finally removing to Independence township, Washington Co., Penn., and locating permanently on the home farm, lying about one mile northeast of Dunsfort. He was a very successful farmer and stock raiser. In politics he was a Whig. He died June 7, 1847, being followed by his wife in 1875; both were consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Ellis Jones was born August 9, 1820, on the home farm in Independence township, and received a country-school education. On October 14, 1864, he was united in marriage with Keziah McLain, who was born in 1832, in Donegal township, this county. Their children are Charles L., Virginia B., Stewart M., Ellis N. and Bertha Lee, all living at home. Ellis Jones has always resided on the old place, from which he has never been absent more than two months at a time. He is kind-hearted and generous, ever ready to aid those meriting assistance, and never allowing a man to go hungry from his door. In public life he is enterprising and progressive, willing to assist in furthering any movement tending to benefit the community; he casts his ballot with the Democratic party, and has filled various township offices. His success in life is due to energy and good management. He and his wife are consistent members of the Mt. Zion United Brethren Church.

JOHAN W. BERRYMAN, senior member of the well-known grocery firm, J. W. Berryman & Son, in Coal Centre, was born February 2, 1837, near Elizabeth, Allegheny Co., Penn., a son of Duncan Berryman, and a grandson of John Berryman, both of whom were natives of New York, where the grandfather died. Duncan Berryman was born and reared in New York, and coming to Allegheny county, Penn., when a young man, was there married to Sarah Grimes, daughter of William Grimes, of Elizabeth, that county. After his marriage Mr. Berryman followed ship building at Elizabeth for several years.

John W. Berryman, whose name introduces this biographical sketch, received a liberal education, and passed his youth in East Pike Run township, this county. He began business life by running a ferry at Allenport, a vocation he followed for some years. In 1876 he came to Coal Centre, where he successfully carried on a meat market until 1887, in which year he entered into partnership with a Mr. Gleason in the grocery trade. In 1888 he purchased the entire business, which he and his son John D. have since successfully conducted. Father and son are active, energetic business men, and by close attention to the wants of their patrons have widened their custom and enlarged their store, which is now one of the most extensive establishments of the kind in the locality.

On November 5, 1861, our subject was united in marriage with Annie Hause, daughter of Joseph Hause, and their children were: Ella (deceased), William I. (an attorney), John D. (living in Coal Centre), and Georgia (deceased). Politically Mr. Berryman is a Democrat.

WILLIAM M. BELL, a progressive farmer of Cecil township, is a native of the same, born in 1823, a grandson of John and Mary Bell, natives of eastern Pennsylvania, who came to Washington county and to Cecil township at an early day, buying three farms, one of which was in Peters township. The grandfather after coming to this county passed his life in Cecil township. He was a Revolutionary soldier.

John Bell, a son of the above-mentioned couple, was born in Virginia, and coming with his parents to Washington county was reared and educated in Cecil township. In early life he was married to Mary Hall, a native of Chartiers township, this county, and they settled on a farm in Cecil township, where eight children were born to them, of whom William M. is the only one yet living. The father was an active worker in the Whig party, and a staunch supporter of W. H. Harrison. In religion Mr. and Mrs. Bell were members of the Presbyterian Church at Miller's Run, of which he was a ruling elder. He died about the year 1854, in his eighty-fourth year, followed by his widow in 1876, she being then ninety-three years of age.

William M. Bell, the subject of these lines, was born on the farm adjoining his present home, and was educated in the subscription schools of Cecil township, in the same district where he is now living, and where he has devoted his attention to farming and carpentry. In 1846 he married Miss Roxanna Smith, a native of Westmoreland county, Penn., and the young couple began married life on the farm where they are yet residing, and which comprises 103 acres of well-cultivated and fertile land. Twelve children blessed their union—seven daughters and five sons—six of whom are now living, namely: J. S., Charlie, Florence, Georgie, Leonora and Alexander; two of the sons and two of the daughters are married. In politics Mr. Bell is a pronounced Republican.

ADAM WEIR (deceased), who in his lifetime was one of the well-known, representative, native-born citizens of Franklin township, first saw the light May 27, 1801, on the old family home place, known as the "Stephen Post farm."

He was a son of Samuel Weir, who was brought by his parents when a young child from Scotland to America, the family making a final settlement in Washington county, Penn., some locating near Pigeon creek, while others made a settlement near Van Buren. Samuel was here married to Margaret, daughter of John Clark, and they then settled on the Stephen Post farm, where they passed the remainder of their days. The names of the children born to them are Joseph, Adam, Thomas, Jane, Mary, Elizabeth, Rachel and Sarah (the latter married to a Mr. Rettig), all now deceased. Mr. Weir was a lifelong farmer, eminently successful in his vocation. For many years he was a consistent Presbyterian, in which faith he died; in politics he was an active Democrat.

Adam Weir passed his boyhood and youth in working on the farm, and attended, during the winter months, the subscription schools of the neighborhood. On December 1, 1825, he was united in marriage with Sarah Carter, who bore him the following named children: Margaret (who died in Washington county), Jane (deceased), William (in Franklin township) and Henry B. This wife dying, Mr. Weir was afterward, on May 19, 1836, united in marriage with Phoebe Tucker, and the children by that union were Samuel H. (deceased), John N. (in Franklin township), Sarah (wife of Frank Gabby) and Phoebe D. On May 14, 1850, Mr. Weir was again married, this time to Mrs. Cynthia Kane, daughter of Mathias Minton, and widow of C. C. Kane, and one son was born to them—Adam, Jr., of whom special mention is made further on—and one daughter—Lell, in Pittsburgh. Adam Weir, Sr., came in 1840 to the present residence of his widow and youngest son, and made many improvements thereon. At his death he was the owner of a large farm, the accumulation of a lifetime of hard work. He was an active and liberal supporter of the Presbyterian Church and all public enterprises, and was universally respected. Mr. Weir died July 15, 1866, and is buried at Prosperity.

Adam Weir, Jr., son of Adam, Sr., and Cynthia Weir, was born October 21, 1851, was educated at the common schools of the home neighborhood, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. He had to commence work early in life, and with true filial devotion has remained with his mother, having charge of the farm, which comprises 300 acres of prime land. He has for several years dealt extensively in live stock of all kinds, and is recognized as a thorough-going young business man, and has a wide acquaintance and a multitude of friends. On September 18, 1879, he was married to Ella, daughter of Thomas Hanna, of Morris township, and their children were Thomas A. (deceased in infancy), and Helen, Flora H., Fannie M. and Mary C., all yet living under the paternal roof. Mr. Weir is a staunch Democrat, and has served as school director of his district. He and his wife are members of the Ten-Mile Presbyterian Church.

I SAAC N. LYTLE was born December 26, 1849, and is a son of Benjamin, who was a son of Joseph, who was a son of Robert Lytle, a record of whom appears on page 953, this volume.

Joseph Lytle was born in 1790, on the home farm in Allegheny county, Penn., where his youth was passed. He was married to Margaret Murphy, of Washington county, and they resided several years in Mercer county, Penn., but finally returned to the old homestead in Allegheny county. Joseph died, leaving five children, viz.: Benjamin, Anne, Sarah, Isaac and Mary, of whom Isaac is the only survivor.

Benjamin Lytle, son of Joseph and Margaret (Murphy) Lytle, was born October 25, 1810, in Beaver county, Penn., but passed his early life in Gastonville, Washington county. In early youth he was apprenticed to Benjamin Higbee to learn the trade of cooper, commencing business for himself in 1831. In 1838 he married Miss Arsula McFarland, of Peters township, Washington county, who bore him the following children: W. G., Mary J., Joseph F., Josephine M., Isaac N., Anna L., James E., John H. and Maggie T. Mr. Lytle continued to follow his trade until 1851, when he bought a farm, moving upon it in 1852, and remained there until 1875. During this interval he purchased two other small farms, the three places containing about 140 acres. In 1875 he built a store-room and dwelling in Gastonville, this county, and, taking up his abode in the village, opened a real estate office. He was an active worker in the Democratic party and held many township offices; in religion he was a member of the Baptist Church, in which he served as deacon. He died June 14, 1887.

SAMUEL G. SKILES. This progressive and enterprising citizen of Chartiers township, one of the most extensive and best-known dairymen of Washington county, deserves prominent place in this work.

He is a grandson of Gideon and Jane Skiles, early residents of Lancaster county, Penn., who came to Washington county about the year 1822, where they passed the remainder of their pioneer lives. Samuel Skiles, their son, was born July 25, 1810, on the old home farm in Lancaster county, and was, as will be seen, about twelve years of age when he came with his parents to this county. At the age of sixteen, he hired to drive a team, which business he continued to follow, handling freight to and from Pittsburgh, and afterward from Pittsburgh to Philadelphia and Baltimore. In 1840 he was united in marriage with Sarah Guthrie, who was born July 5, 1820, and eight children were born to this union, viz.: Jane (deceased wife of John W. Gaston), Isaac L. (married to Miss Sydney Armstrong), Margaret Ann (deceased wife of Moses Ross), Belle (deceased wife of Joseph Kerr), Sarah Nancy (Mrs. Amos Anderson), Samuel G., George M. (married to Nancy Willard) and Agnes R. (deceased). The mother of these children died April 2, 1861, and on April 25, 1865, the father was married to Margaret Ann Watkins. He died May 6, 1888, a member of the Associate Reformed Church.

Samuel G Skiles

Samuel G. Skiles, the subject of this sketch, was born May 3, 1852, near Bower Hill, Peters township, Washington Co., Penn. He resided on the farm during his early life, and attended the common schools. On September 12, 1877, he married Emma Agnes McGibboney, born March 6, 1855, in Nottingham township, Washington Co., Penn., near Mumtontown, daughter of George and Rachel McGibboney, and the following children have been born to them: Rachel Agnes, Samuel McGibboney (deceased in early childhood), Flora Jane, Sarah Nancy, William Lytle (deceased), Mary Margaret, James Glenn and Georgia Alice. Mr. Skiles has taken an active interest in school and local affairs. His farm contains 130 acres of fertile, well cultivated land, where he pays special attention to the dairying business. At present he has a fine herd of Holsteins, and he is engaged in breeding that far-famed variety of cattle. The milk from his cows he ships to the Pittsburgh market. In religious faith he and his family are all members of the United Presbyterian Church.

JAMES WILSON, SR., was born in Ireland, date of birth and emigration to America not being known. He left Burnt Cabins, Bedford Co., Penn., about 1780, and settled four miles east of the town on what is now the National road. Coming, later, to the town of Washington, he purchased original lot No. 291 (which is to-day the site of Smith's store, corner of Bean and Main streets), erected a log house thereon, and opened a tavern, under license granted by the first court held in the county, October 3, 1781.

Some time later he purchased the certificate to lot No. 21, original town, on the east side of Main street, where the "Morgan block" now stands, deeding this new purchase to his son, Hugh, August 15, 1786, and in 1792 conveyed to him the certificate, and made the title perfect in him. The house erected on lot No. 21 was the great hall of the town, where meetings and entertainments were held, until Dr. John Julius Lemoyne opened his drug store therein; subsequently, until 1815, Mrs. Baker conducted a "Female Seminary" within its walls. James Wilson, Sr., resided in his pioneer house (corner of Main and Bean streets) until his death in 1792. He bequeathed that property, with 200 acres adjoining the town, to his widow, Margaret Wilson, for her use until James, their youngest son, should become of age, when it was to be equally partitioned between John, Thomas and James Wilson. Hugh, having previously received a liberal endowment in improved and vacant property in and near the town, was not named in the will; subsequently, however, he acquired title to the pioneer house (above referred to), from his youngest brother, James, and was owner for a long period. Hugh was well known as a business man, and he acquired quite a large amount of property in and near the town.

Hugh Wilson was married August 18, 1788, to Rachel Leet, daughter of Isaac Leet, and sister to Maj. Daniel Leet, to which marriage four children were born: Rebecca, Margaret, Rachel and Hugh W. Mrs. Rachel Wilson died February 14, 1818, and Mr. Wilson married Mrs. Margaret Fleming, widow of Jeremiah Fleming, to whom she had been married at Newtown Limavady, Ireland, and after whose death she emigrated to Pennsylvania with her daughter Catherine, to make her home near her sisters, Mrs. Robert Hamilton and Mrs. Patterson, who had located at Washington, Penn., some years before. This daughter, Catherine, married John B. McFadden, a silversmith of Washington, and moved with him to Pittsburgh; her daughter, Ann, married Gen. Alexander Hays, a brave officer in the Mexican and Civil wars. To the marriage of Hugh Wilson and Mrs. Margaret Fleming one daughter was born, Eliza, married to Rev. Thomas Swaim, who was pastor of the Baptist Church at Washington from 1846 to 1850. On the death of Mrs. Margaret Wilson, Mr. Wilson married Eliza Spencer, a native of England, who survived her husband many years, dying without issue.

In 1786 Hugh Wilson became the owner of the lot now occupied by the "Watson Building," by donation from his father, and carried on business there for many years. He died April 13, 1832. Of his children by Rachel Leet, Rebecca married James Blaine, who in 1809 opened a dry-goods store next to the house of Hugh Wilson, and a few years later they occupied the stone building inherited by his wife, Rebecca, from her father, and erected by David Bradford, of Whiskey Insurrection fame, in which they resided until death removed them from the pioneer circle. Mr. Blaine was a member of the town council in 1816, Burgess in 1818-22 and again in 1839, and justice in 1817, 1840 and 1845. Margaret Wilson married John, son of Col. James Marshal (her husband was elected sheriff in 1835, but resigned to become cashier of the Franklin Bank (now the First National) before the close of his term. In 1857 he retired from banking, and ended his days at his residence near Washington). Rachel married Richard W. Harding, and in 1882 was residing at Bethlehem, Penn., with her son, who is professor of natural science in Lehigh University (her eldest daughter is Mrs. Rebecca Harding Davis, the authoress); Mrs. Harding died in 1884, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Davis, in Philadelphia.

Hugh W. Wilson, fourth child of Hugh Wilson, was born in Washington, Penn., February 22, 1812, grew to manhood there, and ultimately settled on the farm which his grandfather had purchased in South Strabane township. His marriage with Frances Emma Barlow, daughter of Thomas and Frances Anica (Preble) Barlow (and niece of Commodore Preble), of Allegheny county, took place April 25, 1837, and to this union came the following named children: Edward Preble, born April 25, 1838, now residing at Cincinnati, Ohio; James B., born November 25, 1839, now residing on the farm in South Strabane township, which was the property of his great-grandfather, and occupying the house erected thereon by his grandfather; Clara, who married A. T. Baird, a sketch of whom appears in this biographical record, and Frances Emma, who died in infancy. Mrs. Frances E. Wilson died February 12, 1845, in her twenty-seventh year, and Mr. Wilson was remarried September 9, 1847, this time to Sarah Neville, a niece of Gen. Neville. She died September 30, 1856, leaving two children: Neville Craig, born October 30, 1850, died January 1, 1887, and Rebecca Blaine, born September 12, 1853, died February 18, 1879. Hugh W. Wilson died May 13, 1861, in his forty-ninth year. From his youth he was a farmer until the closing years of his life, when he devoted his principal attention to fruit growing, and, later, to floriculture. His sudden death was caused by internal rupture produced by rapid walking. Thomas Barlow, his father-in-law, was the secretary of his uncle, Joel Barlow, who was U. S. minister to France during the Napoleonic wars, and while in Russia during the campaign witnessed the burning of Moscow, and the terrible scenes following Napoleon's defeat; he buried his uncle, Joel, at Cracow, Poland, where he died from the effects of the excessive cold.

The Leet family, into which Hugh Wilson married, date their origin in America to 1685, when the grandfather of Isaac Leet left Mansfield, England, and found a home in the New Jersey colony. In 1751 Isaac Leet removed from New Jersey to Virginia, and found his way to Washington county, Penn., in 1779, following his son Daniel, who came in 1770. To Isaac and Rebecca Leet children as follows were born: Daniel, Rachel (who married Hugh Wilson), Jonathan (who married Mary, a daughter of Dr. Thomas Moore, and died in South Strabane township), Isaac (who died in Canton township), Elizabeth, Rebecca (who married Enoch Dye) and two or three others. He located 351 acres of land, under a Virginia certificate, which was surveyed January 6, 1807, and named "Leet's Fancy." The father of this family died there, and was buried where now is the Weirich cemetery. Jonathan Leet was the father of six children, one of whom was Isaac Leet, a prominent attorney, who was State senator in 1834, and later a member of Congress until his death in 1841. He married Margaret Swearingen Cook, daughter of John Cook and granddaughter of Andrew Swearingen. Mary, a daughter of Isaac and Margaret Leet, is the wife of James B. Wilson, grandson of Hugh Wilson. Maj. Daniel Leet was born near Bordentown, N. J., November 6, 1748. He was commissioned surveyor of Augusta county, Va., April 17, 1776. He served in the Revolution as quartermaster and paymaster, and on September 21, 1778, was promoted to the rank of brigade major. During and after the Revolution he was a leader of men. At Crawford's defeat he did not act as brigade major, but as the second in command, having been elected to the position by the volunteer force. He stood high in his profession of surveyor, acting as one of the commission in fixing the county seat of Washington county, and districting it into townships; serving as deputy surveyor before the western line of the Commonwealth was established; making the survey of the Second District of the Depreciation lands; making the survey within the reserved tract where Allegheny is located; laying out and surveying the other reserved tract at the mouth of the Beaver river, etc. He was made justice of the peace and ex officio associate judge when the county was erected, and was a representative in the General Assembly in 1791 and in 1792.

CHARLES A. BAILEY, one of the well-known citizens of Washington, while not long a resident of the county, has, since making his home here, been actively identified with the hotel interests of the city of his adoption.

He was born in Cattaraugus county, N. Y., in 1844, of New England ancestry, his father, James Bailey, having been a native of Massachusetts, a man in his earlier days skilled in various lines of business. In later life, however, becoming convinced that to be truly successful a man should have a single and distinguishing occupation, he disposed of his various interests, and thence forth devoted himself exclusively to farming in Erie county, Penn., where he died in 1850. In Massachusetts he was married to Miss Amelia Alcott (whose brother was a writer of considerable note), a cousin of Louise M. Alcott, whose "Little Men and Little Women" has given her a national reputation. By this union there were five children, only two of whom are now living—our subject and one sister, the former of whom was but four years old when his mother died in Erie county, Penn., whither the family had removed the previous year. The father married again, and by this second union there is one child, Frank H., who early in life evinced natural mechanical tastes, and in course of time became proficient in mechanical drafting. He now holds the position of past assistant engineer U. S. N., in the Army and Navy building, at Washington, D. C. He is a graduate of Annapolis Naval Academy, which he had entered as a cadet engineer. The father died when our subject was six years of age.

Charles A. Bailey passed his boyhood in New York until the age of fifteen years, when he returned to Pennsylvania and took up his residence in Titusville, devoting his time to the restaurant business through the oil regions until 1886, in which year he removed to Washington, Penn. Here for five years he conducted the "European Hotel," now known as the "Allison House." Some time after coming to Washington and engaging in business, he formed a partnership with S. B. McKennan, which has since continued. The old "Fulton House" was leased by Mr. Bailey, and for a time he conducted it as the leading hotel of the place; but proving unprofitable as a hostelry, it was converted into an apartment house, and so continued until January 5, 1893, when, having been thoroughly renovated, it was reopened to the public as a first-class house, the name "Hotel Main" being given it by the courteous and wide-awake proprietor, Charles A. Bailey, who conducts it in a thoroughly efficient manner.

In 1864, in Crawford county, Penn., Mr. Bailey was married to Miss Mary E., daughter of E. D. Gillett, of that county. No children have been born to them, but in 1882 they adopted a four-year-old child, from that time known as Gertie Bailey. In November, 1892, after an illness of some six weeks, she died, aged fourteen years. Mr. Bailey is a member of the Masonic Fraternity, and he has surrounded himself with a host of friends. He is a great lover of animals, especially "man's unselfish friend"—the dog.

H J. GAMBLE, M. D., one of the leading and most successful physicians of Washington county, is a native of Allegheny county, Penn., born in Elizabeth township January 9, 1846. Samuel Gamble, his great-grandfather, was born in Euniskillen, Ireland, March 17, 1702, and in an early day came to America, settling in Fayette county, Penn. He was married twice, first to Prudence——, by whom he had twelve children. He afterward married Elizabeth Patton, by whom he had two children, viz.: Rebecca Lyon, born 1781, and John.

John Gamble, the youngest son of Samuel, was born in Fayette county, Penn., May 9, 1783, and for many years was a prominent school teacher in his section. On March 15, 1808, he married Mary, daughter of Hezekiah and Mary (Brant) Douthitt.

John Gamble moved to Westmoreland county, Penn., and conducted a general store and a hotel at West Newton until 1817, when he proceeded to Allegheny county and purchased a large tract of land in Elizabeth township, all of which is still in the possession of his descendants. He died November 7, 1875, his wife having preceded him to the grave March 27, 1848. Mr. Gamble was a member of the Round Hill Presbyterian Church, of which he had been an elder many years. Politically, his sympathies were with the Democratic party, and for a long time he served as a justice of the peace in Allegheny county. He was gifted naturally with a mind clear on legal points—in law and equity—and was looked up to as the general adviser of the community among whom he might be living.

Samuel H. Gamble, father of subject, was born in Westmoreland county, Penn., February 8, 1812, and received a liberal education at the subscription schools of the district during the winter months, the rest of the year being devoted to laboring on the farm. On October 30, 1832, he was married to Margaret J., daughter of John Irwin, of whom special mention will be made further on. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Samuel H. Gamble settled on a farm in Elizabeth township, Allegheny county, where he died July 14, 1879 (the mother is still living). He was a member and substantial supporter of the Round Hill Presbyterian Church, and in politics he was a Democrat until the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion, when he became a Republican. He was an active and progressive self-made man. Six children were born to him, as follows: Sarah Ann, who married Caleb Edmundson (they reside on their farm in Forward township, Allegheny county); Harriet, married to John Bridenthall (he and wife resided in McKeesport; Mrs. Bridenthall died 1869); Oliver Perry, a farmer and merchant at Independence, Kans. (he married Harriet Hetley); John H. (subject); Rebecca Jane, married to William Hayden, a farmer and dairyman near McKeesport; James Harvey, a farmer and dairyman of Forward township, Allegheny county, residing on the old farm (he married Margaret McKinney).

Dr. Gamble's maternal great-grandfather, John Irwin, was born in Pennsylvania, was an agriculturist and died on his farm in Allegheny county. He married Margaret Fulton, of that county, a Covenanter who came to Westmoreland county with her parents when she was nine years old. After her husband's death, she moved to Washington county and settled on her farm. The home farm in Allegheny county is now owned by William Irwin. To John and Margaret (Fulton) Irwin were born children as follows: Martha, Margaret, Polly, Susan, Henry and John. Of these John was born in Westmoreland county, Penn., and was married to Sarah La Fever, a native of Allegheny county, Penn., and daughter of Minard (a cooper) and Charity Elinor La Fever, French Huguenots, and early settlers of Allegheny county. John and Sarah (La Fever) Irwin settled on the homestead of his mother in Forward township, where he carried on farming operations. They had ten children. Mr. Irwin, for his second wife, married Ann McConnell, by whom he had six children. Mr. Irwin served in both the war of 1812 and the Black Hawk war. He was a member of the United Presbyterian Church, and in political affiliations was first a Whig, afterward a Republican.

H. J. Gamble was reared in his native county, and at the common schools of the neighborhood of his boyhood home received a liberal education. At the age of seventeen he enlisted in Company G, Twenty second Pennsylvania Cavalry, which was assigned to the army of West Virginia, participating in the Shenandoah campaign, and during the latter part of their service they were with Sheridan. At the close of the war our subject received an honorable discharge and returned home. In 18— he entered the academy at Monongahela, where he remained some time, then attended the Normal School at Edinboro, Erie Co., Penn., and, afterward the Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill. Having now completed his education, in turn he became an educator, and for some time taught school in various parts of the States of Illinois and Kansas. In 1870 he entered the office of James C. Gamble, M. D., in Lawrence, Kans., where he remained some three years, reading medicine, at the end of which time he attended the Homeopathic Medical College, of Missouri, in St. Louis, from which he was graduated in 1874. Dr. Gamble commenced the practice of his chosen profession at Lawrence, Kans., remaining there one year, after which he practiced a year in Wilkesburg, Allegheny Co., Penn., and then in 1876 came to Monongahela.

On May 11, 1876, Dr. H. J. Gamble was married to Mary J., daughter of John Reynolds, and six children blessed their union, viz.: Harvey R., Robert R., Charles O. (deceased), Harold, and Margaret (deceased) and Mary (twins). Dr. and Mrs. Gamble are members of the Presbyterian Church; in politics he is an active Republican, and was nominated for Congress by the Prohibition party in 1888. In that year he was appointed supreme medical examiner of the Equitable Aid Union, and he has held various local offices of trust. Dr. Gamble is a progressive and energetic citizen, and takes an active interest in anything that is beneficial to his city. In 1886 he erected Gamble's Opera House. He is one of the leading educators of the county, and takes advanced ground on all educational questions.

JAMES W. WILLIAMS, a prominent farmer, and enterprising and progressive native-born citizen of Fallowfield township, was born June 17, 1843, on the farm where he is yet living. His father, Francis Hull Williams, was born February 24, 1799, near Courtney, Union township, this county, and was a lifelong farmer. His father went to Ohio to take up land, and was killed by Indians. Francis Hull Williams was married April 7, 1825, to Rosanna Jones, who was born May 4, 1804, and died September 18, 1870. She bore him the following children: Elizabeth, born February 18, 1826 (married to G. McIlvaine, of Carroll township); Margaret, born May 16, 1827, died in 1828; Thomas, born December 20, 1828, died May 13, 1834; William J., born January 20, 1831; John W., born February 21, 1834; Ruth E., born March 9, 1836 (married to William Stoneman, and lives in Churchill, Ohio); Francis H., born June 6, 1838; David N., born August 25, 1840; James M., whose sketch follows; Samuel, born April 2, 1845, died April 29, 1855; and Rosanna, born April 10, 1847, died September 29, 1848. The father of this family died February 25, 1856. He was a member of the M. E. Church, as was also his wife. The farms of the five surviving sons adjoin one another and cover an aggregate of over one thousand acres.

James M. Williams received his early education in the schools of Washington county, and remained at home until the death of his parents. On September 19, 1862, he enlisted in the "Ringgold Battalion" (22d Pennsylvania Cavalry), remaining in the service two years and ten months. His first commander was Capt. Milton W. Mitchner, who resigned in April, 1864, being succeeded by Capt. James Y. Chessron. Mr. Williams served through the entire Shenandoah Valley campaign, taking part in all the engagements of the Ringgold Battalion. He had a severe attack of typhoid fever while in the army, and after the conflict returned home to Washington county. On October 30, 1873, he was united in marriage with A. Estelle, daughter of W. Phillips, a prominent farmer of the county, and their children are Clara E., Ruth E., and Nancy B. On Mr. Williams' farm are two gas wells, also a large coal mine which has yielded him a good profit. In politics he is a Republican, and has served five years as supervisor of his township, refusing re-election. He and his wife are members of the M. E. Church.

THOMAS WEIR IRWIN is a great-grandson of John Irwin, who was born in County Down, Ireland, and who, in 1801, together with his wife, their son William, and his wife (Margaret McCormick, whom he married in 1800), two other sons—James and John—and one daughter, all left their native land together for America, intending to come by the same ship. William, just before the vessel sailed, went back for something he had forgotten, and when he again reached the quay, or wharf, he found to his dismay that the good ship had set sail without him, taking all the rest of the family. He followed, however, by the next ship he could find sailing for the New World, and must have passed the other on the ocean, for his trip was only of five weeks' duration, while the other ship had a perilous passage of thirteen weeks, being very nearly swallowed up by a succession of storms.

After landing, the family located on Plum run, Allegheny Co., Penn., near Pittsburgh. In the year 1802 they all moved to Kentucky except James Irwin, who remained in Washington county, Penn., to learn a trade. In 1803 the family proceeded to Ross county, Ohio, where they bought land, and Great-grandfather Irwin died there. Grandfather Irwin, with his wife, mother, brother and sister, moved to Highland county, Ohio, in 1804, and here he bought land, cleared off the timber and built his house, three corners of it resting on stumps, the fourth one on a stone. It was a typical old-fashioned log cabin, with clapboard roof weighted with poles, mother earth serving as a floor, while the primitive "furniture" consisted of a block of wood, three-legged stools, etc. Here the great-grandmother of our subject died at an extremely advanced age, and her son William and his wife both passed away in old age, he in 1853 and she in 1851.

In 1814 their son Robert was born in the "Wilderness" of Highland county, Ohio, where he attended the first school held in the county. The schoolhouse was of logs, one end being the fireplace, and the windows were holes cut in the logs and covered with greased paper. For five years Robert drove teams for his father between Chillicothe and Cincinnati, Ohio. He married Nancy W. Weir, a daughter of Thomas Weir, whom he met while visiting his uncle, James Irwin, in Pennsylvania. A correspondence was begun, and in 1810 they were married. To them were born the following children: James, Margaret, Lavina, Nancy W., Susan E., William McCormick and Thomas W.

The subject of our sketch was born January 24, 1843, in Highland county, Ohio. His sister Margaret married Josiah Smith, and bore him the following children: Nancy, Eleanor, Iva, Lola, Irwin, Margaret, Lavina, Thomas and Edna, of whom Nancy, Eleanor and Thomas are dead. Thomas W. Irwin is one of West Bethlehem's most prominent farmers, and enjoys an enviable reputation for thrift and honesty. Although his early education was gleaned from the common schools, he is a well-informed man, and has traveled quite extensively, spending some time in the "Far West." Mr. Irwin is a Democrat, and although not an office-seeker is one of the leaders of his party. He is a regular attendant of the United Presbyterian Church, of which he is a member.

WILLIAM M. HORN. The family, of which the subject of these lines is a prominent representative, are of German ancestry, and located in this county many years prior to the Revolution. The first couple of the name, of whom we have a record, were Martin and Peggy (Wilkins) Horn, who resided in Buffalo township, and reared a family of seven children.

John Horn, son of Martin and Peggy Horn, was born on the home farm in Buffalo township, and received a necessarily limited education. He grew to maturity amid the wild scenes of early civilization, and when a young man was married to Mary M. Gantz, daughter of John Gantz, an early resident of Greene county, Penn. The children born to this union were as follows: Martin, George C., Jacob, Hugh, Isaac, Margaret, Elizabeth (Mrs. Price), John, Hannah (Mrs. Elvey), William M. and Maria (Mrs. Coogle), of whom Jacob, John and Margaret are deceased.

William M. Horn, son of John and Mary M. Horn, was born April 18, 1839, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., where he was reared to agricultural pursuits, and received a good common-school education. In 1861 he, in company with his brothers Hugh and Jacob, bravely shouldered his musket in defense of the "Stars and Stripes," enlisting in Company A (Capt. Armstrong), One Hundredth P. V. I. He was mustered into service August 28, 1861, at Pittsburgh, Penn., and the company was first taken to Washington, D. C., thence to Beauport, S. C. He then participated in the following engagements: Port Royal, James Island, Bull Run, Chantilly, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, the charge upon Fort Sanders at Knoxville, Tenn., Blue Springs, Ky., and siege of Vicksburg. Mr. Horn was at this time transferred to the army of the Potomac, and there fought in the battle of the Wilderness, North Anna river, Cold Harbor and Petersburg. At the last mentioned engagement he was wounded by a minie ball in the left shoulder. On August 28, 1864, he received an honorable discharge, and returned to the farm in Washington county, Penn. His brother Jacob died the day that his term of enlistment expired; Hugh is now living in Henry county, Iowa. On January 1, 1885, William M. Horn was united in marriage with Louisa, second daughter of John Clemens. The latter traced his genealogy back, through many years, to an Englishman who emigrated from his native land in a very early day, and taking up a large tract of land in Buffalo township, Washington county, became identified with the earliest history of the county. Among the sons of this early pioneer was one James Clemens, born in Washington county, and married to Hannah Walton, who bore him the following children: Jeremiah, born September 16, 1763; Christina, born January 21, 1765; William C., born January 30, 1767; Abram, born October 3, 1769; Ann, born October 5, 1771; Ruth, born March 26, 1773; John, born September 12, 1775; Parmelia, born April 10, 1777; James, born March 4, 1779; Hannah, born March 5, 1781; Ezekiel, born July 18, 1783, and Hester, born June 18, 1785.

William C. Clemens, son of James and Hannah Clemens, was born and reared on the farm in Buffalo township, Washington county. In early life he was married to Mary Wolfe, and their children were as follows: Dr. James Clemens, an eminent physician of Wheeling, W. Va., born May 26, 1795, died in 1845; Jacob, born November 6, 1796; Abraham, born September 7, 1798; Elizabeth, born February 1, 1800; William, born April 25, 1803; John C., born December 28, 1804; Hannah, born October 30, 1806; Sabina, born November 6, 1808; Amos, born August 14, 1810; Jeremiah, born May 10, 1812; Delilah, born February 6, 1815, and Hester, born July 2, 1818. Of this family Hannah is the only one yet living. The father was a farmer, and for many years was justice of the peace.

John C. Clemens, son of William C. and Mary (Wolfe) Clemens, was born on the old homestead in Buffalo township, this county. He was a prosperous farmer and an enterprising citizen. When a young man he was married to Louisa, only daughter of John Hupp, a wealthy farmer, a brother of the eminent physician, Dr. Hupp, of Wheeling, W. Va. To this union were born seven children, viz.: James C., John Hupp (he was a member of Company A, One Hundredth P. V. I., and was killed at Petersburg, Va., June 17, 1864), Isaac C., Veturia, Louisa (Mrs. Horn), Alonzo Walton (who lives on part of the home place) and John. Alonzo W. owns part of the Clemens homestead farm adjoining Mrs. Horn, on which are several good producing oil wells; there are also some good oil wells on Mrs. Horn's farm (what was once the Clemens homestead); there are in all twenty-four oil wells. Part of the farm is now owned by Mr. Werick and Mrs. Horn, Alonzo W. owning the rest. John C. Clemens, the father of this family, served for many years as justice of the peace; he was first cousin of Samuel Clemens, better known by the nom de plume of "Mark Twain."

Mr. and Mrs. William M. Horn reside on eighty-five acres of the Clemens farm, part of the old homestead, and he also owns part of the old homestead containing 125 acres, on which he was born and raised, and on which is an extensive stone quarry, leased to the Pittsburgh Stone Company, and he realizes a handsome royalty. Mr. Horn gives his attention to farming and stock raising. In politics he votes with the Republican party.

ABSALOM ASHBROOK. Simeon Ashbrook, the second in his father's family, in the order of their birth, was a blacksmith by trade, and during twelve years of his life lived in Augusta township, Carroll Co., Ohio, where he worked at his trade. Before removing thither he married Emma Sherab, of Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn. Returning to Pennsylvania, he spent the remainder of his life in Washington county. To Mr. and Mrs. Ashbrook six children were born: Mary, Absalom, Ann, Margaret, Nancy and Amy, of whom only two are living, Amy (widow of John Wolfe) and Absalom (who was born November 26, 1818).

Absalom Ashbrook's opportunities for obtaining an education were very limited. He learned the blacksmith's trade with his father, whom he assisted in the shop at an almost incredibly early age. He followed the trade until 1879, since which time he has given his attention to managing his farm work. In 1844 he married Sabina Elliot, who was born May 24, 1828, a daughter of William Elliot, of Morris township, and to their union came the following children: Simeon, born April 4, 1846, died in 1883; Jemima, born June 30, 1847, died when quite young; William, born October 3, 1848 (he was twice married—first to Ella Weir, and, after her death, to Ella Day); Amy, born August 1, 1850, married Will Stallar, of West Finley township; Nancy Ann, born March 1, 1852, married James Stallar, of East Finley township; Jackson, born October 31, 1853, married Lizzie Loafman, and now resides in Burnsville; Mary Margaret, born May 8, 1855, died in 1880; Alexander, born October 1, 1856, is a carpenter by trade, and resides with his father; Abraham, born March 26, 1858, resides with his father, and assists in the farm work; Absalom, born January 13, 1861, married Lizzie McClellan, of East Finley township, and resides in that township; John N., born January 18, 1863, died at the age of two years; Robert E. Lee, born March 13, 1865, is a prominent physician of Wheeling, W. Va., and Sabina, born July 16, 1871, resides at home. Mr. Ashbrook is a Democrat in politics, and both he and his wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

RICHARD M. MOUNTS, a worthy representative of one of the oldest families of the county, and a prominent citizen of Franklin township, of which he is a native, was born July 10, 1836. Richard Mounts, his grandfather, was a native of Maryland, and at the age of sixteen came to Washington county, arriving in 1773, when there were but few settlers in its forest wilds. His wife was Mary Keley, who was born on the broad Atlantic when her parents were crossing from Ireland to the shores of Columbia. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Mounts settled on a small farm near what is now the thriving city of Washington, and commenced life in a very primitive and humble way. Their little log cabin was furnished with home-made stools in lieu of chairs, a table to correspond, while the bedstead was so ingeniously fixed to the walls in one corner of the room as to require only one leg. But they lived "far from the madding crowd," contented and happy in the enjoyment of life. The children born to this honored pioneer couple were William, Mary, Jennie (the widow of George Boyd, and the only one living), John, James, Matilda, Richard R., Joseph and Martha. When Mr. Mounts first started out in the world to fight his own way he was under age; and in order to compensate his father for the loss of his services from that time until his coming of age, he paid him the sum of £15. His political sympathies were with the Federalists; he was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Richard R. Mounts, father of subject, was born in what is now called West Washington, then known as Rankintown, this county, and passed his boyhood and youth assisting his father on the farm, his education being necessarily meager, all the schooling he received having been acquired when other duties were less pressing. When a young man he and his brother purchased the land in Franklin township now owned by our subject, which they improved, and where for a time they kept bachelor's hall until the marriage, in 1835, of Richard R. with Margaret, daughter of William and Sarah Johnson, of Lancaster county, Penn. Of this union were born four children: Richard M., Sarah (Mrs. William Weir, of Franklin township), William, who died in 1863, and James A., of Franklin township. They remained on the farm just referred to the rest of their lives. He died November 5, 1878, at the age of sixty six years, his wife in May, 1887, when aged sixty-seven years. Mr. Mounts was one of the hardest working men in his township, and was deservedly successful, as well as popular. All his life he took an active part in politics, having been first a Whig, and afterward, on the organization of the party, a straight Republican. For some time he was a member of the North Buffalo Presbyterian Church, and afterward united with the one at Washington.

The early life of Richard M. Mounts was passed alternately in school and in assisting his parents on the farm, agricultural pursuits being his life vocation. He now owns a fertile farm of 200 acres, under a high state of cultivation and equipped with all modern improvements and several commodious buildings. On October 23, 1873, Mr. Mounts married Charlotte, daughter of Robert Chambers, of Franklin township, and the children born to this union are Robert, Katie and Millie. In politics Mr. Mounts is a Republican. He and his family attend the services of the Buffalo Church.

WILLIAM NELSON. There is probably no citizen of Washington county who is better or more favorably known than the gentleman above named. He is universally esteemed by those who have the pleasure of his acquaintance, and no better evidence of his worth can be given to the public than in a record of his personal history. His father, Peter Nelson, was a native of Yorkshire, England, and is yet remembered by his old neighbors as a man of sterling merit. Peter Nelson followed the stone mason's trade in connection with farming, and about the year 1812 visited America, intending to find a home in the United States. The unsettled condition of the country discouraged him from emigrating at that time, and he finally returned to England, where he died leaving six children, viz.: John, Peter, Mathew, William, Mary and Betsey. Of this family Mathew and Peter are living in England, John, Mary and Betsey are deceased.

William Nelson, son of Peter, was born March 1, 1810, on a place twenty miles from Leeds, in Yorkshire, England. His youth was passed in assisting with the farm work, for like many other healthy, active boys, he cherished a decided antipathy for books, and found ample but useful exercise on the farm for his superabundant vitality. He also learned the weaving trade, but devoted most of his boyhood to overseeing a large flock of sheep, his home having been near the Scotch moors, where sheep raising was the principal industry. When he grew older young Nelson was employed at cutting stone, and while in that business cut some of the stone ties used in constructing the first railroad in England. The stone was hauled to Rip-ton, sixteen miles distant, and conveyed by canal to Newcastle. Some years prior to 1849 William Nelson married Grace, daughter of John Renard, both of whom were natives of England. In 1849 the young couple embarked on an American-bound vessel, and sailed for the New World. He had then by closest economy managed to save about $500 from a salary of 50 cents per day, and upon arriving in Allegheny county, Penn., he rented a farm near Webster, Westmoreland county. He soon afterward moved to Elizabeth, same State, and invested his savings in a coal enterprise, which failed after a short season of prosperity. This disaster left our young hero penniless and a family dependent upon him for support, but with the invincible spirit of a true Englishman he proceeded to begin life anew. He moved to a small log cabin in the woods near McKeesport, which was known as the "wooden-windowed house," glass having been an unattainable luxury, then secured employment with a threshing machine, and traveled through the country, receiving for his services $1 per day and board. Soon afterward, through the assistance of friends who had discovered his ability and worth, he was enabled to rent 450 acres of land known as the "White Oak Level." He farmed this place very successfully for about four years, then moved to a place near Elizabeth township, and one year later bought a small farm of one Gibson, on "long-time payments." He soon sold this place at a good profit to the former owner, and rented a large farm, whose proprietor required the tenant to give first class references. This condition was easily complied with, as every one was glad to give a helping hand to the enterprising young man, and recommendations were given him by the most prominent citizens of McKeesport. The contract for this place was made in such liberal terms that Mr. Nelson saved quite a sum of money, $1,000 of which he invested in a coal bank, and again lost the entire amount, but was not as destitute as before, having accumulated other property one mile south. In 1861 he removed to a farm in McLean county, Ill., taking with him one car load of sheep and one of horses, and after arriving in Illinois he bought three car loads of hogs, but after a time he lost about 300 head by cholera. He remained there three years, then becoming discontented made a sale, returned to Pennsylvania, and resided in Westmoreland county about six months. At the end of that time he purchased his present farm on the Monongahela river, just within the limits of Monongahela. For this place he paid $11,000, giving $1,000 cash, and the remainder in annual payments, which he succeeded in clearing after years of economy and constant toil. To-day his property is valued at about $20,000, and he conducts a stone quarry in addition to general farming. In political opinion Mr. Nelson is one of the strongest supporters of the Republican party, and takes the deepest interest in all matters tending to improve his adopted country, which he loves with all the ardor of a native-born citizen. He and his wife were members of the Church of England. They have had eight children, namely: Matthew (deceased), Mary Ann, William, John (all of whom were born in England), Thomas (deceased), Ellen, George and Maggie (who were born in America).

JOHAN N. WEIR, a representative well-to-do citizen of Franklin township, is a native of the same, having been born on his father's farm June 26, 1844. He is of Scotch-Irish descent, being a grandson of Samuel Weir, who in the latter part of the eighteenth century came with a brother from Scotland to this country, the family finally making a settlement in Washington county, Penn. In the fall of 1813 he purchased, of John Sargent, 200 acres of wild land on Ten Mile creek, to which he afterward added 180 acres. He was married to Margaret, daughter of John Clark, and they then settled on the Stephen Post farm, where they passed the remainder of their days. The names of the children born to them are: Joseph, Adam, Thomas, Jane, Mary, Elizabeth, Rachel and Sarah (the latter married to a Mr. Rettig), all now deceased. Mr. Weir was a lifelong farmer, eminently successful in his vocation. For many years he was a consistent Presbyterian, in which faith he died; in politics he was an active Democrat.

Adam Weir, son of Samuel and Margaret (Clark) Weir, was born in Franklin township, this county, May 27, 1801, where he passed his boyhood and youth in working on the farm and attending, during the winter months, the subscription schools of the neighborhood. On December 1, 1825, he was united in marriage with Sarah Carter, who bore him the following named children: Margaret, Jane, William and Henry B. On May 19, 1836, Mr. Weir took, for his second wife, Phoebe Tucker, and the children by that union were Samuel H. (deceased), John N., Sarah and Phoebe D. On May 14, 1850, he was married to Mrs. Cynthia Kane, daughter of Mathias Minton and widow of C. C. Kane, and one son was born to them, Adam, Jr., who married Ella, daughter of Thomas Hanna, of Morris township, and one daughter, Lell, living in Pittsburgh. Adam Weir, Sr., came in 1840 to the present residence of his widow and youngest son, and made many improvements thereon. At his death, which occurred July 15, 1866, he was the owner of a large farm, the accumulation of a lifetime of hard work. He was an active and liberal supporter of the Presbyterian Church, as well as of all public enterprises, and was universally respected.

John N. Weir passed his earlier years on the farm, for a time attending the schools of the neighborhood, and though he was obliged to leave school at an early age, he continued to spend his leisure time in study. On November 28, 1867, he was united in marriage with Martha M., daughter of J. Miller Day, and to their union were born the following named children: Edna L., Nellie S., Bessie L. and Mattie D., the last named dying at the age of eight months. In politics Mr. Weir is a Democrat, taking an active interest in the affairs of his party. He and his family are interested in church work.

THOMAS HENRY CARSON, M. D. Washington Carson was born in 1815, on the home farm in Fallowfield township, this county. In March, 1843, he was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Allman, a prosperous farmer of Washington county.

The first of the Allman family to arrive in this county was William, who was married in Maryland to Hannah Thomas, a native of that State, and after their marriage they came hither, making a settlement in West Pike Run township, where they passed the remainder of their pioneer lives, the husband dying first. They were the parents of eight children: Sarah, Elizabeth, Hannah, James, John, William, Henry and Heyman, of whom Henry became the father of Mrs. Washington Carson. He was married to Nancy, daughter of Alexander Hopkins, of West Pike Run township, and the young couple then made their home in that township, passing away in after years within three months of each other. The following children were born to them: Haman (in West Pike Run township), Elizabeth (Mrs. Carson), William (in Indiana county, Penn.), Alexander (in Youngstown, Ohio), Henry (deceased), Sarah Ann (deceased wife of John Johnson), Nancy (wife of T. C. Hopkins, in Washington county). To the union of Washington and Elizabeth (Allman) Carson were born children as follows: Nancy (wife of Peter Miller, of Hillsborough), T. H. (subject), Margery (deceased wife of Levi Winnett), Johanna (deceased wife of William Blythe), Frances and Elizabeth (both at home), and Hopkins (deceased at the age of fourteen years). Mr. and Mrs. Carson always resided on the home place, which contains 220 acres of land, and he also owned 168 acres in West Pike Run township. He died May 27, 1889; his widow is yet living on the farm.

T. H. Carson, whose name introduces this biography, was born October 26, 1853, on the home place in Fallowfield township, already referred to. He attended the Southwestern State Normal School at California, Penn., and afterward took a medical course at the University of Pennsylvania, graduating in 1884. He then began the practice of his profession with Dr. J. Y. Scott, of Washington (at that time in Bentleyville, this county), remaining one year, at the end of which time, his father being an invalid, and his brother Hopkins having been killed by an accident, our subject abandoned for a time his professional career, and returned to the farm. He now has charge of the old home place, which is situated eight miles south of Monongahela, and four and one-half miles west of Charleroi, and in connection with farming and stock raising he has been in the real-estate business in Charleroi, where he still has interests.

On September 11, 1892, Dr. Carson was united in marriage with Ada, daughter of John H. and Virtue Jenkins, of West Pike Run township, and of an old family in the county. Her father died in 1876; her mother is yet living in West Pike Run township. Their children are Anna (wife of Prof. Hall, of the Southwestern State Normal School), Ada (Mrs. Dr. Carson), Walter (a farmer in West Pike Run township), and Louise, Margaret and Roy (living with their mother). Dr. Carson and his mother are members of the Methodist Church, and in his political preferences he votes the Democratic ticket. Squire Henry Carson, the paternal great-grandfather of Dr. Carson, lived for years at the homestead where the latter now resides, the farm having been in the family possession ever since. It was patented from the Government by John Hull, from whom Henry Carson purchased it.

[Further record of this family will be found in the sketch of Jackson and Alexander S. Carson, elsewhere in this volume.]

SAMUEL MUNNEL is descended from an old and prominent pioneer family of Washington county. John Munnel was the first ancestor of the family name to settle in America. He and his wife settled in South Strabane township, this county, where they died, having reared eleven children.

Samuel Munnel, the father of subject, was born in 1795, in South Strabane township, this county, and in early manhood was united in marriage with Nancy Equiston, of Butler county, Penn. The young people settled on the home farm, where children were born as follows: Isabelle (living in Canonsburg), John (deceased), Robert (a resident of North Strabane township), Sarah Jane (widow of George Taylor, of Washington borough), Samuel (whose sketch follows), Thomas (deceased in his eighteenth year), William (deceased in infancy), James (living in Crafton, Penn.), Catherine E. (wife of John Herron, of South Strabane township), Mary E. (Mrs. Adam Hall, of South Strabane township) and Charles (deceased; his son is a book-keeper in the Reform School at Morgantown). The father was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church. He died in 1881 at the age of eighty years, and his widow passed away in March, 1891, at the home of her son Samuel.

Samuel Munnel was born on the home farm in South Strabane township, this county, where his youth was passed. He then learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed three years, working for Hugh Reynolds, at $25 a year. He made a trip to the West, and returning to Washington county purchased a sawmill in South Strabane township, conducting same twenty-five years. He afterward bought another mill in North Strabane township, and a portable sawmill. In 1869 he came to Canonsburg, continuing in the mill business, and for the past fourteen years has been engaged in the ice business. In 1860 Samuel Munnel was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Ringland. Her uncle, Thomas Ringland, was Speaker of the House of Representatives. Mrs. Munnel died a few years after her marriage, leaving two children, one that died and Mary Ringland. For his second wife he was married to Nancy E., daughter of Andrew Crawford, and a native of Peters township, Washington county, who bore him four children: Martha, Nannie, Eva and Samuel, all living at home. In 1886 he entered the hardware and building business in partnership with H. W. Taylor. During the war Samuel Munnel was a member of the State militia. In politics he has been a Democrat, serving in various township offices, and in religion is a member and trustee of the Presbyterian Church. His home is situated in the west end of Canonsburg.

ROBERT S. CALDWELL. The lives of our forefathers are full of interest to the modern citizen, not alone for their historical value, but as example and inspiration to the present generation, for truly has the poet said: "We are the same that our fathers have been;" and although surroundings may differ, yet the essential conditions of human life are ever similar, and every man can learn from the success of others, if he will heed the obvious lessons of their history. Robert Caldwell (grandfather of the gentleman whose name opens this sketch) was born in Maryland, of Scotch parents. He crossed the mountains in an early day, settling in Hopewell township, this county, on the farm adjoining the present home of his grandson. Two children were born to him: Samuel and Mrs. Touchill.

Samuel Caldwell was born in 1757, on the old place in Hopewell township, and was reared to manhood on the farm. In early life he was united in marriage with Jane, daughter of the Rev. Thomas Marquis, who preached the Gospel thirty-nine years. He was married to Jane Parks, who was born in 1750 and died in 1841, having been preceded by Mr. Marquis in 1827, in his seventy-ninth year. The Parks family were often forced to leave their home and flee to the fort for safety from the hostile Indians. On one occasion James Parks, a brother of Jane, was working in the harvest field, when he was surrounded by Indians and killed before he could escape. To the union of Samuel and Jane (Marquis) Caldwell children were born as follows: Thomas M., Robert S., Samuel, William S., Mary, Jane and Sarah, two of whom are now living; William S. (in Donegal township, this county) and Robert S. The father was an active politician of the Whig party, and in religious connection was a member of the Presbyterian Church of Buffalo, this county.

Robert S. Caldwell was born on the old homestead, and assisted with the farm duties during his youth. In early manhood he was married to Margaret Templeton, who died seven months afterward. Some time afterward he chose a second wife in the person of Caroline, daughter of Hon. William Vance, a prosperous farmer and ex-representative of Washington county, Penn. Five children were born to this union, viz.: Hannah J., Margaret, William, Samuel and Carrie (deceased in infancy). His third wife was Nancy, daughter of James, and granddaughter of George Work, who was born and reared in County Londonderry, Ireland, and on March 3, 1780, was united in wedlock with Martha Dunlap, a native of Old Erin. Two children were born to their union: Alexander, born February 11, 1781, and Jane, born May 9, 1783. A few years after their birth the father determined to seek a home in the New World, and on July 24, 1789, he and his family boarded the brig "Keziah," at Londonderry, Ireland. After a stormy voyage of eight weeks they landed at Wilmington, Del., and in 1795 pushed farther westward in search of a cheap home. The long, tedious journey was made by wagon, the family arriving in Hopewell township, Washington county, Penn. They located in a log-cabin near Buffalo village, where he became a successful farmer. Three children were born after they arrived in America: Mary, born November 8, 1790; James, born September 12, 1792, and John D., born November 14, 1794. The parents both died in this county.

James Work was born in Wilmington, Del., and when three years of age was brought by his parents to the farm in Hopewell township, this county. He received a meager education in the subscription schools, and followed agricultural pursuits during his early youth. On February 7, 1822, he was married to Grizzilla, daughter of Robert Tweed, who bore him two children: Elizabeth Grizzilla, born December 20, 1823, and George T., born April 7, 1825. The mother of these children was called to her rest January 27, 1827, and on July 3, 1828, James Work was married to Margaret Caldwell, the following children being born to their union: Martha L., born June 1, 1829; Agnes A., born November 17, 1831; Sarah J., born October 14, 1832; Mary B., born May 8, 1834; Clarissa E., born November 8, 1835; Samuel C., born July 16, 1838; Maria L., born August 11, 1840; Margaret E., born October 26, 1842; and Sophia M. A., born March 6, 1846.

Politically Mr. Caldwell is a true-hearted Republican, and in religious connection is a member of the Buffalo Presbyterian Church, to which he gives a liberal support.

JOHAN CULLEY is a worthy representative of a pioneer family of this county. His father, Levi Culley, was born about 1739, in Maryland, and there married Esther Smith, who was born about 1775, same State. Levi Culley was a farmer, and in about 1800 came to Washington county, Penn., the long journey being made in a large covered wagon, drawn by four horses. When crossing the Susquehanna river, a singular experience befel them, which might have ended more seriously. As the large, covered wagon stood on the ferry-boat a strong breeze was blowing, and the covered top served to catch no small amount of wind, the force of which drove the boat some distance out of its course, causing much trouble in securing a suitable place to land, since they were unable to reach the usual place. This wagon contained the father and mother, with their two children, Jesse and Joseph. They proceeded on their journey, sleeping in their wagon beside the road at night, and finally arriving in Washington county, located near Bulger Station, Smith township, where the father rented a farm, and began working upon it. He was a tenant on different farms several years, and by energy and economy eventually accumulated a small sum, and purchased 277 acres of John L. Proudfit, in Hanover township, this county, partially lying in Smith township. Levi Culley was a cooper, and followed that trade in connection with farming. He was a hard-working man, never idle, and very successful in his business life. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of Cross Roads Presbyterian Church. He died in 1818, and his widow, with the assistance of her sons, managed the estate which he left, until in 1817 she too was laid to rest by the side of her husband, in the Florence cemetery. Of their children the following is a brief record: Jesse was born in Maryland, and when but a small boy came to Washington county, Penn., with his parents (he was married to Susan, daughter of Elder John Duncan, and settled on a farm in Washington county, where he died in his seventy-second year); Joseph was married to Martha, daughter of Benjamin Scott, and settled on the farm now owned by their son, John S.; George was the first child born after the family settled in Washington county (he was married to Jane Fulton, and was a farmer; he died in Hanover township, aged seventy-two years); Robert was a cabinet maker by trade (he married Amanda McCord, and they settled in Florence, this county, where he died August 21, 1848); Sinie never married (she died in early womanhood); Lydia was married to James Cubbison, a cabinet maker (they afterward settled on a farm in Gurnsey county, Ohio, and in 1844 moved to a place near Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, where she died); Rebecca was the wife of William Cole, of Hanover township, this county, where she died; Levi learned the tailor's trade in Florence, this county, afterward entering into partnership with Andrew Conn, at Mansfield, Ohio (he married Mary Ann Butterfoes, and is now living on a farm in Morrow county, Ohio); Helen was united in marriage to Robert G. Smith, a farmer of Hanover township, this county, where she died.

John Culley, the youngest child of Levi and Esther (Smith) Culley, was born March 17, 1817, in Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn., on a farm adjoining the old homestead. His education was obtained at the "Coventry School," and as his father died when he was but an infant, his youth was passed with his widowed mother. On October 27, 1842, he was united in marriage with Julia Briceland, who was born in 1815, in Washington, Penn., daughter of James Briceland, a hotel keeper. Her grandfather laid out the limits of Florence, this county. The children of John and Julia Culley are as follows: Jesse, a carpenter of Hookstown, Beaver Co., Penn.; James, a bricklayer by trade, now a ranchman, of Montana; Levi S., a farmer of Hanover township, this county; Thomas M., a farmer of Hanover township; Hettie J., Mrs. J. S. Malone, of Smith township, this county; Nancy, wife of James A. Malone, of Smith township, and Newton M., also of Smith township. After his marriage John Culley resided for ten years on a farm in Hanover township, this county, and in 1852 went to Harrison county, Ohio, locating near Scio, where he remained but a short time, then returned to his native county, first settling in Smith township, but afterward moving to Hanover township. In 1866 he purchased his present farm, where he has since resided, following general farming and stock raising. In politics Mr. Culley was formerly a Whig, and later a Republican. Both he and his wife are members of the Cross Roads Presbyterian Church. He is a stranger to sickness, and has ever been an industrious man, winning the esteem and confidence of all with whom he is associated.

DANIEL DILLE, an esteemed resident of Morris township, is a son of Lewis Dille, who was born upon the old home place in 1799. In 1822 he married Lucy McCollum, who bore him the following children: Ira (deceased), Jesse M., Cephas, Daniel, Ephraim, John, David and Keziah. Lewis Dille died in 1885, and was followed by his wife the same year.

Daniel Dille, whose name opens this memoir, was born January 14, 1829, on his father's farm in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn. He received a somewhat limited common-school education, and remained at home till twenty-two years of age, when he began to learn the trade of a cooper, which business he followed twenty-five years. On February 27, 1850, he was united in marriage with Mary Jane Andrews, who was born July 9, 1833, a daughter of Ira Andrews, a resident of Morris township. In 1851 he purchased of his father the well-improved farm lying about three miles northeast of Prosperity, in Morris township, this county, which is still in his possession. The following children were born to this union: Caleb M., born February 11, 1852, a resident of Washington, Penn., and married to Sarah Dille, daughter of Ephraim Dille, of Morris township, and Elizabeth Ann, born August 11, 1854, wife of Henry Sanders, and a resident of Morris township. On December 21, 1854, Mrs. Dille died, and October 4, 1855, Mr. Dille married Catherine McVay, daughter of Samuel McVay, of Morris township, this county, and their children are: Benjamin F., born August 31, 1856, residing on his father's farm in Morris township; Charles Osborne, born July 20, 1858, a resident of Sycamore, Greene Co., Penn., and married to Amanda Sanders; Hugh Hanna, born August 27, 1860, living with his parents; Sarah Hanna, born May 3, 1863, wife of Clark Wilson, and residing in the northern part of the county. In 1890 Mr. Dille retired from the farm, removing to Prosperity. In politics he is a Democrat, and he and his wife are members of the Upper Ten Mile Presbyterian Church at Prosperity.

JOSIAH KERR was born May 2, 1839, in Washington county, Penn. He is of Scotch descent, James Kerr, the earliest pioneer of the family name, being a son of James Kerr, a native and lifelong resident of Scotland. James, his son, when yet a boy, came to America, and made a permanent home in Washington county, Penn. He was twice married, and reared a large family of children. He was a miller and wheelwright by trade, which vocations he followed through life; he died in 1869.

James Kerr, father of subject, was the second son by his father's first marriage, and was born December 16, 1815, on the home farm in this county, where he grew to manhood. He was married to Mary Crawford, who was born June 2, 1816, also a native of Washington county. Ten children were born to their union, four of whom are now living. Mr. Kerr was an active politician; he was justice of the peace three years, served several times as judge of elections, and also held the offices of supervisor, auditor and school director. He and his wife were active members of the Presbyterian Church, in which he was an elder. He died December 25, 1891, having been preceded by his wife September 4, 1889.

Josiah Kerr, the second child in the family of ten children born to James and Mary (Crawford) Kerr, was reared and educated on the home farm in North Strabane township. On November 7, 1866, he was united in marriage with Miss Margaret J. Patterson, who was born September 21, 1835, in the house where she was married. Her father, Ezra Patterson, was born in 1800, in Adams county, Penn., where he was afterward married to Nancy Horner, who was born June 10, 1800, in Washington county. They reared the following children: William, Joseph B. and David W. (twins), James, Margaret (Mrs. Kerr), Sarah E. (wife of P. B. Dow), Anna M. (Mrs. W. H. Murray), Elizabeth, John S. and an infant, the latter three of whom are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Patterson were active members of the United Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek. He died December 1, 1863, and on January 28, 1892, Mrs. Patterson was laid to rest; she had passed her ninety-second birthday.

To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Kerr have been born two children: Mary A. and James F. Mr. Kerr has ever been identified with every movement tending to promote the general good of the community, is actively interested in politics, and has held the office of township auditor. He and his wife are members of the Fairview Presbyterian Church.

ANDREW JACKSON. The Jackson family were numbered among the first of those heroic men and women who, leaving childhood's home and early friends, braved innumerable perils to establish civilization in the unbroken wilderness. When we read the record of these early martyrs we may well exclaim with the poet:

Whom do we call our heroes, to whom our praises sing?
The pampered child of fortune, the titled lord or king?
They live by others' labor; take all and nothing give.
The noblest types of manhood are those who work to live.

In 1772 two brothers, Joseph and Philip Jackson, came from their Eastern home in search of Government land, and, crossing the mountains, pushed on till they stood on the western shore of the Monongahela river, within the limits of what is now Washington county. They were finally attracted by the heavy timber and thick shrubbery indicative of fertile soil, and pausing on the boundaries of Hanover township, proceeded to mark out an extensive claim with their tomahawks. Their only weapons were two trusty "flint-locks," with which to defend themselves against the prowling beasts of the forest or a more wily human foe. Traces of Indians were plentiful, and with the utmost caution did the young men move from tree to tree, marking off their claim, and ever listening for the stealthy footfall of moccasined feet. They succeeded in thus taking up an immense tract of land, but desiring to form a colony, returned to their homes before making any improvements. By offering every possible inducement, they persuaded a number to return with them and seek a fortune in the "far West." Any article of clothing was accepted in lieu of payment for land, some giving a hat, or shirt, or any article most easily spared. When the colony was at length fully organized, they bid a last farewell to friends and neighbors, and with the necessary supplies began the toilsome journey over the mountains, finally arriving safely at their destination. A rough shelter of poles and leaves was immediately erected, which was soon supplanted by log cabins, and religious services were then held regularly. In the absence of any minister, prayer meetings were held, and a church being organized, the two Jackson brothers were appointed as the first elders, both of whom contributed liberally to its support. It is impossible to exaggerate the intrepid spirit and untiring energy of these men, who gave their lives that future generations might enjoy the blessings of a prosperous home. The following children were born to Joseph Jackson: Thomas (who moved to Belmont county, Ohio, locating on the farm which is now the site of Centreville), Edward, Fanny (wife of Robert Scott), Rosanna (Mrs. Jonathan Potts) and Deborah (married to Joseph Crawford).

Edward Jackson was reared amid the privations of frontier life, receiving a very limited education, and from early youth assisted in clearing the land. He was married to Rebecca Jackson, a native of Maryland, and daughter of William Jackson (no relation of Edward), who came to Hanover township in an early day. To the union of Edward and Rebecca Jackson sixteen children were born, of whom the following attained an adult age: Elizabeth (Mrs. John Mayhew, of Pugh, W. Va.), Mary (wife of David Fulton, of Hanover township), Lydia (Mrs. John McCullough, of Florence), William (of Hanover township), Edward, George, Thomas, Andrew, David, Simeon and Rebecca. Of these Joseph E. and Andrew are yet living. The father was originally a Whig, but during Jackson's administration joined the Democratic party. In religious connection he was a zealous member of the M. E. Church, although reared in the Presbyterian faith. He died in 1848, having been preceded by his wife about five months. They are buried in the cemetery at Florence.

Andrew Jackson was born January 31, 1815, on the old home place, where his grandfather had settled forty years before. He attended the rate schools a few months during the winter season, but was early trained to farm work, his first duty in that line being to walk along with his father and keep the weeds from the coulter with a stick, as the farmer plowed with a wooden mould board. On February 18, 1849, Andrew Jackson was married to Sarah Campbell, who was born March 15, 1818, a daughter of Launcelet Campbell, of Smith township, this county. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson have had two children, viz.: Margaret Sylvania (Mrs. Jonathan Tucker, of Hanover township) and Ellsworth (an agriculturist of Hanover township). The parents began wedded life on their present farm, which he purchased from the heirs of Judge Redick, who were then living in Illinois. Mr. Jackson has devoted his entire attention to his farm, which has prospered under his care. He is a most agreeable companion, possessing an interesting fund of general information. Politically he was formerly a Whig, and now votes the Republican ticket, but is not bound by party lines on special occasions, and is a bitter enemy of monopolies in every form. He is a member of the M. E. Church, his wife being identified with the Presbyterian Society.

HENRY STOLLAR, a retired farmer of East Finley township, now living in Claysville, was born in Schuylkill county, Penn. His father, Andrew Stollar, was a native of the same county, where he was reared and educated, and, in 1821, Andrew came with the family to Washington county. They made the journey in emigrant wagons, and finally settling in East Finley township, purchased a farm of 100 acres, which was but slightly improved, and covered with thickets.

Andrew Stollar was married to Rosanna, daughter of George Ely, who came to Washington county some years prior to the Stollar family. The following children were born to this union: Peter, Henry, William, Daniel, Rosanna (Mrs. Peter Earnest), Christina (Mrs. Isaac Earnest), Catherine (Mrs. George Plants) and Mary (Mrs. Henry Sprows). Mr. Stollar was a Democrat, an active worker in the party. In religion he and his family were members of the United Brethren Church.

Henry Stollar (the subject of our sketch) was born March 12, 1811, and in his boyhood days attended the subscription schools. The "classic halls of learning" were at that date erected from rough hewn logs, and each one was furnished with a huge fireplace, puncheon floor and other primitive furniture. In 1832 he was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of George Ely, and five children were born to their union: Peter, George, Reuben, William and James. The mother of this family died in 1840, and Mr. Stollar was afterward married to Jemima, daughter of George Nickerson, of West Bethlehem township, this county. They have had one daughter, Sarah (wife of Charles Ely). Mr. Stollar first purchased 100 acres of wild land, and erected a house upon it, remaining there twelve years, when he bought the farm of 230 acres that he now owns, and which he has much improved. He has always been an active member of the Democratic party, and cast his first vote for Jackson. He is a zealous worker in the United Brethren Church with which he is connected.

LEWIS ZEDIKER, one of the oldest members of the family of that name in Washington county, and a citizen of South Strabane, was born in that township January 27, 1827.

John Zediker, grandfather of our subject, was a native of eastern Pennsylvania, and in their youth he and his brother David, having an eye to the grandeur and fertility of the then "far West," set out to "spy the land," ostensibly on a hunting expedition, and finally arriving in Washington county, they were so fascinated with the beauties and attractions of South Strabane township, that they here resolved to remain and cast their lot. John had, while in eastern Pennsylvania, learned the trade of blacksmith, which he carried on for many years in the county of his adoption. Soon after his arrival he married Margaret, daughter of Ludwig Smith, who was among the earliest settlers of the county, and the children born to this union were Lewis, Susan (Mrs. Joseph Hallam), Elizabeth (Mrs. George Smith), Julia A. (Mrs. James Schwisher), Mary (Mrs. Matthew Dook) and John. Mr. Smith took a "tomahawk claim" of nearly a thousand acres of wild land, a part of which is now occupied by the subject of this sketch. He early identified himself with the politics of his section, and was prominent among the Federalists. In church matters he also took an active interest, and in the organization of the Lutheran Church in Amwell township he was a prominent factor. In this Society he was an elder for many years.

John Zediker, father of the gentleman whose name opens this sketch, was born December 11, 1800, in South Strabane township, this county, and received his education in the subscription schools of the neighborhood. He was married to Margaret, daughter of James Guthrie, and they reared five children, namely: Lewis, Susan, Thomas, John and James. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. John Zediker settled on a farm in South Strabane township, where they passed the remainder of their days, Mr. Zediker dying November 6, 1874, Mrs. Zediker February 18, 1881. They were active members of the M. E. Church, and among its most liberal supporters; politically Mr. Zediker was a Whig of the old school.

The youth of the subject of these lines was passed on the home farm, and he attended, as circumstances permitted, the subscription schools of the neighborhood. He dutifully remained with his parents until their death, and after that event continued to reside under the parental roof, carrying on the duties of the farm in company with his brothers. They are among the largest landholders of South Strabane township, owning at the present time nearly 1,100 acres of choice land. Mr. Zediker is a member of the M. E. Church; in politics, originally a Whig, he has, since the organization of the Republican party, been one of its strongest supporters, and has been actively interested in the development and improvement of the educational system in his locality.

JOSEPH P. LEECH, a worthy representative of an old pioneer family of Washington county, is a grandson of James Leech, who was born in County Down, Ireland, and there married to Jane Reynolds, by which union were born three children: John, Thomas and William. Having decided to try life in the New World, the grandfather, in company with his family and a brother Robert, sailed from Ireland in 1774. They landed at Philadelphia, where the brothers separated, Robert going south, eventually settling in South Carolina, while James and his family pushed further west, first locating in Northampton county, Penn. In August, 1775, they came to Smith township, Washington county, and in the unbroken wilderness erected their one-room log cabin home, which compared very favorably with the homes of the other early settlers. With his firearms as constant companions, James Leech began the herculean task of transforming the unsightly forest into a fertile farm. Eight years passed away before civilization had rendered the little home comparatively safe from attacks of the Indians, and in the meantime the settlers were often forced to flee to the neighboring blockhouse for protection, which blockhouse stood on the old Leech farm. Undaunted by the toil and privations of this life, James Leech found time and strength to take part in the national struggle of his adopted country. Her cause was his, her liberties dearer to his heart than life, and with the beginning of the Revolution he enlisted in a company organized by Capt. Joseph Erwin, afterward incorporated under Col. Samuel Miles' Pennsylvania Rifle Regiment. This division finally became a part of the Thirteenth Pennsylvania, then of the Second Pennsylvania, and on January 1, 1778, having served his time, he was discharged from the service at Valley Forge. He was paid in "Continental money," which was worthless, and part of it is still in the possession of the family. He then returned to the farm in Washington county, where he died in December, 1823, having been preceded by his wife in 1812. The children who were born after the family had settled in Pennsylvania were as follows: James, Robert, Samuel, Margaret (wife of John Cunningham) and Jane (unmarried), all of whom are now deceased, but lived to an adult age.

James Leech, son of the old pioneer, James, was born September 17, 1775, in Northampton county, Penn. His youth was passed on the home farm, and he received a subscription school education. Early evincing a taste for mechanical work, he learned the trade of millwright. He bought a farm where the old fort stood, and had a saw and grist mill, to which latter wheat was brought on horseback. In 1803 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Wishart, who was born in 1782, in Franklin county, Penn., and came with her parents to Washington county when thirteen years of age. James and Elizabeth Leech were the parents of the following children: James, Jane (wife of James McKeen, of Greene county, Penn., both deceased), Nancy (Mrs. James McGhee, of Tama county, Iowa, both deceased), John, Robert, David, Thomas, Elizabeth (living with her brother Joseph), Joseph P., Mary (wife of A. Phillis, of Smith township), and Pressly. Of these children there are yet living: Elizabeth, Joseph P. and Pressly. After his marriage James Leech settled on a farm in Smith township. In 1812 he entered the war of that period, serving under Harrison through the campaign. In politics he was a Whig, first a Jackson man, but changed on the bank question, and took a very active part in the campaign preceding the election of President Harrison. He was an enthusiastic admirer of his older leader, and did all in his power to secure the election of the sturdy, fearless veteran. In 1818 Mr. Leech was appointed a justice of the peace, filling that office twenty-two years, during which time his rulings were invariably sustained by the higher courts. He and his wife were members of the Seceder Church, and then of the Union Church, to which he contributed liberally, having given the land for a church at Mt. Vernon before the project was abandoned, owing to disorganization. The old church stands. He was called to his long home June 27, 1852, and on June 4, 1867, his wife was laid to rest beside him.

Joseph P. Leech was born October 21, 1826, in Smith township, this county, and received a limited education in the subscription schools. He followed farming some time, then entered mercantile life, conducting a store near Mt. Vernon church (as it was then called) for seven years. He then became a drover, dealing extensively in wool, and this business called him to different parts of western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio, where he has an extensive acquaintance; he also made frequent trips to New York, Philadelphia, Boston and many other Eastern cities, with which he has become very familiar. Mr. Leech owns an immense tract of prime land which is cultivated under his supervision. He is one of the largest stockholders in the Burgettstown National Bank, of which he was one of the organizers. Politically he was originally a Whig, now a Republican, and he was present at the convention when John C. Fremont was nominated for President. He is not a politician as far as office-holding is concerned. In 1877 he met with a serious accident, which resulted in the loss of his left eye, which was struck by the horn of an ox. Mr. Leech is a well-built, healthy man, stands five feet ten and one-half inches, and weighs 160 pounds. He has never married.

MRS. ELIZA GRANT is the widow of Noah Grant, who was a son of Robert, and descended from Scotch ancestry. Robert Grant was born and reared on the old homestead in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn., and followed farming all his life. In early manhood he was married to Harriet Baker, a native of Ohio, and twelve children were born to them, of whom but two are now living, viz.: L. G., who is residing in the far West, and Rebecca Colvin, a native of Fallowfield township.

Noah Grant was born in 1832, in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn., the youngest child in his father's family. He received a good education and passed his life in agricultural pursuits. In 1855 he was united in marriage with Miss Eliza Wickerham, who bore him the following children: Ethel (Mrs. Furlong), living in Roscoe, Penn.; Grace, wife of Mr. Orr, editor of a newspaper in West Newton, Penn.; Robert, in the signal service at Pike's Peak, Colo.; May (Mrs. Speers), living at Roscoe, Penn.; Florence, a stenographer, in Chicago, and Lydia, living at home. Mr. Grant was identified with the Republican party, and was very prominent in educational affairs. He died April 7, 1886; his widow resides near Monongahela, and rents the home farm, which contains 100 acres, situated near Monongahela. She is a member of the Methodist Church.

JOHAN CULBERTSON HARVEY, one of the prosperous farmers of Morris township, was born June 9, 1828, in Franklin county, Penn. His father, John Harvey, was a native of eastern Pennsylvania, born near Carlisle. He removed to Franklin county in early life, where he married Sarah Culbertson, a daughter of Robert Culbertson, of Franklin county. They reared a family of fourteen children, viz.: Nehemiah K., Agnes, Hannah, John C., Sarah, Ruth T., Mary, Robert C., William T., Joseph, Benjamin, Harriet, Catherine and Wilson C., of whom eight are living, three in Harrisburg, Penn., one in Dauphin county, one in Newville, one in Cumberland, and two in Roxbury, Franklin county.

John Culbertson Harvey was reared on his father's farm in Franklin county, and received a practical education in the neighboring schools. He was married April 12, 1853, to Jane, daughter of James Kilgore, of Greene county, Penn. Mrs. Harvey died October 30, 1874, having become the mother of three children: Simpson L., James K. and a son who died in infancy. In 1878 Mr. Harvey was again married, this time to Ruth T. Kilgore, who died March 7, 1891. He removed to Morris township, Washington county, about twenty-five years ago, and has since resided here, giving his entire attention to his farm. Mr. Harvey enlisted March 7, 1861, in Company B, One Hundred and Fifty-eighth P. V. I., being drafted for nine months but served ten. In politics Mr. Harvey is a Republican, and in religion is a member of Mount Zion M. E. Church. Simpson L. Harvey, eldest son of John C. Harvey, is married to Frances Day, daughter of Bethuel Day, and they have one son, Charley Wycliffe; James, the second son, married Emma Mounts, daughter of William Mounts, of Franklin township, and they are the parents of two children: Jennie and William.

JAMES R. WOODBURN, a well known business man and successful farmer of East Finley township, is the second surviving son of Joseph and Ruth (Garratt) Woodburn. He was born January 17, 1834, near Taylorstown, Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., and his boyhood and early youth were passed, partly in labor on his father's place, and partly at school. He received a fair common school education, and attended a normal academy at Millersville (Penn.) one term, after which he was engaged in teaching nine or ten terms. He made his home with his parents until the breaking out of the Civil war, when, August 18, 1862, he enlisted in the Ringgold Battalion, an independent troop, which afterward became the Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry, and was composed almost exclusively of Washington county men. The duty of this body of horsemen was, during the early part of the struggle, to guard railroads and do "scouting" duty through West Virginia. Mr. Woodburn also participated in the engagements at Cedar Creek, Fisher's Hill, Manchester, besides many others of minor importance; was wounded in the shoulder in 1863, and was sent to the hospital, but afterward served till the close of the war, and was mustered out as sergeant. After his return home to resume the vocations of peace, he was married, on March 14, 1867, to Lizzie McClelland, who was born September 14, 1811, a daughter of Thomas McClelland, of East Finley township, and to this union three children were born: Joseph L., born March 30, 1871; Jennie B., born March 25, 1874; and Fannie A., born April 11, 1878, all now at home. After his marriage Mr. Woodburn located on his present place, a well-improved, valuable piece of farm property, lying about a mile and a half southeast of Claysville, where he has since conducted a general farm business, including stock raising. In 1874 he built a large modern barn, and in 1882 erected a dwelling that has for elegance and convenience no superior and few equals in his township. Mr. Woodburn is regarded as an enterprising farmer, and one of the intelligent and influential men in the community in which he lives. He is a great lover of home and its attractions, and takes pride in keeping up with the times in everything pertaining to agriculture. He is interested in several enterprises outside of farming, and has been a director in the First National Bank of Claysville since its organization. In politics he is a solid Republican, taking a lively interest in the affairs of the party. He and his wife are esteemed members of the U. P. Church at Claysville, of which he is a trustee.

HENRY EARNEST was born April 11, 1817, in Cumberland county, Penn. His grandfather, John Earnest, emigrated from Germany (where he was born in 1734), in the latter part of the eighteenth century, and, after landing in America, located in Cumberland county, Penn. He then served two years in the Revolutionary war, suffering with the patriots of his adopted country, and many times traveling barefoot through the deep snow. He was married in Pennsylvania, and reared the following children: Samuel, Andrew, David, Henry, George, John, Polly and Daniel, all of whom are now deceased.

Andrew Earnest was born and reared in Cumberland county, Penn., where he married a native of the same county. They settled on a farm in that locality, and reared a family of children. Mrs. Earnest died in 1826.

Henry Earnest received a somewhat limited education in the usual log cabin schoolhouse with its single-paned window and primitive furnishings. His mother died when he was but nine years of age, and the family becoming separated, young Henry began to earn his own living at this tender age. He was first employed by a farmer, who gave him his board and 5 cents a day. In 1848 he left Cumberland county and went to Fortress Monroe, Va., where he remained three years. He entered the Mexican war as a private in Company E, First P. V. Battery, under Capt. Bradford, and participated in the following engagements: City of Mexico, Chapultepec, Vera Cruz and Pueblo. At one time he was in the heart of the famous silver mines, 162 miles beyond the City of Mexico. At the close of the conflict he returned to Fortress Monroe, where he received an honorable discharge. He then entered the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad, working on the line to Westmoreland county, Penn. In 1850 he was married to Mary Maloy, of Cumberland county, Penn., and to their union have been born three children: William (deceased), Mary (Mrs. Henry Birch) and Andrew J. (living with his father). In 1851 Mr. Earnest came to Washington county, Penn., and remained in the employ of the railroad company several years, finally purchasing with his earnings sixty acres of land in Buffalo township, Washington county, which is his present home. When he first came to Washington county he left one brother, John, and three sisters—Sarah, Polly and Ann, of whom he has heard nothing in twenty years. During a severe cold Mr. Earnest was obliged to have the sight of one eye destroyed, as the cold had settled in the optic, and the doctors feared that both eyes would otherwise be affected. He is a farmer, and gives much attention to stock raising. Politically, he is a staunch Democrat, and in religion is a member of the Presbyterian Church of East Buffalo.

GEORGE M. ESPY, a leading liveryman of Canonsburg. The Espy family were originally natives of Scotland, the pioneer settlers of their name emigrating about the time of the Revolution, settling in Pennsylvania. James Espy (grandfather of the family now living in Washington county) was born in 1780, in Allegheny county, Penn., and was there married to Margaret Fife (who was born September 17, 1782). The young couple purchased a farm in Upper St. Clair township, where children were born to them as follows: William, Margaret (wife of Thomas Fife), Mary (married to Dr. McCormack), James, Thomas (killed in the Civil war), and John. The father was a Whig in politics, and served as justice of the peace, also as postmaster at Upper St. Clair. He was a member and elder of Bethel Presbyterian Church. He died in 1858, his wife in 1852, and the remains of both rest in Bethel cemetery.

John Espy was born on the home farm in Allegheny county, Penn., and was early inducted into the mysteries of agricultural pursuits, which he followed throughout life. When a young man he was married to Margaret, daughter of John Smith. Her father was born in Scotland, and for many years his home was on the ocean. He finally abandoned the sea, after having visited nearly every commercial port in the world, and settled in Allegheny county, Penn. Mr. and Mrs. Espy began life on the home place, where he is yet living, a representative citizen and active Republican of Allegheny county. He is a staunch supporter of Bethel Presbyterian Church, and is now filling the office of trustee. Their children are as follows: Margaret (wife of J. J. Van Eman); James, married to Laura Wilson, is living on the home place; John S., living in Pittsburgh, Penn., is married to Alice Nelson; G. Howard, a druggist in New York City; Will F., a druggist in Pittsburgh, Penn.; and George M.

George M. Espy was born February 10, 1865, in Upper St. Clair township, Allegheny Co., Penn., and remained at home during his boyhood. He attended the Newell Institute at Pittsburgh, Penn., two years, then returning home devoted his attention to farming. On February 22, 1888, he married Mary B., daughter of John Morgan, who married Rebecca Hickman. She bore him two children, Mary B. and Ella E. In 1890 Mr. Espy left the farm, becoming a partner in the Fife livery establishment at Canonsburg. In 1892 he purchased the interest of Mr. Fife, and now conducts the entire business. He has a large amount of custom, keeping eighteen well-bred horses, and having a large stable. He enjoys the confidence of the public as an honorable citizen and successful business man. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg.

DANIEL S. McBRIDE. Foremost among the successful retired farmers of Smith township is this well-known gentleman, now a citizen of Bavington, this county. His grandfather, a native of the Emerald Isle, immigrated to America in an early day, finally locating in Robinson township, this county. He married in this county, and reared a family of ten sons, viz.: Nathaniel, Francis, Alexander, Samuel, David, John, Isaac, Matthew, James and William, all of whom lived to an adult age, but are now deceased. The parents died at an advanced age.

James McBride was born in Robinson township, this county, receiving a very meager education in the subscription schools. He learned the blacksmith's trade, following that occupation at different places on the Stenbenville and Pittsburgh pike, and finally becoming a farmer. He was a very kind-hearted man, and this trait being taken advantage of by his friends, resulted in his own financial ruin. He was married to Ann, daughter of Daniel Stewart, of Robinson township, and she bore him children as follows: John (a blacksmith, who died in Bavington, this county), Mary (deceased), Sarah (who died when twenty years of age), James (a retired citizen of West End, Pittsburgh), Jane (deceased at the age of fourteen years), Samuel (deceased at the age of twenty-five years), Daniel W. (whose sketch follows), Mary Ann (who died when aged twenty years), and Susanna (deceased wife of Thomas H. Pyles). The father of this family was a member of the Democratic party. He died in 1852, having been preceded by his wife several years.

Daniel W. McBride was born August 19, 1821, in Hanover township, this county, and attended the subscription schools of the day. He first followed milling, which he continued for several years, afterward renting a farm. In 1852, during the "gold fever" excitement, he went to California by the overland route. The journey from St. Joseph to Sacramento (Cal.) occupied eighty-one days, part of the distance being traveled with mules. He remained in California until 1854, then, returning to Bavington, this county, opened a flour mill, having acquired his knowledge of the business with no instruction. He continued to conduct the mill for twenty-one years, and having amassed a comfortable property, moved to his present valuable farm, which contains over three hundred acres of excellent land. The success of Mr. McBride is but the just reward of his own untiring efforts, which have placed him in the enviable position he now occupies. He is an active member of the Democratic party. Mr. and Mrs. McBride are the parents of the following children: James Z. (a dentist of Burgettstown, Penn.), John (a civil engineer of Allegheny, Penn.), Robert F. (a prospector of Colorado), Anna Isa, Elizabeth V., Susan D., Roena (wife of A. C. Prouditt, of Smith township) and Daniel S. (a civil engineer of Portland, Oregon).

JACOB GIBSON, a prominent agriculturist of Fallowfield township, is a son of James Gibson, who was born in 1797, and died in 1863. Jacob Gibson was born on July 25, 1830, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., and there passed his boyhood. He was drafted into the army at the first call for soldiers in the Civil war, but was obliged to remain at home, as his brother was resolved to go, and one of the boys had to stay on the farm. On December 12, 1865, he was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of Robert McMillan, a son of Robert McMillan, whose parents were natives of Ireland, and came to America many years ago. Robert McMillan, the grandfather of Mrs. Gibson, was born in 1751, in York county, Penn., where he learned cloth dressing. He then moved to Beaver county, same State, and there followed his trade for several years, finally settling on a farm in Washington county. He was united in marriage with Elizabeth Thompson, who was born in 1751, near Canonsburg, Washington county, and they were the parents of three children, of whom Robert is the eldest. The mother died in 1814, the father in 1833.

Robert McMillan, father of Mrs. Jacob Gibson, was born in 1808, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., and in 1837 was married to Elizabeth Bennett, who was born in 1812, in Fayette county, Penn. She died in 1865, leaving the following children: Leander, Harvey, Mary (wife of Jacob Gibson), Amanda (married to Smith Carson), Robert (living with his father on the home farm), Jane, Cynthia, and John (who owns a large drug store in Washington, Penn.). Of this family Leander and Harvey were members of the Twenty-sixth Illinois Regiment. They served three years in the Civil war, and took part in the battle of Shiloh, in Sherman's march to the sea, and in numerous other engagements. After the war they settled in Illinois, where they are now residing. Mr. McMillan owns 164 acres of a well cultivated stock farm, and, though eighty-five years have passed over him, he is yet able to superintend the farm work, being remarkably active for a man of his age. The men of this family have been active supporters of the Democratic party, and in religion all are members of the Methodist Church.

Jacob and Mary (McMillan) Gibson have three sons and one daughter. He owns 210 acres of land, and deals extensively in live stock.

JOSEPH G. PORTER. This gentleman is a prominent citizen of Hanover township, and a native of Washington county, Penn. His grandfather, Nathaniel Porter, a native of the North of Ireland, was the first member of the family to immigrate to America, coming here about 1770, and first locating in Chester county, Penn. After settling in Pennsylvania he married and reared a family of eight or nine children. He kept a tavern in Williamsport, Penn., for many years, and his hostelry was a great resort for salt packers and people who were crossing the mountains to bring merchandise and salt to western Pennsylvania. This property was destroyed in the battle of Brandywine, in the Revolutionary struggle. Nathaniel Porter and his wife passed their days in eastern Pennsylvania, and died in Chester county.

William Porter was born about 1782 in Chester county, Penn., where he was inducted into the mysteries of agriculture, and attended the English type of schools. When a young man he was married to Peggy Wallace, who was born in 1784, a daughter of William Wallace, and descendant of Sir William Wallace, of Scotland. Her father and Nathaniel Porter came to America with the same party of emigrants. To the union of William and Peggy Porter ten sons and two daughters were born, of whom the following lived to an adult age: James, Wallace, Andrew, Joseph G., Franklin (a farmer of Jefferson township) and Sarah (wife of Robert Proudfit, of Smith township). During his early life the father of this family kept a tavern in eastern Pennsylvania, and in 1827 moved to a place in Jefferson township, this county, where he followed farming; he voted with the Democratic party. He died in 1856, having been preceded by his wife in 1834. They are buried in the Paris U. P. cemetery.

Joseph G. Porter was born December 20, 1817, in Nottingham township, Washington Co., Penn. He learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed until taken ill with the smallpox. In 1850 he joined the rush to California during the "gold fever" excitement, and walked from Independence, Mo., to Sacramento, Cal.; he remained in California until 1854, during that time being engaged in mining, and also worked at his trade. He returned home by water, passing through Nicaragua, thence to New York, and finally arriving at home in Washington county, Penn. In 1842 he was married to Nancy Fullerton, who was born in 1819, in Hanover township, this county, a daughter of John Fullerton. The children of Joseph G. and Nancy Porter are as follows: John T. (a farmer of Hanover township), Joseph C. (a plumber) and Melissa (Mrs. John Tucker, of Hanover township). In 1856 Mr. Porter purchased the farm upon which he is now residing, and successfully followed general agriculture until the approach of old age compelled him to abandon active life. Of late years he has been living in retirement, while his son, John T., manages the farm. Mr. Porter is a genial companion, and in politics is deeply interested in the welfare of the Democratic party.

WICKERHAM, ALBERT G. AND ALEXANDER WILSON are leading representative native-born agriculturists of the county. Their father, William Wickerham, was a son of Adam, who was a son of Peter or Jacob, a native of Germany, who immigrated to America at a very early day, making a settlement in Westmoreland county, Penn. He married a Miss Schilling, and the children born to them were Peter, Jacob and Adam. The father of this family was a pioneer farmer of the State, and became renowned for his exploits with the Indians. He died at an extreme old age.

Adam Wickerham, son of Peter (or Jacob) Wickerham was born in Westmoreland county, Penn., whence when a young man he came to Washington county, where he patented a tract of land on part of which Monongahela now stands. He there married Miss Shillen, who bore him the following named children: George, Peter, William, Mary and Sarah (Mrs. Bowsman). The father of this family departed this life in 1870, the mother a few years later.

William Wickerham was a native of Washington county, born in 1809 on a farm whereon Monongahela now stands. He married Nancy Phillips, a native of this county, and, after a few years' residence in the then village of Williamsport, he removed to Carroll township, settling on a farm in the horseshoe bend of the Monongahela river. Here he and his wife passed the rest of their days. He was a staunch Whig, afterward a Republican, and at the time of the Civil war, although well advanced in years, shouldered his musket in defense of the Union, being one of the one hundred day men. In religion he was a member and liberal supporter of the Methodist Church. His children were as follows: Adam, David, James, Eliza, Harrison, Margaret, Albert G., Emma, Alexander Wilson and John; of these, Adam is a resident of Carroll township, on the old home farm; Harrison, Albert and John also live in Carroll township; Mrs. Eliza Grant is a widow living in Monongahela; Mrs. Margaret Teeple is in Carroll township; Adam, James and Harrison were in the Civil war, serving three years each, Harrison being the first volunteer to go to the front from Washington county; he was captured by the Confederates and confined in Andersonville prison thirteen months.

ALBERT G. WICKERHAM was born January 19, 1844, on the old homestead in that part of Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn., known as "The Horseshoe." He remained on the home farm until 1871, when he was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of William Galbraith, a resident of Carroll township. Mr. and Mrs. Wickerham resided on the old place about two years after their marriage, when he erected the house where they have since resided, on a portion of the old estate. Mrs. Wickerham died in June, 1890, and was buried in the family cemetery. She left three children, namely: Mary J., William J. and Nancy A. Mr. Wickerham owns eighty acres of the old farm, and conducts a profitable business. Politically he is a Republican, and has held local offices.

ALEXANDER WILSON WICKERHAM was born December 20, 1852, and was reared on the home farm in Carroll township until thirteen years of age, when he moved to Monongahela. On April 17, 1871, he married Rebecca, daughter of John Marshall, of a very old and highly respected family of Washington county, and after marriage he conducted his father's farm for several years. He then removed to his present home in East Bethlehem township, the farm comprising some seventy acres of prime land. He is a Republican, but not active in politics. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Wickerham are Sarah, Endora, Della, Archibald, May, Florence, Myrtle and Lizzie, all at home with their parents.

REAZEN FRYE, a worthy representative of one of the oldest families of Washington county, was born July 5, 1821, on the old homestead at Lock No. 4, this county.

He is a grandson of Abraham Frye, a native of either Washington county, Penn., or North Carolina, and who became a pioneer farmer of Fallowfield township. He married Hester Johnson, of North Carolina, and the children born to them were Johnson, Noah, James, Benjamin, Mary, Abraham, Thomas, Elijah, Hester and Smith. Mr. Frye was a member of the Baptist Church.

Thomas Frye, father of subject, was married to Anna West, a native of Fallowfield township, and the children born to them were: Luke, Reazen, Louisa, Eunice, Hester, Lucinda Jane, Abraham J., Nancy, Mary E., Smith, and Anna E. The mother died in 1861, the father in 1876, and they are buried in the Horseshoe Church cemetery. He was a Jackson Democrat originally, and during the latter part of his life was a Republican. He was a member of the Baptist Church, of which he was a trustee.

Reazen Frye attended the old log-cabin school, and assisted in clearing the pioneer farm. On November 20, 1845, he was united in marriage with Carrie B., daughter of John and Nancy (Dickey) Eckels, the former of whom was a native of Pennsylvania, born and reared in Chester county. When a young man Mr. Eckels came to Monongahela, and for some time followed teaming from Philadelphia westward, after which he learned the trade of carpenter and cabinet maker, which he carried on in Monongahela as well as the undertaking business. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, under Maj. Warne. When a young man he married Nancy Dickey, a resident of Monongahela, and the children born to their union were: John Hamilton, Margaret, Mary, Benjamin, Carrie B., Andrew J., Linnah Ann, Catherine Eaton, and Daniel James. The father of this family died in 1857, the mother on June 3, 1872, and both are interred in Monongahela cemetery. In politics Mr. Eckels was a Democrat.

After marriage our subject and wife located on a farm of 120 acres of land situated one mile from the Monongahela river, in Fallowfield township, this county, and after years of assiduous toil finally succeeded in paying for the place. Mr. Frye then realized a good sum from the sale of a coal vein underlying his land, and with the money thus obtained he purchased 143 acres of land in Carroll township, to which, in 1874, he moved; it is distant about one mile from the business portion of Monongahela. To Mr. and Mrs. Reazen Frye have been born the following children: Thomas F., a farmer of Chase county, Kans.; Margaret Emeline, wife of Samuel Richardson, living at Lock No. 4; John Hamilton, farming on his father's old property at Lock No. 1; Stephen Reed, in the United States Mail Service; Eliza Adeline, deceased at the age of eighteen years; Hester Ann, who died when seven years old; James D., who died at the age of five years, and Carl, who passed away at the age of ten months and twenty days.

Although now retired from active business life, Mr. Frye is interested in the buying and selling of stock. Politically he was originally a Democrat, but a visit to the South, some time prior to the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion, brought about a revolution in his ideas in respect to politics, and he has since been active in the ranks of the Republican party.

JAMES E. RANKIN. Of the well-known pioneers of Washington county, the Rankin family, of which this gentleman is a member, is mentioned among the leaders. John Rankin was born in Winchester, Va., of Irish descent, and came with his parents to Washington county, Penn., about 1774, bringing colored help with him from Virginia. He had a family of eight sons and two daughters, nearly all of whom were born in Winchester, Va. He located in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, securing 1500 acres of choice land, then a vast wilderness, which is now transformed into some of the finest farms of Washington county. Here he erected a log cabin, and made such improvements as were possible, being in constant danger from the treacherous savages. But bravely and patiently he struggled on, establishing the pioneer home. After his sons had grown to manhood one of them, James, joined a party who went to establish a colony in Kentucky. They arrived safely, but during the return trip were attacked by Indians, and James was killed, his fate being but one addition to that of the many pioneers who were practically martyrs to colonization. The parents of James passed the remainder of their lives on the frontier home, both dying the same year.

Samuel Rankin, youngest son of John, was born July 18, 1769, in Winchester, Va., and came to this county in 1774. On January 7, 1796, he was married to Jane McConahey, who was born February 18, 1775, daughter of a pioneer settler. The following children were born to their union: William, John, David, Matthew, Samuel, Stephen, James, Matilda, Abigail and Jane. Of these children Jane is the only one yet living. She is unmarried. The others lived to an adult age, and were citizens of Washington county. Samuel Rankin became a wealthy farmer, and always lived on the old home farm, situated about two miles northwest of Hickory, this county. In politics he was a Democrat, and was one of the famous minute-men. In religion he and his wife were members of the Union Church. He died in October, 1820, being followed by his wife July 20, 1869, in her ninety-fourth year. The remains of both lie in the U. P. cemetery at Hickory, Mt. Pleasant township, this county. Their children were as follows: William, born November 24, 1796 (deceased January 13, 1884); John, born April 4, 1798 (deceased in April, 1866); David, born February 15, 1800 (deceased July 27, 1858); Matthew, born February 15, 1802 (deceased in June, 1880); Matilda, born March 22, 1804 (deceased in February, 1875); Samuel, born June 3, 1806 (deceased May 27, 1834); Abigail, born in October, 1808 (lived on the old homestead until her death); James (deceased, mentioned below); Stephen, born August 20, 1813 (deceased in February, 1877); and Jane, born February 6, 1817 (living in Burgettstown).

James Rankin was born March 24, 1811, in Mt. Pleasant township, and passed his youth on the old home place, receiving his education in the log schoolhouse of the day. In December, 1834, he was married to Martha V. Stevenson, who was born in 1813, daughter of James Stevenson, of Smith township, this county. James Stevenson was a native of Washington county, and was there married to Jane Vance, who bore him children as follows: Ann (Mrs. Alexander Hays), John S., Elizabeth (Mrs. S. J. Ghist), Mary (wife of Patterson Vance), Martha V. (married to James Rankin), Joseph, Edgar and Rachel J. (wife of John B. Phillis). Mr. Stevenson followed the vocation of a miller, afterward opening a carding works, and was also engaged in undertaking. He was first a Democrat in politics, then became a Whig, and afterward united with the Republican party. He was formerly a member of the Presbyterian Church known as the Raccoon, and when the Burgettstown Church was organized, became a regular attendant of that Society.

James and Martha (Stevenson) Rankin first settled on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and in 1868 moved to an adjoining place, coming to Burgettstown in 1881. They have had the following children: Samuel N. (enlisted in Company D, Twenty-eighth New York Regiment; he served three months, then re-enlisted, and in 1863 entered the secret service under Gen. Banks, and was missing while en route to Richmond), James E., Jane E. (Mrs. John P. Campbell), William Ray (who was drowned in 1816), John P. (living in Baker City, Oreg.), Joseph Vance (living in Wichita, Kans.), David A. (accidentally killed when fifteen years old, in Wichita, Kans.), and Anna M. James Rankin was a popular and enterprising citizen, having won success by his own exertions. He was a warm friend of educational progress, and in religion a member of the Mt. Prospect Presbyterian Church, of which he was a ruling elder for twenty-eight years. He died July 27, 1887, at Burgettstown, this county, where his widow is yet living. He was justice of the peace for many years.

James E. Rankin was born in 1838 on the farm in Mt. Pleasant township which is yet his home; he received a district-school education and worked on the farm. On November 15, 1877, he was united in marriage with Mary Walker, a native of Cross Creek township. Her father, John N. Walker, was born in 1808, in Cross Creek township, this county, and on November 18, 1830, married Ann Vance, who was born in 1812, in Cross Creek township. They settled on a farm near their birthplace, and reared the following family of children: Rachel (deceased in May, 1871, wife of R. S. Donaldson), Alexander (living in Eldersville, this county), William Vance (a farmer), James (living in Cass county, Neb.), Elizabeth (wife of John Lawton, of near Larned, Kans.), Hannah (married to J. P. Reed, of Larned, Kans.), Mary (Mrs. J. E. Rankin), Virginia (living with her parents), John N. (living in Cross Creek township), Joseph (deceased in 1874), Frank (deceased in 1856) and Cynthia (married to Samuel Wilson, of Santa Anna, Cal.). The father of this family was an active member of the Democratic party. He died February 15, 1882, and was laid to rest by the side of his wife, who passed away May 15, 1870.

Mr. and Mrs. Rankin have passed their married lives on the home farm, which contains 200 acres of well-cultivated land. They are members of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics he is an active Democrat.

MRS. JANE CARROLL. Among the brave pioneers of Washington county, and they are many, none have surpassed, in bravery, intelligence and perseverance, the members of the Carroll family.

Robert Carroll and wife, accompanied by his two brothers, John and Hamilton, and a sister Jane, emigrated in 1760 from Ireland to America, locating in a place called Mingo, western Pennsylvania, thence moving in a few years to East Finley township, Washington county, where they settled on one of the headwaters of Wheeling creek, near the present postoffice of Gale, and began cutting down the forest trees until a space was cleared for the log cabin (perhaps the first in that district), which they soon erected. Like all the pioneer settlers, they were in hourly danger from the hostile savages, and endured the inevitable hardships of backwoods life. In 1781 work began in earnest, and Washington county was founded. In the summer of that year, John and Hamilton Carroll, who resided with their brother Robert, went out one morning, and when but a short distance from the cabin both men were shot down by the Indians. Robert's wife (who with her two children was in the cabin) heard the report, and knowing the boys had no firearms with them, immediately grasped the situation; she snatched the infant from his couch and with him in her arms, and her little son of four years clinging to her side, ran to a cornfield near by, where she waited till the Indians reached the cabin. The faithful dog remained on guard at the door, and barked vigorously at the murderers, who were obliged to kill him before they could enter the house. The heroic mother knew when the barking of the dog ceased that the Indians were busy ransacking the house, and immediately taking advantage of the opportunity, ran for life to the nearest fort, which was five miles distant (now at Prosperity), though she had to travel much farther; but she reached it safely at last, the infant in her arms, and little James running by her side. While these terrible scenes were in progress, the husband and father was absent, having left home a day or two before, and gone to a mill on the Monongahela river. On returning home, he was horrified to find the floor stained with blood, and other evidences of the presence of the marauding savages. Almost heart-broken, the poor man hurried to the fort, and was overjoyed to find his wife and children safe within, but heard with anguish of the terrible fate of his brothers. A few days later a party of men left the fort, and finding the dead bodies of John and Hamilton (whose scalps the Indians had taken as trophies), buried them in what has since been known as the Carroll graveyard; these two victims of Indian fury being the first who were there interred. The burying ground is but a short distance from where the cabin stood. After all traces of the Indians had disappeared, Robert and his wife returned home, and were not again molested. The infant Robert, who was saved from the Indians by his mother, grew to manhood, and married Margaret Craig, who bore him one daughter, and James, whose little feet proved of such good service on that memorable day, was united in marriage with Margaret Marshall, and to their union the following children were born: William, Robert, John, Hamilton, James, Hugh, Joseph, Thomas, Mary and Jane.

Hamilton Carroll was born April 15, 1804, in East Finley township, Washington county, and was early inured to the toil, danger and privation of frontier life; his education was of necessity very limited. On April 5, 1832, he was united in marriage with Jane Marshall, who was born October 10, 1807, daughter of Gabriel Marshall, of East Finley township, who was also of Irish descent. The children born to this union were Marshall, born March 10, 1833 (deceased in 1890; he always lived at home assisting in the farm work, and caring for his parents); James Bell, born December 27, 1834 (deceased January 15, 1836); Martha, born October 30, 1836 (living at home and assisting with household duties); Robert M., born April 18, 1839 (of whom further mention is made); Anderson, born January 10, 1841 (a farmer, living near Pleasant Grove, East Finley township, this county); William David, born September 5, 1844 (deceased October 23, 1862); Mary Margaret, born March 13, 1847 (deceased January 7, 1852); Eliza Jane, born December 27, 1848 (wife of George Montgomery, of East Finley township), and John, born March 15, 1851 (married to Olive Post, and living in East Finley township, this county). Robert M., of the above family, enlisted August 22, 1861, in the first Virginia Cavalry, and on February 14, 1862, was killed at Blooming Gap, Va. His corpse was sent home, and with it came the following order:

DIV. HEADQUARTERS, CAMP CHASE, Va., Feb. 15, 1862.
Special Order, No. 57.

Robert Carroll, a private of Capt. Farrabee's company, 1st Va. Cavalry, having been killed, after capturing three wagons from the enemy, aided by two other privates of that company (David Howell and Franklin Jones), will be escorted by the two privates mentioned to his residence and the body delivered to the family of the deceased man, with compliments of the Commanding General. Had he lived he would have received promotion. The expenses of the escort and burial will be paid.

By command of BRIG. GEN. SANDLER.

H. C. ARMSTRONG, A. A. A. Gen.

Soon after his marriage Mr. Carroll began farming on the farm where his widow is yet living, which is situated about half a mile northwest of Gale post-office, in East Finley township. Here he passed the remainder of his life, successfully pursuing the vocation of agriculture. During the war he took an active part in the home musters. In politics Mr. Carroll was a staunch Republican, and a valued member of the party. He possessed unusual vitality, and was capable of great physical endurance. In religious faith he was a member of the U. P. Church. He died in 1890; his widow, who is also a member of the U. P. Church, survives him, enjoying in her old age a respite from the cares and sorrows of earlier life; she is much esteemed and respected.

JOHN B. CARSON. The Carson family have for many years been prominently associated with the leading citizens of Washington county. Thomas Carson was born in eastern Pennsylvania, and coming to Washington county many years ago, was married to Mary Gibson, a native of Kentucky. They settled on the farm in Fallowfield township, which is yet owned by their descendants, and he also followed shoemaking, also serving many years as justice of the peace. At one time he was pursued by the Indians, and traveled seventy-five miles in one day, carrying his rifle, and thus escaped. He died in 1848, leaving the following children: Elizabeth (wife of James Young), Thomas G., Mary (Mrs. Grable), James S., John B., Ann (Mrs. Grable) and Charlotte (wife of John Carson).

John B. Carson was born in 1802, on the old place on Pigeon creek, in Fallowfield township, Washington county, where he grew to manhood and received a district-school education. When a young man he was married to Sarah Scott, who was born in 1813, in Fallowfield township. The young couple first settled on a farm on Pigeon creek, and in 1846 moved to the homestead of 140 acres where their children are yet living. Mr. Carson voted with the Democratic party, serving in various offices, and in religion Mrs. Carson was a member of the Baptist Church. He died January 27, 1872, and September 17, 1887, his wife was laid beside him. Their children were born as follows: Newton (who was a real-estate dealer and founder of West Belle Vernon, deceased December 24, 1888), Mary (wife of Jackson Carson, of Fallowfield township), Smith (a farmer, living on Pigeon creek), Lewis (living in West Pike Run township), John B. (residing in Allen township), Jerome G., and Sarah J. (deceased).

John B. Carson, son of John B. and Sarah (Scott) Carson, was born in 1818, in Fallowfield township, Washington county. He attended the schools of the county, afterward went to the Southwestern State Normal School at California, and afterward taught five terms near the home neighborhood. In 1874 he was united in marriage with Melissa Duvall, a native of East Pike Run township, this county, a daughter of J. P. and Sarah (Robison) Duvall, the father born in East Bethlehem township, and the mother a native of Washington county; both parents are now living in East Pike Run township. After his marriage John B. Carson located on the 130 acres in Fallowfield township, where he is now living. In 1874 he erected a good house, and in 1881 built a new barn. He is a prosperous farmer; in politics he votes the Democratic ticket. Mr. and Mrs. Carson are members of the Zion Disciple Church, in which he serves as an elder. They are the parents of six children, namely: Bertha L., Val C., Sarah Mabel, John Parker, Viola Isabelle and Jefferson P.

HARRY C. SCOTT. Joseph Scott, the oldest representative of the Scott family in Washington county, was born about 1761 in Scotland, coming to America during the latter part of the eighteenth century. He first located in York county, Penn., where he was married to Martha Paden, who was born in 1763. Prior to 1788, when Washington county was very sparsely settled, he came from York county, and made a home in the eastern part of Hanover township, this county, near Raceoon creek, securing control of an immense tract of wild land. A cabin was erected, which furnished them protection, and although deprived of many of the luxuries of life, they were soon able to build a comfortable home. The story of the struggles, hardships and privations of early pioneers has often been told, and the lives of this earnest and self-reliant couple were similar to those of their comrades who undertook the arduous task of making the wilderness "to blossom as the rose." Industry finally was rewarded; they became wealthy and highly respected citizens, and passed the remainder of their lives surrounded by children and friends. They died at a ripe old age, in full connection with the "Old-School Presbyterian" Church, in which they had been reared from infancy. Politically the grandfather was a Democrat. To this worthy couple were born two sons and three daughters, all of whom lived to an adult age.

Joseph Scott, a son of the pioneer Joseph, was born in 1800, and passed his early life on the farm of his father, amid the privations of a frontier home, receiving a limited education in the subscription schools. In 1830 he was married to Isabelle, daughter of Samuel Nelson, and the following children were born to their union: Lonisa (Mrs. John Camden, of Mt. Pleasant township), born February 19, 1831; William (a farmer of Beaver county), born October 26, 1833; Margaret, born February 5, 1835 (died unmarried January 5, 1865); Mary Jane, born August 20, 1837, deceased in infancy; Elizabeth, born October 20, 1839 (wife of S. J. Dennis, a merchant of Wellsville, Ohio), and Joseph D., born November 13, 1843. Mr. and Mrs. Scott resided on the home farm during life, and he devoted his entire attention to agriculture. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion he and his wife were members of the Robinson U. P. Church. He died September 28, 1873, and his widow survived him until September 10, 1886. They are buried in Florence cemetery.

Benjamin Scott was born June 2, 1792, in Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn. He received a subscription-school education, and, working in his father's mill, learned the business, which he followed several years. When a young man he was married to Susan McKinley, who was born in 1800, daughter of Hugh McKinley, of Washington county, Penn. They settled on a farm near that of his parents, and the mill having been sold, he afterward devoted his entire attention to agricultural pursuits, meeting with signal success. Their children were born as follows: Alexander, Joseph, Sophia, Benjamin, Sarah Jane, Patterson, John, Susan and Elizabeth. Mr. Scott took an active interest in the welfare of the Democratic party, and he and his wife were, both socially and financially, leading members of Cross Roads Presbyterian Church. In 1877, after long and useful lives spent together, both parents passed from earth, the father aged eighty-five and the mother aged seventy-seven years.

Patterson Scott was born March 18, 1835, in Hanover township, and was reared to farm pursuits, receiving his education in the common schools. On October 16, 1868, he was united in marriage with Eliza J. Miller, who was born March 16, 1837, in Harrison county, Ohio, daughter of Daniel, and granddaughter of John Miller, who was born in 1806, in Frederick county, Md. John Miller came to Rumley township, Harrison Co., Ohio, where he purchased land of the Government, at one time owning 215 acres. On arriving at Rumley township he was obliged to cut his way through the woods, around his lands, and camped out while building his cabin. He was the father of nine children, viz.: Daniel, David, John, Jacob, Joseph, Catherine, Hannah, Polly and Sarah. Daniel Miller (father of Mrs. Patterson Scott) was born in 1788, in Frederick county, Md., and coming to Harrison county, Ohio, with his parents, shared all the hardships of pioneer life. In 1817 he was married to Susan Lowmiller, who was born in 1796, in Dauphin county, Penn., a daughter of John and Catherine (Long) Lowmiller, who came to Harrison county in 1800. The children of Daniel and Susan Miller were as follows: Catherine, Elizabeth, Sarah, John, Henry, Susanna, Rebecca, Margaret, Abigail and Eliza J. (Mrs. Patterson Scott).

Mr. and Mrs. Scott began wedded life on the home place in Hanover township, where he carried on general farming and an extensive stock raising business. Mr. Scott was a representative farmer; in politics he was an enthusiastic Democrat, and served in various local offices. He died October 24, 1883, and was buried in Florence cemetery. The children of his family are as follows: Henry

C., Margaret C., Susan E. and John M. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Scott has had charge of the farm, which is now managed by her son, Harry C. Mrs. Scott is a member of the Cross Roads Presbyterian Church, with which her husband was also actively identified.

ALLISON D. SWART is a descendant of Philip Swart, who emigrated from Germany with his family in about 1786, and locating in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., settled on a farm of 315 acres, which has since been owned by his descendants. He died about 1811, leaving two children—Jacob and Mrs. Susan Phillips.

Jacob Swart, son of Philip, was born near the old home in Amwell township, this county, and passed his early years at home, receiving his education at the subscription schools of the day. He was an excellent business man, and though he lived only to the prime of life, he became the owner of six farms, aggregating a total of 1,000 acres. His property was an enduring monument to the energy, good judgment and business capacity of a hardy and persevering pioneer. His wife was Miss Sarah Evans, of Amwell township, and ten children were born to them: Dorothy (Mrs. Mustard), Philip, David, John, Polly (Mrs. Huston), Henry, Abraham, George, Hiram and Charlotte. Jacob Swart died on the old farm in Amwell township in 1815. In politics he was a Whig, and he was esteemed by all.

Hiram Swart, son of Jacob, and the father of the subject of this memoir, was born February 12, 1812, on Rees creek, Greene Co., Penn., where he lived for three or four years, at the end of which time his parents brought him to Washington county. When he was about twelve years of age, the family moved upon the old Swart farm in Amwell township, where he lived until about 1874. In 1845 he was united in marriage with Charlotte McGinnis, and she dying he married, for his second wife, Margaret Keys. He was again married, on this, the third occasion, to Mary Hastings, who bore him five children: Mary Emma, Allison D., David H., William H. and Maggie V.

Allison D. Swart was born October 11, 1862, in Amwell township, on the old farm where Mr. Bailey now resides. Here he remained until he was fourteen years of age, when he came with his father to the "Squire Hughes place," where he remained until his marriage. He received his education at the Swart and Birch schoolhouses, afterward for three years attending the Pleasant Valley Academy, where he ranked among the first as a bright student. On November 6, 1886, Mr. Swart was united in marriage with Emma Iams, of Amwell township, and they have one son: Hiram Iams, born December 11, 1887. Mr. Swart passed the years 1884 and 1885 in the West, and since his return has resided continuously in Amwell, of which township he is one of the substantial young citizens. After marriage he began farming on the stock farm; then removed to his present home. He has a fertile, well-cultivated farm, where he carries on general agriculture, and he also does a good business in shipping lay. In the ranks of the Republican party he has proven himself to be a rising young politician. In church connection he is a Baptist.

MRS. E. L. WELSH. Joseph B. Welsh (deceased) was one of those citizens whose lives have been so filled with kindly acts and noble deeds, that their loss is felt not alone by kindred, but by the entire community. Men of such character never die in the hearts of those who have been privileged to know and love them, but it is only a just tribute to their memory that the record of their lives should be given to those who follow after, as examples most worthy of emulation.

Joseph B. Welsh was a son of William Welsh, who was an associate and compeer of John Sloan, a congressman from Wooster, Ohio; Abner Leonard, a prominent Presbyterian minister; Jonathan Knight, an eminent engineer and member of Congress from Washington county, Penn.; Drs. Joseph and Jonathan Letherman, eminent physicians; also of Hon. Joseph Lawrence, and many others. William Welsh served for many years as justice of the peace, and in the family library his docket is yet preserved, every entry made in clear, neat and orderly form, and written by a superior penman. The Rev. Dr. Estep, who is widely known as one of the most able clergymen of the Baptist faith, said of William Welsh that he "never met a more logical or clear reasoner" than he. Mr. Welsh died many years ago, leaving a widow, eight daughters and two sons; one of the daughters was the first wife of G. V. Lawrence, of Monongahela.

Joseph B. Welsh, the second son of William, was born December 10, 1815, on the home farm in East Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., where his father died. He attended Washington and Jefferson College for a short time, but his services being required on the farm, he soon returned to assist his widowed mother in educating the younger children. He said to his mother: "I will remain with you until my sisters are educated and provided for," and most faithfully was that promise kept. His sisters were educated at the seminaries in Steubenville (Ohio) and Washington (Penn.), in due time leaving the maternal roof with husbands of their choice, who were all acceptable to the family. After the death of his mother Joseph B. Welsh was united in marriage with Miss Emily L. Taylor, a lady, who though several years his junior, was yet especially fitted as his bride. He was a member of the Legislature in 1865-69, and passed most of his life on the farm where his ancestors had settled nearly a century ago. In the halls of legislation, as executor or administrator of vast estates, as guardian of minors, in the relations of neighbor, husband and father, Joseph B. Welsh was equally able and invariably faithful to every duty. In social life he possessed genial, pleasant manners, was apt in conversation or repartee, and having an unusually extensive knowledge of men and measures, was a most entertaining companion. In 1879 he was thrown from a horse, which accident caused a fibrous tumor in his left side that first began to develop in October, 1880. From that date his health rapidly declined, and he was laid to rest March 22, 1881, after a protracted illness. His last days were passed in perfect repose, for believing that the God who had given life knew best when that life should end, he submitted with the utmost resignation to his will. Mrs. Welsh is descended from one of the most highly respected families of Washington county, and is now residing in a beautiful home in East Bethlehem township. Her four daughters have been reared in culture and refinement, of whom three are married and living in Washington county; they are Rebecca (Mrs. Joseph Clark, residing in Pittsburgh), Ella (Mrs. Jonas Emery), Cora (Mrs. William H. Theakston) and Mary, at home.

WILLIAM KEENAN. Among the well-known and prosperous agriculturists of Carroll township, this gentleman is prominently identified. He, like many of our most progressive citizens, traces his ancestry to the Emerald Isle, for the warm blood of the true son of Erin flows in his veins. His grandfather, James Keenan, was born in County Down, Ireland, and passed his entire life on a farm in the old country. He reared a family of eight children, one of whom came to America. The father lived to the advanced age of one hundred years.

Samuel Keenan, son of James, was born in 1785, in County Down, Ireland, where his boyhood was passed; he worked on the farm, and attended the schools of the county. In 1813 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Gourley, the only child of her parents, who died when she was an infant. He erected a pleasant home, and the young couple remained in Ireland until 1819, when they sailed to America. They came to Pennsylvania, and resided in different parts of Carroll township, Washington county, for several years. He then bought and moved upon 110 acres of land in Carroll township, and afterward purchased an additional 120 acres, adjoining the first farm. He was a Democrat in politics, and in religion he and his wife were members and liberal supporters of the Presbyterian Church. Samuel Keenan died in 1865, aged eighty years, followed by his wife in 1886, who died in her ninety-fourth year of heart failure. Their children were born as follows: James, Jane (Mrs. Nelson), Samuel (who died on the Atlantic Ocean, and was buried on an island), Elizabeth (wife of Robert Coulter), Samuel, Isaac, Sarah (married to John F. McElhenry), Robert, William, Hugh, Mary Helena, Joseph, Catherine (wife of John H. Huston, of Union township), and Isaac (a graduate of a medical college). Of this family, Jane, Sarah, William, and Catherine are yet living. James and Jane were born in Ireland, the others were natives of Pennsylvania.

William Keenan was born June 30, 1829, on the home place in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn. He attended school three months each season for three years, and spent most of his time in farm duties. In May, 1859, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Myers, of Somerset township, this county. The young couple rented a place for one year, and in September bought their present farm, adjoining the old homestead. They moved to their new home in the following April, and there six children have blessed their union, namely: Sylvester (deceased in childhood), Samuel (a carpenter, spent four years in the West, and is now living at home), Mina (wife of Dr. Farquhar), Henry M., John, and Iva N., all living with their parents. The home place consists of 130 acres, upon which Mr. Keenan has erected a handsome residence and other buildings, and has made many improvements. He is a Democrat, and has served faithfully as school director, road commissioner, assessor, auditor, judge of elections, and in various other local offices. Mrs. Keenan and her daughters are members of the Presbyterian Church.

MARK B. KELSO. Notwithstanding the fact that this gentleman has been a citizen of Washington county for but a few years, he has become prominently associated with the interests of the community, and is recognized as a leading farmer. His parents, Benjamin and Martha (Murdoch) Kelso, were residents of Allegheny county, Penn., where the following children were born to them: Rebecca, John, George, Mary, James, Nancy, Margaret, Martha, Benjamin, Mark B., Samuel and Elizabeth. Of this family Rebecca, George, James, Benjamin, Mark B. and Samuel are yet living. Both parents were interred in the Robinson Run cemetery.

Mark B. Kelso was born November 17, 1855, on the home place in Allegheny county, Penn., where his youth was passed. When the Civil war began he enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Twenty-third Pennsylvania Regiment, and among the engagements in which he participated may be mentioned Fredericksburg and Antietam. At the close of the war he received an honorable discharge, and returned home. He was married to Lizzie A., daughter of James and Sarah (Phillips) McConnell, and children have been born to this marriage as follows: Sarah P. (wife of W. M. Templeton), Benjamin Edmund, Mattie M., James Alvin and John Mc. In 1876 Mr. Kelso came to Washington county, Penn., and purchased 184 acres in North Strabane township, where he has a beautiful home. In politics he affiliates with the Republican party, and in church connection the family are all members of the United Presbyterian Society.

JOSEPH P. JEFFREY. The well-known family, of which this gentleman is a prominent member, has for many years been closely identified with the history and progress of West Pike Run township.

Joseph J. Jeffrey was born of Irish parents in Chester county, Penn., in 1772, and in 1788 purchased the old farm in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn. In 1796 he was married to Betsey Robison, who was born in 1781, in Loudoun county, Va., and the young couple soon moved to the farm he had previously purchased. The place contained about two hundred acres of land, upon which he carried on a profitable business in farming and stock raising. Joseph J. Jeffrey died April 9, 1854, having been preceded by his wife June 16, 1833. The children born to this couple are named as follows: Amor, Job, Plessie, Mary, Benjamin and John.

Amor Jeffrey was born March 21, 1803, on the home farm in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., where he learned carding and the woolen trade. He followed that business during early life, afterward devoting his attention to milling and agricultural pursuits. On April 6, 1828, he was united in marriage with Sarah Gregg, a native of Washington county, Penn., born September 8, 1805. To this union were born the following children: Eliza, wife of Henry Gregg, a farmer of Greene county, Penn.; Joseph P., subject of sketch; Anderson; Benjamin F.; Elizabeth, deceased February 18, 1875; Jacob, deceased May 16, 1883; John, deceased March 16, 1855; George W., deceased December 25, 1870; James J., deceased October 18, 1871; Eleanor, deceased October 20, 1876, and Jackman, deceased January 24, 1844. The father was fond of literary pursuits, and in political opinion was a member of the Democratic party. He died June 15, 1885, having been preceded by his wife June 9, 1880.

Joseph P. Jeffrey was born November 4, 1829, on the home farm in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn. His youth and early manhood were passed on the home place, where he studied medicine until the death of his tutor interrupted his preparation. Circumstances then arose which prevented his graduation, and for thirteen years afterward he worked for one farmer. Although he never graduated, Mr. Jeffrey has successfully treated the ills of his friends and kindred, and is probably better fitted for practice than many who have the title of M. D. affixed to their names. In 1859 he was united in marriage with Nancy Jane Hess, a native of Ohio, daughter of John Hess, and they have had three children, viz.: Mrs. Margaret Ann Bailey, now living with her father; Palmetta (deceased), and Luella (a cultured lady, married to William E. Robison, the genial postmaster of Beallsville, Penn., and proprietor of the Union Supply Co. store). The mother of this family died April 15, 1892.

Mr. Jeffrey has been proprietor of the principal hotel at Centreville, East Bethlehem township, for the past seventeen years. In politics he is a member of the Democratic party. Some years ago, while picking apples, he fell from the top of a twenty-five foot ladder, and though so severely injured that the physicians declared he could not live, his wonderful vitality conquered, but he has never fully recovered from the effects.

WILLIAM G. HORNER is descended from one of the oldest pioneer families of Washington county, Penn., his grandfather, William Horner, having come hither from Adams county, Penn., in 1800, and passed the remainder of his life in agricultural pursuits. He died about the year 1860.

Joseph Horner (son of William) was born in 1806, and grew to manhood on the home farm. He married Catherine Mitchell, who was also a native of Washington county, born August 25, 1817, and the young people settled on the home farm. The following children were born to their union: William G., Elizabeth B. (Mrs. Samuel Mitchell, of Piatt county, Ill.), Nancy C. (wife of David Templeton, of North Strabane township), Mary (Mrs. Abner Myers, of Somerset county, Penn.), Louisa (living at home), and Martha J., Sarah E. and Margaret (all three deceased). Mr. and Mrs. Horner were members of the Presbyterian Church. The father of this family died May 29, 1874, and the mother passed away April 30, 1887.

William G. Horner was born September 16, 1834, on the home farm in North Strabane township. He was educated in the usual log-cabin country school of the vicinity, but has broadened his educational knowledge by observation and experience. He has always followed agricultural pursuits, and is the owner of a well-cultivated and productive farm, which is furnished with fine stock. He is an active politician, and has ever been a leader in all progressive movements of the community which tend to improve the general welfare. Mr. Horner has never married, but his maiden sister, who is living with him, assists in providing the comforts and luxuries of a pleasant home.

REV JAMES KENNEY is probably the oldest resident of East Bethlehem township at the present writing. He is a grandson of William Kenney, a native of Ireland, who, coming to America in an early day, located on Brandywine river, in eastern Pennsylvania, when that locality was an unbroken wilderness. He married a native of Ireland, and reared a family of children, one of whom joined the British army, and the little home, which had been won by years of privation, toil and danger, was confiscated, leaving the parents penniless in their old age. The father died at an advanced age, and was laid to rest beside the scenes of his labor.

Benjamin Kenney, son of William, was born on the farm in eastern Pennsylvania, and there passed his early boyhood, being left a destitute orphan when very young. He was then bound out, and while serving his apprenticeship learned the trade of stone mason, which he followed almost all his life. He was married in Cumberland, Md., to Elizabeth, daughter of John and Amelia Blair, who were pioneers of Tennessee, whither they removed soon after the marriage of their daughter. Mr. and Mrs. Kenney resided in Cumberland about six years, during which time two daughters were born to them, Margaret and Mary, both of whom are long since deceased. Some years after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Kenney came to Fayette county by way of the old "Braddock road;" the journey was long and perilous, but the family finally arrived in safety at their new home, where they resided six years. Here other children were born to them, of whom John was the only one who lived beyond infancy, and he died at the age of fourteen years. In 1802 the parents packed their worldly possessions in a cart drawn by one horse, and moved to Washington county, Penn. The father was then about forty years of age, and had saved a small sum of money, which he invested in a tract of land in East Bethlehem township, and continued to follow his trade in connection with managing the farm. Slowly but surely the little hoard of savings increased, and the farm was finally given into the hands of James. After settling in Washington county, four children were added to the family circle, namely; James, Wesley (a brilliant clergyman and renowned theological scholar), William and Rebecca, the latter three being now deceased. The father was a Republican in politics, and served as one of the first constables of Washington county. In religion he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He died in March, 1843, followed by the widow January 26, 1852; both were very old.

James Kenney was born January 11, 1806, in East Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., and attended the usual log-cabin, puncheon-floored and slab-seated schoolhouse of the period. He has a vivid recollection of the severe old master who ruled with the rod to a degree which would not now be tolerated, Mr. Kenney having seen one young lady flogged until the blood trickled to the floor. As may be supposed, the literary advantages of such an academy of learning were of the most meager character, but these early obstacles were overcome by young Kenney. He eagerly improved each opportunity, for his eyes were upon a noble goal—he wished to be a clergyman—and with this aim in view the lad carried his Bible to the field, perusing its pages while the horses fed. In 1827 he was united in marriage with Ann, daughter of William Sproat, and she bore him four children, viz.: William, a prominent farmer of Ford county, Ill., Elizabeth (Mrs. Greenfield), deceased; Cyrus, a fruit grower of lower California; and John Fletcher, of Ford county, Ill. The mother of this family died in 1838, and on February 5, 1839, the father was married to Patience, daughter of Jonathan More, who was a soldier in the war of 1812, and died soon after his return, from disease contracted in the army. To Mr. Kenney's second marriage were born: Benjamin, Anna (Mrs. Freeman, of Florida, now deceased), Margaret (wife of Wilson Ward), one who died in infancy, James (living on the homestead), Sarah and Josephine (twins, living with their parents), and Mary Manilla (wife of L. M. Cleaver). In 1841 Mr. Kenney obtained a license to preach, and filled his first pulpit at Liberty Chapel, near Washington borough; he had eight appointments in his first circuit. He was never a member of a Conference, preferring to remain at home, that he might superintend the rearing of his children. For the past five years Rev. James Kenney has been preaching in the Centreville M. E. Church; he is now eighty-seven years of age, his wife being in her eighty-fourth year. He has erected all of the buildings upon his farm. In politics he votes with the Republican party.

BETHUEL DAY (deceased) was born in 1816 in Morris township, Washington county, son of Bethuel Day, who was a native of New Jersey, whence he removed to Washington county before the beginning of the present century. Here he married Parmelia Raynor, whose ancestors also emigrated from New Jersey, and to them were born nine children: Stephen, Elias, Sally, Bethania, Jonathan, Hannah, Lemuel Fordham, Parmelia and Bethuel, all of whom are now deceased, Bethuel Day being the last of the family to pass away.

Bethuel Day devoted his whole life to his farm interests, and was known as one of the thorough, go ahead, enterprising farmers in his section. He was an active Christian laborer, being looked upon as a leader in religious matters. He was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Day was married in 1812 to Clarissa Teagarden, a daughter of Samuel Teagarden, of Franklin township, Greene Co., Penn. The Teagarden family are of Prussian descent, the ancestors having come from Germany and located in Pennsylvania among its first inhabitants. For thirteen years after his marriage Mr. Day resided in East Finley township, but in 1856 removed to Morris towuship, and located on the Moses Winget place, about one-half mile west of Old Concord, where he resided at the time of his death, which occurred December 19, 1890. His widow still lives on the old home place. To Mr. and Mrs. Day were born nine children: Oliver, who died at the age of one year; Louisa Catherine, wife of Edmond McVay, of Greene county; Allison, who died when four years old; Jane Parmelia, wife of Oliver Core, of Old Concord; Miriam Frances, wife of Simpson Harvey, of Morris township; Missouri, wife of Willbur Swaine, of Washington county; John Elwood, who is united in marriage with Miss Millie Sprowls, of West Finley township, and resides in Morris township; Emma Virginia, wife of Seaman W. Plants, of East Finley towuship, and Herschel, who died in infancy.

MISS LETTICE McMURRAY, one of the well-known residents of Peters township, is a daughter of Archibald McMurray, whose father, James, was a native and lifelong resident of County Donegal, Ireland. He followed agricultural pursuits, and in early life was married to Margaret McFarland, also a native of Erin. She bore him three children: John, Jane and Archibald.

Archibald McMurray, son of James and Margaret, was born in 1766, in County Donegal, Ireland, and passed his boyhood in tilling the soil. When a young man he was married to Nettie, daughter of William Simpson, a resident of the same county. After his marriage Archibald McMurray followed farming and fishing for some time. In 1801 the young couple came to America, first locating in eastern Pennsylvania, and afterward settled in Allegheny county, same State. They resided here many years, and as time sped on children came to brighten their home as follows: James, William Edward, Jane, Margaret, John, Catherine, Lettice and Ann. But that dread disease, consumption, buried its deadly fangs in the frail forms, and one by one the children were laid to rest until, of that once happy family, but one daughter was left to the bereaved parents.

Lettice McMurray was born about 1812, in Allegheny county, Penn., where she resided twenty-five years. She then came with her parents and younger sister Ann to the home in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn. The mother and sister soon passed away, and Lettice cared for her father until his death, which occurred in 1852. The only living representative of her family, she yet resides on the farm, having lived alone until her health became feeble. She is an earnest member of the United Presbyterian Church, and is patiently awaiting the happy hour which will reunite her with the dear ones gone before. The home farm consists of 100 acres of land.

ISAAC HORN, one of the most prominent farmers of West Bethlehem township, is a grandson of John Horn, who was one of that township's earliest settlers, he having come from east of the Allegheny mountains early in the opening up of Washington county, locating upon a large tract of land in the southern part of the township.

Here, about 1796, was born Jacob Horn, the father of subject. His boyhood was spent in attending the subscription schools, held in the little log-cabin schoolhouses of that period, and subsequently he learned the cooper's trade, which he followed for a number of years. At the age of twenty one he found himself possessed of little more than the education gleaned from the meager teachings of the primitive schools, his trade, and a strong and rugged constitution. He started manfully to work at coopering, making casks, barrels, tubs, etc., many of which were used by parties upon whose property were located still-houses. Soon after attaining his majority he married Priscilla Addeman, a daughter of John Addeman, who was then a resident of Morgan township, Greene county, and not long afterward he and his young wife moved to Harrison county, Ohio, where they lived for several years, and here their son Isaac was born. Soon tiring, however, of the new country, they returned to Pennsylvania, taking up their residence upon the home farm, where Isaac still resides. Here were born to them the following children: Samuel, now living in Iowa; Sarah, deceased; Demas, a prominent farmer of West Bethlehem township, residing on the farm adjoining that of his brother Isaac; John, of near Millsboro, Greene county; Catherine (deceased); Jacob, who died in early boyhood, and Elizabeth, living in Washington county. The father died in 1859, having been preceded to the grave by the mother in about 1844.

Isaac Horn was born May 20, 1824, in Harrison county, Ohio. When he was about three years old, his parents, as above mentioned, returned to Pennsylvania, where he has since passed his life. His education, like that of his father, was of the log cabin school extraction, primitive but substantial. Mr. Horn vividly remembers the seats in the school, which were made of slabs, as were also the desks, and the other furnishings were on a par. When not at school, or assisting in clearing and improving the property then owned by his father, the lad's time was occupied in learning his father's trade, coopering. In the boyhood of our subject much of the country was yet woodland, and many wild animals still roamed the hills and forests. In November, 1844, Mr. Horn married Amy, daughter of Jacob Cox, of East Bethlehem township, and he remained on the old homestead, which came into his possession upon the death of his father. To Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Horn were born the following children: Noah, a merchant of Clarktown, Amwell township; Annabel, Priscilla and William I., living at home with their father. William I. is married to Hannah Craig, of West Bethlehem township, and is now conducting the farm work. Mr. Horn's residence is quiet, yet imposing, situated in the center of a thriving community, about a half mile from Zollarsville, and all the improvements, which are numerous, have been made by him. The house was erected in 1866, the barn and out-buildings, all of which give his place an air of prosperity, having been built a few years later. Politically Mr. Horn is a lifelong Republican, and in religion a member of the Disciple Church. His wife, Amy, departed this life March 16, 1883, deeply lamented, by not only her own family, but by all who knew her.

THOMAS CAIN was born January 25, 1823, in Greene county, Penn., and is a worthy representative of a well-known pioneer family. His grandfather, John Cain, was a native of Ireland, and in early manhood immigrated to America, locating in Maryland, where he was united in marriage with Mary Means. About 1785 he came to Greene county, Penn., where brothers of his wife had located a year or two before. Here the following children were born to him: Thomas, Dennis, John, Nancy, Mary, Elizabeth and Catherine, all now deceased. John Cain, the father of this family, was among the early pioneers of Greene county, and shared the hardships and dangers of frontier life. He died about 1830, and his widow then returned to her native Maryland, passing the remainder of her life among her relatives.

Thomas Cain, the eldest son in the above mentioned family, was born in 1784, in Maryland, and when a young child was brought by his parents to Greene county, Penn. Almost every farmer operated a distillery in those days, and the youth of Thomas was passed in assisting in that work, and in the duties of the farm. He was naturally an apt and intelligent boy, and his meager educational opportunities were thus supplemented; he was also a mechanical genius, and made good use of almost any tool. In 1812 he was married to Mary Montague, who was born in 1784, a daughter of Henry and Rosanna Montague, who left County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1792, and after a stormy voyage of eleven weeks and three days landed at New Castle, Del. They first located in eastern Pennsylvania, and soon afterward began the long journey to Kentucky, of which State they had heard so many glowing descriptions. But the severe winter of 1793 set in when the travelers had reached Washington county, so they concluded to remain there until spring, and made a temporary location in Canton township. During this interval they met an old frontiersman who had been in Kentucky, and, knowing the hostile disposition of the Indians at that time, he advised this family to remain in Pennsylvania. Mr. Montague took the advice, and proceeding a few miles farther west, made a permanent home in Donegal township, near the present postoffice of Coon Island. To Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Cain were born the following children: Henry (deceased at the age of ten years), Nancy (deceased wife of James Reynolds), Rosanna (who married Patrick Reynolds, and died at a good old age), John (farming in Donegal township, Washington county), Thomas (our subject) and Henry. Mr. Cain lived in Greene county, Penn., for some time after his marriage, and in 1824 made a permanent home on the old Montague farm, near Coon Island, Donegal township, Washington county. He was an industrious and successful man, respected by all who knew him. He died in 1837, his widow on March 17, 1860.

Thomas Cain, when but a small child, came with his parents to Donegal township, Washington county, and passed his boyhood on the home farm, of which he and his brothers took charge when the father died. His education was received at the common schools, but has since been supplemented by reading and observation. He has always followed agricultural pursuits, and now owns a part of the home farm upon which his brother Henry resides. Mr. Cain is living with his brother John, and has never married. Politically he is a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Catholic Church.

SIMON WONSETTLER, a prosperous and widely-known farmer and stock raiser of West Bethlehem township, is a native of the county, born in Amwell township March 6, 1850.

Nicholas Wonsettler, grandfather of Simon, was born in 1754, in West Bethlehem township, this county, and died at the age of eighty years. He had two children, Jonathan and Samuel, the latter of whom died in infancy. Jonathan passed his early years in assisting his father on the farm, and in attending the common schools. He was united in marriage with Delia Simmons, a daughter of John Simmons, who was of German parentage, and to this couple were born the following named children: Anna, Elizabeth, Demas and Simon.

Simon Wonsettler when twenty-one years of age bought the farm of fifty five acres in West Bethlehem township, where he now resides. On August 20, 1871, he married Clara Garrett, a daughter of Samuel Garrett, of West Bethlehem township, and they have one daughter, Nora, born September 18, 1876. Mr. Wonsettler is a Democrat, and exerts a weighty influence in the politics of his vicinity. Both he and his wife are earnest members of the Lutheran Church.

JOHN WILLIAMS, a successful farmer of East Bethlehem township, is a son of Daniel, whose father was a native of West Virginia, where Daniel was born. The latter became a ferryman on the Monongahela river, and afterward a teamster on the National pike, making many trips to Baltimore; and after losing a large sum of money in some unfortunate investments, died on a farm in East Bethlehem township. He was married to Amelia Thompson, who bore him children as follows: Mrs. Sarah Ann Gibson, Mrs. Mary Ann Elliott, Mrs. Susan E. McCullough (living in West Virginia), Eliza (of Putnam county, Ill.), Amelia Barbara (of Putnam county, Ill.), Hannah Jane (of Lock No. 5, Monongahela river), John, and one who died in infancy. Of these are now living Susan E. and John.

John Williams was born April 3, 1829, in the house now owned by one Watkins, on a place in East Pike Run township, Washington county. At the age of sixteen he began to learn the blacksmith's trade, and after serving a three years' apprenticeship, followed that business thirteen years, then devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits. On October 20, 1850, he was married to Nancy, daughter of Robert Gilles, and their children were Robert G., born October 19, 1851, died August 29, 1852; Daniel W., born December 22, 1852, a farmer of Putnam county, Ill.; and Samuel James, born April 18, 1856, a farmer of Harlan county, Neb. The mother died April 29, 1856, aged twenty-eight years ten months, and for his second wife John Williams was married, on February 7, 1858, to Anna, daughter of Curtis and Esther Pyles, natives of Washington county, Penn. To this union children were born as follows: Ida Florence, born June 30, 1859, died July 7, same year; Flora Belle, born October 29, 1860, wife of Homer Crumrine; Curtis, born June 24, 1863, living in Pittsburgh, Penn., and Emma May, born October 21, 1865, living at home. Mrs. Williams was laid to rest December 13, 1868, aged thirty-three years two months seven days, and on November 29, 1873, he was united in marriage with Ann, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth Morris. Three children have blessed this marriage, as follows: Ella M., born September 18, 1875; Elvarette, born October 15, 1877, and Oliver J., born December 24, 1881, who died April 23, 1886. Mr. Williams has been an enterprising business man, and now owns 122 acres of good land, which he devotes to agricultural interests. In politics he is a Republican, and has served as auditor and supervisor of East Bethlehem township. Mrs. Williams and her daughters are members of the M. E. Church.

CLOSSER, JOHN and DEMAS, are representatives of one of the oldest families of Amwell township. Their grandfather, John Closser, moved from "Old Virginia" to Washington county, Penn., about 1790, and settling on the farm which is now the property of Stephen B. Day, took up a tract of 200 acres, which he owned for several years. He was united in marriage with a Miss Peck, of Amwell township, and to their union were born three sons and two daughters: James, Daniel, Anna (Mrs. Chambers), A. J. and Athla (Mrs. Van Kirk). Mr. Closser had a limited school education, but was a well-informed man. Politically he was a Democrat, always taking an active interest in the welfare of his party and all public affairs of the township. In his religious views he was a Quaker. He lived on the farm twenty-four years, and after his death, which occurred in 1814, it became the property of his two sons.

A. J. Closser was born in 1813 on the old homestead in Amwell township, and remained there thirty years, engaging in farm work. He was educated in the common schools, and was a well-read and intelligent man for that period. In 1842 he was married to Annie Moninger, who died in 1847, leaving two sons, John and Franklin. After the death of this wife, Mr. Closser married, in 184-, Sarah Totten, and to this union were born five sons and one daughter: Demas, Henry M., James W., Samples S., Francis Moran and Anna. In 1852 Mr. Closser purchased the farm of 120 acres now occupied by his son John, and two years afterward sold it, and purchased the place which is his present home. He is a Democrat, but votes for principle regardless of party divisions, when he thinks occasion demands it.

JOHN CLOSSER, son of A. J. and Annie (Monger) Closser, was born February 8, 1813, on the ancestral acres in Amwell township, and when nine years of age moved to the farm which he still occupies. In 1862 he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. L., and remained during the whole service. He was in all the engagements of his company, was not wounded, but had five holes made in his clothing from the enemy's bullets, and he was once slightly injured by a ball. After his return from the war, he turned to the more peaceful life of an agriculturist. He was united in marriage with Miss Annita Mowl, of West Bethlehem township, Washington county, which union was blessed with four children: Maggie B., Willie C., Pearl and Flora. In political opinion Mr. Closser follows in the steps of his forefathers, and votes the Democratic ticket. He has been justice of the peace in Amwell township eight years, and during that time, becoming interested in law, has passed his leisure time in the diligent study of the principles of that profession, and so well has he improved the time that he will be soon admitted to practice. He was for three years a student at Pleasant Valley Academy. Mr. Closser and his family are all earnest workers in the Disciple Church of Lone Pine.

ELMAS CLOSSER was born in 184—, on the old farm of Stephen Day, and remained there about five years, when his parents brought him to the old Closser place, situated on the north branch of Ten-Mile creek. He remained on this farm fifteen years, attending the common schools, working for his father by the month, and giving him his wages until he was twenty one years of age, when he continued to work by the month for four years; then bought part of the old Riggle farm, on which he lived for about five years; then sold this, purchased and came to his present home. In 1874 he was married to Mary Luellen, who has borne him three children: Gracie Estella Myrtie, May C. and George Lalier. Mr. Closser has a valuable farm of sixty-seven acres, equal to any land in the vicinity. Politically he is a Democrat, and takes a warm interest in all questions pertaining to good local or national government.

WILSON WARD. This enterprising and native-born farmer of Washington county comes of Maryland ancestry, his father, William Ward, having moved from that State to Washington county at an early day.

Wilson Ward was born February 22, 1823, in Allen township, near Belle Vernon, and was in boyhood inducted into the various arduous duties of farm life, a few weeks in the winter season being devoted to attending the primitive schools of the neighborhood. On February 28, 1867, he married Miss Margaret M., daughter of Rev. James Kenney, and granddaughter of Benjamin Kenney. After marriage Mr. Ward bought the farm in East Bethlehem township on which he now resides, comprising 186 acres of valuable land, all in a high state of cultivation. Here he carries on general agriculture, including stock raising, etc., and has met with well merited success. To Mr. and Mrs. Ward have been born children as follows: William, January 2, 1868; Le Moyne, February 7, 1870; Theodore, August 23, 1871, and Walter E., January 23, 1880, all still living under the parental roof. William H. at one time conducted a store in the village of Fredericktown, this county, but, unfortunately, was burned out in April, 1891, and he has since been assisting his father on the farm. In his political preferences our subject is a Republican, but is not active, as his time and attention are exclusively devoted to his farm duties. He and the family are members of the M. E. Church, and are highly esteemed by a large circle of friends.

ADDISON A. GRIFFITH. The Griffith family, of which this gentleman is a worthy representative, comes of Irish ancestry. David Griffith, the grandfather, having emigrated from that country to America in an early day. He and his family first located on a farm in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn., then moved to a place near Claysville, Donegal township, and finally went to Monroe county, Ohio, where he died, leaving children as follows: Benjamin, Samuel, John, David, Ephraim, Elizabeth, Anna, Charlotte, Rachel, Jonah and Levi. The father in his political preferences affiliated with the Whig party; in religion he was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Miller's Run.

Levi Griffith, son of David, was born May 10, 1809, in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn., where his early education was received. In 1830 he married Margaret, daughter of James McClellan, of Mt. Pleasant township, this county. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Griffith resided in Chartiers township, this county, two years, then came to Canonsburg, where he died in 1883. He followed the business of a contractor and builder, in politics was a Whig and Republican, and in religion a member of the U. P. Church, which he served as trustee. His widow is yet living, in her eighty-eighth year, the mother of the following children: Nancy J. (wife of Rev. W. J. Alexander), David, James, Ada A. (Mrs. John A. Boone), Allie (wife of Andrew W. Miller) and Addison A.

Addison A. Griffith was born July 5, 1842, in Canonsburg, Penn., where he received a thorough training at the public schools. At the age of eighteen years he was appointed assistant in the quartermaster's office, army of the Cumberland, remaining there sixteen months, and was then transferred to the Department of the Shenandoah, where he was until the close of the war. He then returned home, and going to Oil City, Penn., engaged in trading in oil, hay, grain and general produce. A year later he opened a general store at Freeport, Armstrong Co., Penn., which included dry goods, notions, boots and shoes. He conducted this business eighteen months, then managed a hotel at Sioux City, Iowa, one year, and afterward, having purchased a stock of goods, opened a store about sixty miles north of Sioux City, and there remained two years. He then resided on a farm in Iowa several years, and, moving from there to Dakota, sold agricultural implements there for two years; thence returned to the farm in Iowa, and finally located in Canonsburg, Washington Co., Penn. He served several years as division officer of the Morganza Reform School, and soon afterward opened the extensive tobacco establishment in Canonsburg which he is now conducting. In 1870 Addison A. Griffith and Mary, daughter of Rev. William Galbraith, were united in marriage. Rev. Galbraith was married to a Miss Backup, and their children were John, George, Mary (Mrs. Griffith), Ellen and Laura.

Two children were born to the union of Addison A. and Mary Griffith, namely: William, conducting a large shoe business at Mansfield, Penn.; and Maggie. For his second wife Mr. Griffith was united in marriage with Hannah, daughter of Godfrey Cook, one of the oldest families of Washington county, and they have two daughters, Mary and Clara. Mr. Griffith is widely known as an enterprising business man, and is actively identified with the interests of the Republican party. He is a member of the United Presbyterian Church.

J D. SCOTT. The Scott family were early pioneers of Washington county, and are of Scotch descent. Joseph Scott, the oldest representative, was born about 1761, in Scotland, coming to America during the latter part of the eighteenth century. He first located in York county, Penn., where he was married to Martha Paden, who was born in 1763. Prior to 1788, when Washington county was sparsely settled, he came from York county, and made a home in the eastern part of Hanover township, this county, near Raccoon creek, securing control of an immense tract of wild land. A cabin was erected which furnished them protection, and although deprived of many of the luxuries of life, they were soon able to build a comfortable home. The story of the struggles, hardships and privations of early pioneers has often been told, and the lives of this earnest and self-reliant couple were similar to those of their comrades who undertook the arduous task of making the wilderness "to blossom as the rose." Industry finally was rewarded; they became wealthy and highly-respected citizens, and passed the remainder of their lives surrounded by children and friends. They died at a ripe old age, in full connection with the "Old School Presbyterian" Church, in which they had been reared from infancy. Politically the grandfather was a Democrat. To this worthy couple were born two sons and three daughters, all of whom lived to an adult age.

Joseph Scott, a son of the pioneer Joseph, was born in 1800, and passed his early life on the farm of his father, amid the privations of a frontier home, receiving a limited education in the subscription schools. In 1830 he was married to Isabelle, daughter of Samuel Nelson, and the following children were born to their union: Louisa (Mrs. John Camden, of Mt. Pleasant township), born February 19, 1831; William (a farmer of Beaver county, born October 26, 1833; Margaret, born February 5, 1835 (died unmarried, January 5, 1865); Mary Jane, born August 20, 1837 (deceased in infancy), Elizabeth (wife of S. J. Dennis, a merchant of Wellsville, Ohio), born October 20, 1839, and Joseph D. (our subject). Mr. and Mrs. Scott resided on the home farm during life, and he devoted his entire attention to agriculture. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion he and his wife were members of the Robinson U. P. Church. He died September 28, 1873, and his widow survived him until September 10, 1886. They are buried in Florence cemetery.

Joseph D. Scott was born November 13, 1843, on the same farm which is yet his home, and during his earlier years attended the common schools and worked on the place. On December 25, 1867, he was married to Mary E. Donaldson, who was born March 19, 1848, daughter of Richard and Mary (Bigger) Donaldson, of Hanover township, this county. The children of J. D. and Mary E. Scott were William D., Edith M. (deceased), Ora B. and Sarah E. After his marriage Mr. Scott located for a short time on the Donaldson homestead in Hanover township, where he followed farming for a time, then engaged in the mercantile business at Bavington, Penn., thence moving to Camelton, Beaver Co., Penn. This line of business proving unprofitable, he came in 1876 to his present farm, where he has since been engaged in agriculture. In politics Mr. Scott is a firm Democrat. Both he and his wife are members of the Cross Roads Presbyterian Church.

DEWALT DAGUE was born in 1818, in West Bethlehem township, this county, on the old Dague homestead. His youth was spent on the paternal farm, of which he assumed the entire charge upon attaining the age of manhood. Although he received but a limited education in the common schools, he afterward became a well informed man, and was possessed of exceptionally good judgment. He was very successful in business, with the faculty of accumulating property, and at the time of his death owned nearly 300 acres of excellent farming land. He was married to Delilah Swagler, daughter of Jonathan Swagler, of West Bethlehem township, and they had five children: Mrs. George Keel, Jacob, Jonathan, Thomas and Elmer E. Dewalt Dague was a Republican, and held several positions in the township, such as school director and supervisor, which offices he creditably filled for several years. He was a very useful man in the community, and was much depended upon by his neighbors in sickness and death, for he never refused to aid those in affliction and trouble. He was a member of the Lutheran Church. In 1884 many sorrowing friends followed him to the grave.

THOMAS DAGUE, one of the rising young farmers of West Bethlehem township, was born April 3, 1857, on the old homestead in West Bethlehem township. His younger days were spent at home and in attending the common schools, but being the eldest boy in the family his opportunities in that respect were comparatively limited. However, in after years he abundantly made up for his lack of schooling by considerable application to books. At the age of twenty-three he began life for himself by working his father's farm on shares, and he has been hard working and very successful. On October 2, 1879, he was married to Ella Deems, daughter of Harrison and Catherine Deems, residents of West Pike Run township. Mrs. Dague has four sisters: Mrs. John Frederick, Mrs. Amanda Hawkins, Mrs. Stanton Luce and Jennie Deems. Mr. and Mrs. Dague have one son, Charles, born August 20, 1880. Our subject is a Republican, and one of the supervisors of the township. He has always taken an active interest in the politics of his township, and he and his wife are both highly respected members of the Scenery Hill Methodist Church.

ELMER ELLSWORTH DAGUE, a prominent and progressive agriculturist of West Bethlehem township, was born upon the farm which he now owns, and he received a fair education at the school known as the "Nicholl's School," in West Bethlehem township. After leaving school he followed the carpenter's trade, having a natural inclination for that kind of work. He was united in marriage with Annie Morton, and to them have been born the following named children: Walter, Bertha, Collins and Mary Josephine, all of whom are living. Mr. Dague is a Republican of no little local prominence, and enjoys the respect and esteem of a wide circle of friends.

JAMES W. HODGENS. Among the leading representative and progressive young farmers in Buffalo township, this gentleman occupies a prominent position. He was born May 23, 1856, in Buffalo township, this county, on the farm whereon he has since resided. He is a son of Thomas and Margaret (Wilson) Hodgens, the latter of whom was a daughter of William Wilson, late of Buffalo township.

Thomas Hodgens was a native of the same township, whither his parents had come in an early day, and here he was reared to the many and varied arduous duties of farm life. His winter months were, to a considerable extent, devoted to attending the neighboring subscription schools, and, improving what he may there have learned by study at home, acquired in course of time, by earnest application to his books, a good useful education. While yet a young man Mr. Hodgens was married to Margaret Wilson, and the young couple then took up their residence on the farm now occupied by R. W. Crothers, from which after a few years they moved to the place which is at present the home of our subject and his brother. This farm was totally unimproved, and was brought to its present state of cultivation by the assiduous labor, industry and perseverance of Thomas Hodgens, the buildings thereon having been erected by him and his family. The children born to Thomas and Margaret (Wilson) Hodgens were William and Ella (both deceased), James W., Isaac and Clara. In 1862 the father passed from earth, and was followed to the grave by the mother in 1869. They were constant attendants and liberal supporters of the Presbyterian Church at Claysville, and enterprising citizens, earning a reputation of which the family are justly proud. Mr. Hodgens was a staunch and loyal Democrat, and, although rarely accepting political preference, was ever a zealous worker for the party's cause.

James W. Hodgens was reared to agricultural pursuits on his father's farm, and received his education at the common schools of the district. On March 8, 1876, he was married to Mary L., daughter of James and Caroline (Horr) McMannis, prominent citizens, in their day, of Buffalo township, and the children born to this union were Thomas, Clara and Glenn. Mr. and Mrs. Hodgens are members of the Presbyterian Church, and in his political preference he is an uncompromising Democrat. Mr. Hodgins is liberal of his means toward, and the pronounced champion of, all measures tending to the welfare and advancement of the community at large.

SAMUEL GREENLEE FULTON, one of West Bethlehem township's leading young farmers, is a native of Greene county, Penn., born in Washington township, April 1, 1858, a son of Stephen and Mary (Greenlee) Fulton.

Stephen Fulton, grandfather of subject, was born in West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., near the Greene county line, where his father owned a farm, upon which he had settled upon his arrival in this country, at an early day, from his native Ireland. Grandfather Fulton lived to the age of about sixty years.

Stephen Fulton, father of Samuel G., was born August 16, 1818, in West Bethlehem township. In his boyhood he attended the old-time primitive school, and being of a studious nature, and gifted with much perseverance, succeeded in securing a fair education. In 1847 he was married to Mary Greenlee, and subsequently moved to Greene county, Penn., where he still resides, a venerable and feeble old man. Stephen and Mary Fulton were blessed with eight children as follows: Naucy, Margaret, Ruth and Henry (all of whom are now deceased), and Emily, Samuel G., Eliza and Albert, at present residing in Greene county, Penn. The mother was called from this world October 28, 1888, when in her sixty-seventh year.

Samuel G. Fulton spent his boyhood in his native township, receiving a common-school education. On October 11, 1883, he married Catherine E., daughter of Abe Crumrine, and they have one child: Percy C., born January 12, 1888. In 1886 Mr. Fulton purchased a mill on Pike run, which he conducted for three years: but finding the business otherwise than conducive to his good health, he was compelled to return to farm work, and he ultimately located on the property where he now resides. Although a staunch Democrat, he is not a politician, but his numerous friends have shown their appreciation of his many sterling qualities by the tendering of nomination to offices of trust. Both he and his wife are members of Mt. Zion Baptist Church.

MORROW, WILLIAM and DAVID. The grandfather of these gentlemen, Thomas Morrow, was a farmer in County Down, Ireland, and during the middle of the eighteenth century emigrated with his large family to America, locating near Harrisburg, where they remained until the death of Mr. Morrow, when the family settled in the eastern part of Washington county, Pennsylvania.

Matthew Morrow, son of Thomas, located near Pigeon creek, and was there married to Elizabeth, daughter of Israel Wier. Soon after his marriage Mr. Morrow came to Canton township, and purchased the farm now occupied by Thomas Allison, where he spent the remainder of his life and reared the following family: Samuel, Thomas, John, James, William, David, Adam, Mary, Lavina, Catherine, Jane, Anna and Elizabeth. He was a hard-working, energetic man, and achieved success by earnest effort. He was a pronounced Whig in political views, and one of the earliest members of, and most earnest workers in, the Presbyterian Church at Buffalo. He served as a member of the poor commission of the county for many years, giving universal satisfaction. He passed away at the advanced age of eighty one years, and, with his faithful wife, who lived her three score years and five, now rests in the cemetery at Buffalo.

WILLIAM MORROW, like many of the pioneer children, secured his principal education in the school of toil, although he was allowed to attend the common school a few days in the winter, when nothing else would occupy his time. The old log schoolhouse, around which cluster so many pleasant reminiscences, was an extremely humble affair; and through the cracks of the puncheon floor the wind came in gusts, causing the little ones to crouch closer to the huge fireplace, which extended across one end of the room, and was supplied with logs cut by the older pupils. The text-books, in exquisite harmony with the other appointments of the room, were of the most primitive character, and the stalwart master, selected rather for his physical than mental powers, who was a firm believer in the maxim of Solomon: "Spare the rod and spoil the child," unlike many other theorists, practiced the principles which he preached; no pupil in his school could in after years complain that they were spoiled for the lack of vigorous application of the rod. But revenge was sweet, and many times these tortured victims of the birch barred out the dignified master, and compelled him to wait their pleasure or "stand treat." Amid such surroundings the youth of William Morrow was passed, and, in spite of toil and privation those early years were happy ones. The clothing of the family was the product of their own industry and skill, the cloth being woven, dyed and transformed into the necessary articles by the women. Mr. Morrow was married to Eliza, daughter of Samuel McClay, and their union was blessed with the following children: Sarah J. (wife of Thomas Allison), Robert M., Mary A., Margaret (wife of Jackson Lone) and Matthew. Mr. Morrow is a Republican in his political preferences, and in religion he is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

DAVID MORROW was born on the home place, and passed his boyhood in assisting his father on the farm, and in attending the common schools a few months during the winter. On January 14, 1840, he was united in marriage with Grizella, daughter of Robert Johnson, and this union was blessed with two children: Margaret (Mrs. Robert Murray) and Mary G. (Mrs. Hamilton Davis). In 1890 Mr. Morrow married, for his second wife, Isabella, daughter of James Work, of Hopewell township. Politically Mr. Morrow was always a worker in the Republican party, and for many years held the office of assessor in his township, giving universal satisfaction. He was a trustee of the Presbyterian Church, of which he was for many years a member. David Morrow passed away February 27, 1892, having been preceded by his wife on January 7, same year.

GEORGE WASHINGTON MILLER is one of the eminently successful agriculturists of West Bethlehem township, and deserves special mention in this work. His grandfather, Thomas Miller, was of Maryland birth, but early in his career removed, with his wife and family of four children, to West Bethlehem township, Washington county. Here he spent the remainder of his days. At an advanced age he was called from earth, and the community mourned the death of an honest, upright and esteemed citizen.

His son, John Miller, was born in 1818, in West Bethlehem township, where he is still known as an honored and beloved parent, an esteemed and respected neighbor. He married Elizabeth Sargent, and to them were born seven children, named as follows: Thomas, Joseph, Sarah, Emma, John, Anna and George Washington, of whom Sarah, John, Anna and George W. all reside in Washington county.

George Washington Miller, son of John and Elizabeth (Sargent) Miller, was born April 23, 1843, on the old homestead, where he grew to manhood, and is esteemed by all. The school-houses where he received his early education were primitive to an extreme; the seats being made of slabs hewn from logs, the boys used them as sleds during the noon intermission. On December 27, 1871, he married Amelia Eggy, a daughter of George Eggy, whose father, David, was one of the very first settlers in West Bethlehem township, and was of German nationality. To them have been born children as follows: Harrison, Melville, Gertrude, Stephen, Blanche and Risine, the latter of whom died in infancy, in 1887. The surviving children are all living at home. Mr. Miller is a staunch Republican, and his friends have shown their appreciation of his many sterling qualities by electing him to several offices of trust in his Democratic township.

JOHN S. BEAZELL, a leading merchant of California, is a son of William Bezell, who was born February 22, 1807, in Allegheny county, Penn., a son of Luke Bezell, whose mother was of Irish birth, his father a native of Germany. Luke Bezell was born in 1773, in Westmoreland county, Penn., and was married to Elizabeth English, a native of same county. Ten children were born to this union, of whom one son and three daughters are yet living, namely: William, Catherine (Mrs. Ails), Mary (Mrs. Smith) and Eliza (unmarried). Luke Bezell, who always followed farming, died in 1857.

William Bezell learned the shoemaker's trade, which he has followed in connection with farming. On May 6, 1830, he married Susan West, a native of Fallowfield township, this county, and they have had seven sons and three daughters, namely: Leander N. (deceased, who served three years in the army), Elmira, R. West, Luke P., Margaret E., Mary L., William H., John S., R. W. B. (deceased) and Samuel. Mr. Bezell owns ten acres of land located four and a half miles from Monongahela. He has filled almost every public office in Fallowfield township.

John S. Bezell was born March 6, 1850, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co. Penn., and there received his early education. About 1873 he moved to California, and there opened a butcher shop in company with his brother Luke P. They followed that business seventeen years, and then John S. purchased a stock of boots and shoes. He sold this out one year later, and bought a half interest in the general merchandise store in California, the firm being now known as Craven & Bezell. On July 25, 1879, John S. Bezell was united in marriage with Dora L., daughter of Jonathan West, who was a grandson of Jonathan West. The latter was born in Ireland, and coming to America when a young man, located permanently on a farm in Washington county, Penn. He was an Old-line Democrat in politics, and in religion one of the founders of the "West" Episcopal Church. His children were as follows: Jonathan, Robert, Thomas, Edward, Mary (wife of Robert Gregg), Ann (Mrs. Morris) and Janie (Mrs. Howden).

Thomas West, son of Jonathan, was born and reared in West Pike Run township, where his school days were passed. He was married to Margaret Hopkins who bore him three children, namely: Thomas, Catherine and Jonathan. The father followed agricultural pursuits, and lived but a few years after his marriage.

Jonathan West was born in February, 1827, in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and received his education in the neighboring schools. In 1852 he was united in marriage with Melinda, daughter of Edward Gregg; the latter was born and reared in Washington county, and was married to Mary Norton, their children being: Mary J. (wife of James Baker), Stephen, Melinda (wife of Jonathan West), Seth, Maria, John and Maple. Mr. Gregg was a prosperous farmer and stock raiser. He voted with the Whig and Republican parties; he was a member of the Taylor M. E. Church, in which he was elder, class leader, and Sunday school superintendent. He and his wife were buried in the Taylor Church cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. West resided on a farm in West Pike Run township until 1861, when they moved to Virginia. Here he enlisted in Company B, Eighty-second O. V. I., which was sent to the army of the Potomac, and he participated in numerous engagements. On July 2, 1863, he was captured at the battle of Gettysburg, and was first confined in Belle Isle, then in Andersonville prison, where he died the following June. His children were as follows: Mary E. (deceased), Margaret E. (wife of D. H. Lewis), Mary J. (married to Emerson Reed), Dora I. (wife of John S. Beazell), Myrtilla (married to Frank Craven) and Kate.

To the union of John S. and Dora I. (West) Beazell two children have been born, Pauline and Ivy. Mr. Beazell is a staunch supporter of the Republican party; he has served as burgess and as a member of the council, and is now associated with the school board. He is identified with the M. E. Church.

JOSEPH RICHARDS, a representative and honored agriculturist of West Bethlehem township, is a son of Joseph Richards, whose father, James, and early ancestry lived and died in Pennsylvania, east of the mountains.

Joseph Richards (father of subject) was born in Bridgeport, Penn., and early in life began business as a boatman on the Monongahela river. He married Mary, daughter of Joseph Horner, a native of Fayette county, Penn., and to them was born one child, Joseph. The father lost his life while plying his vocation as boatman on the river. He was stooping to get water, when he lost his balance, fell into the river, and before assistance arrived was drowned.

Joseph Richards, son of Joseph and Mary (Horner) Richards, was born in Bridgeport, Fayette Co., Penn., in June, 1829, and early in his boyhood he began the vocation at which he is still employed, that of farming. When about fifteen years of age he came to Washington county, at which time he possessed nothing in the world save a stout heart and a strong will. He began life here, working at whatever presented itself, and by saving his earnings, was, in 1852, enabled to buy a share in a threshing machine. Continuing to toil and save, he finally invested in fifty-five acres of land, adjoining the property he now owns, which latter comprises 340 acres of finely cultivated land, on which are a number of commodious buildings, all in good repair, and having an air of prosperity and thrift. In 1862 Mr. Richards married Maria, daughter of Peter Shidler, whose parents were of German descent, and among the early settlers of Washington county. To Mr. and Mrs. Richards have been born children as follows: Nora, Addi, Effa, Harry H. (attending Duff's Business College, Pittsburgh), Mary and Walter, all of whom are living at home. In political preferences Mr. Richards is a staunch Republican, and has been elected to the office of school director, which he has filled with credit to himself and the satisfaction of his constituents. He and his family are members of the Methodist Church. He is one of the typical self-made men of the county, his present prosperity being entirely due to thrift, proper ambition and sterling honesty, and he well merits the esteem and respect of all who know him.

JOHN C. MORROW. This gentleman was born April 25, 1864, in Hancock county, W. Va., and during his early life attended the common schools of the district. At the age of eighteen years he entered the normal school at Fairmount, where he remained two years, and he afterward began teaching, in which vocation he continued three years. He then came to Burgettstown, and entered the boot and shoe business, the firm carrying an extensive line of boots and shoes, and also hats and caps. On September 3, 1891, Mr. Morrow was united in marriage with Julia, daughter of M. R. Welch. Our subject is an active worker in the ranks of the Democratic party, has served as auditor of Burgettstown, and is now filling the offices of secretary and treasurer of the borough.

JOHN SARGEANT, an industrious and esteemed citizen of West Bethlehem township, is a grandson of John Sargeant, who came to the township at an early period, locating upon a farm of 162 acres which adjoins the one now owned by his grandson, John.

Grandfather Sargeant received but a meager education in the subscription schools, but, notwithstanding this disadvantage, he so improved every opportunity that he acquired a valuable store of general information. The children born to him were as follows: James, Thomas, Joseph, John, William, Valentine, Mrs. Margaret Spoon, Nancy, and Mrs. Sarah Barker. He remained upon the farm until his death, which occurred in 1853. He was an active worker in the Republican party, and a successful business man. Mrs. Sargeant was a member of the Dunkard Church.

James Sargeant, son of John the pioneer, was born in 1803, in the neighborhood of his son's present home in West Bethlehem township. His boyhood was spent upon the farm with his father, and though receiving but a limited education at the common schools, it served him as the foundation of an exceptionally successful career, for he became one of the intelligent, substantial business men of his time and in his community. He first began business for himself in 1825, when he bought a small farm near the river in West Bethlehem township. In 1830 he was married to Susan Crumrine, daughter of John Crumrine, of West Bethlehem township, and their children were: William, Thomas, Mrs. James Weaver, Hiram, John, James, Valentine, Sarah Lucinda, and Wilson. The father remained upon the farm twenty years, and then moved to the place now occupied by the subject of this sketch; he was an active Republican, but did not aspire to office. He and his wife were both active members of the Methodist Church. Mrs. Sargeant died in 1886; Mr. Sargeant, now aged ninety years, is still enjoying the fruits of an industrious life.

John Sargeant was born in 1842 in East Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., and lived at the paternal home until several years after his majority was attained. He received a common-school education which, coupled with industry and good judgment, enabled him to accumulate a comfortable property. He was united in marriage in 1875 with Elizabeth Hawkins, daughter of James C. Hawkins. He then bought and took possession of his father's farm of 155 acres, but the young wife only lived until July, 1877, when she died leaving him one child, Harrison, who is now at home. On October 24, 1878, Mr. Sargeant married Clementine, daughter of Jesse Register, of Greene county, Penn., and they have two children: Myrtle and Jessie. Politically, our subject is an active Republican, and he and his family are earnest and valued members of the M. E. Church.

ENOCH KEYS. There is no better known, more prominent or more highly respected family in East Bethlehem township than the one of whom we now write.

Jacob Keys was born and reared in Germany, and there married, his children being Mary (Mrs. William Horner), Elizabeth (Mrs. Thomas), Enoch, Andrew, Adam and Sarah (all now deceased); Andrew and Adam were wheelwrights in Pittsburgh, Penn.

Enoch Keys was born in February, 1785, in Germany, and when four years of age crossed the Atlantic with his parents, who immediately on landing proceeded westward to Washington county, Penn., and, buying a tract of land in East

Bethlehem township, made a settlement there. Here Enoch was reared to manhood amid pioneer scenes, his education being such as could be gleaned from the primitive schools of the vicinity. He married Rachel, daughter of James Perry, and children as follows were born to them: Luther, Parker, Enoch, Jr., Elizabeth, Dorcas, Hannah, Cynthia and Rachel, of whom are now living; Mrs. Elizabeth Teagarden, at Clarksville, Greene Co., Penn., and Dorcas, Hannah and Rachel, in East Bethlehem township. Otto Keys was adopted by Miss Hannah Keys, and was married to Julia Florence Horton, by whom there is one child—Estella Horton Keys, born December 19, 1891. The Misses Dorcas, Hannah and Rachel Keys are ladies uniformly respected for their many Christian virtues; they are devout members of the Baptist Church.

Enoch Keys, their father, was an undertaker, as was his father before him. He died March 11, 1824, in politics a staunch Republican, and in religion a consistent Baptist. The family farm consists of eighty acres of the choicest land to be found in the county, and is cultivated by Otto Keys, who is a rising and popular young agriculturist of considerable intelligence. The name Keys is regarded, wherever known, as the synonym for virtue, probity and unswerving integrity, and is held in the highest esteem.

ABRAMHAM CRUMRINE, a prominent farmer of West Bethlehem township, is a grandson of Abraham Crumrine, who was born of German parentage, in Baltimore county, Md., where he lived to a green old age.

John Crumrine, father of subject, was born in 1785, in Baltimore county, Md., and there grew to manhood. He attended the German schools until grown, and then began his English education in the subscription school, which was held in the parsonage. When the weather was such that he could not work, he attended school but with all these obstacles in his path, he obtained a good education for that period. He married Barbara, daughter of John Ferman, and for a time lived in Baltimore county, Md., where Mary, Betsey (deceased), Susan, and Margaret (deceased), were born to them. In 1812 he removed to Washington county, Penn., and settled on Daniels run, in West Bethlehem township, part of which farm now belongs to Mrs. Julia Theakston, a sister of our subject. Here were born to him the following children: Sarah, Barbara (deceased), Julia Ann, Lucinda, Judia (deceased), Maria, George (deceased), John (deceased), William, David (deceased) and Abraham. All grew to an adult age, and the survivors all live in Washington county, with the exception of Maria, who married Demas

Drake, and resides in Iowa. The father of this family was one of the rare, self-made men. Beginning life with practically nothing, he not only cared for and educated his large family, but accumulated no little of this world's goods. At the time of his death, which occurred in 1857, he was the owner of about three hundred and forty acres of land, all in a good state of cultivation.

Abraham Crumrine was born April 6, 1826, upon the old farm in West Bethlehem township, this county, a part of which he still owns. His education was gleaned from the meager teachings of the country schools. His boyhood, when he was not at school, was passed upon the farm, where he learned valuable lessons of thrift, to which much of his success in life is doubtless due. In 1857 he married Mahalia, daughter of George Zollar, for whom the hamlet of Zollarsville is named, he being one of the earliest settlers of that part of the county. After his marriage he built the elegant dwelling in which he now resides, and has made many other improvements. His children are Catherine, wife of Samuel Fulton, of West Bethlehem township; Sanford, a young man of superior intelligence, and a competent instructor in one of the schools of West Bethlehem township; and Ferman, his father's chief assistant on the farm. Mr. Crumrine is a leading Democrat, and one of the trusted counselors of his party; also a member of the Lutheran Church, with which he is prominently identified.

T C. NOBLE. The paternal ancestors of Thaddeus C. Noble were natives of Scotland, and resided at North Woodside, near the city of Glasgow, where they were comfortably situated. They were devout members of the Covenanters Church. The paternal grandfather, William Noble, was a soldier in the war of the Revolution, and took part in the battle of Brandywine. His wife was Miss Elizabeth Howe, a native of Lancaster county, where he located and lived on a farm. He died comparatively young in life, leaving two sons, the youngest of whom, James Noble, was the father of the subject of this sketch. After the death of the husband, the widow and her sons resided for a short time at York, Penn., and then removed to a farm in Buffalo township, Washington county, where she continued to reside the most of her life. She died in Canonsburg, Penn., in the year 1851, in the membership of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church.

The maternal ancestors of our subject were natives of Ireland, and lived for the most part in County Tyrone. Most of the family resided in the town of Dennaughy, about thirty miles distant from Belfast; and in the latter place others of the family resided, and were generally engaged in mercantile pursuits. Robert Boyd, the maternal grandfather, was a man of business enterprise and influence. His wife was Margaret Latimer. The Boyds were members of an old established Presbyterian Church, of Stewartstown, with which the family had been for many years identified, and in which one of their kindred had been pastor, and others elders. Meeting with reverses in their native country, they decided to join the tide of emigration then coming westward, and accordingly embarked from Londonderry in June of 1801, in a sailing vessel, Capt. Blunt, commander; and after a voyage of seven weeks and three days they arrived at New Castle, Del., where they remained for a short time, and then permanently took up their residence in what is now Canton township, Washington county.

Jane Boyd, daughter of Robert and Margaret Latimer Boyd, was the mother of the subject of this sketch. She was born in Dennaughy, County Tyrone, Ireland, in the year 1793. Mrs. Dr. McCook, of Pittsburgh, and Mrs. Daniel McCook, of Steubenville, Ohio, whose family gained distinction in the Mexican and late Civil wars, were her full consins. She was married to James Noble, March 25, 1817, and resided for two years thereafter on a farm in Amwell township, attending the Presbyterian Church at Lower Ten-Mile under the pastorate of the Rev. Dr. Dodd; and afterward, about the year 1820, they removed to Claysville, where they continued to reside the remainder of their lives. James Noble, her husband, was born August 4, 1795, in that part of Lancaster county, Penn., which now comprises a part of Cumberland county, and died April 12, 1872. Mrs. Noble died October 16, 1872. Upon their removal to Claysville they united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, it being the only organized church there at that time, of which they continued members for upward of fifty years.

T. C. Noble, the subject proper of this memoir, was well and favorably known throughout the county, and his name suggests a prominent example of an active and useful life, covering a period of more than forty years. He was born in Amwell township, December 29, 1818, and was the eldest of eleven children, the most of whom are now deceased. He was, physically, very strong and active, and of a placid and amiable disposition. He was the possessor of splendid mental qualities, and early manifested a taste for learning, taking particular delight in mathematics, drawing and in reading biography, and his hand-writing was excellent. It had been both the desire and design of the father to afford his son the advantages of a liberal education, but upon the arrival of the proper time for entering upon such a course, the father's circumstances were such as to render the undertaking impracticable. He worked for eighteen months at cabinet making, and then commenced teaching school. He taught the Brown and McMillan District Schools near his home for several terms, and then taught a private school in Claysville, and in the year 1839 he went to Winchester, Scott Co., Ill., where he taught with success for a period of two years, when he returned to his home and accepted a clerkship in the store of George A. Cracraft, and subsequently filled a similar position in a store owned by his father and James Paden. While thus engaged he employed his leisure in studying higher mathematics and surveying under the direction of E. G. Cracraft, who had been a cadet at West Point. In the year 1846 he was appointed Deputy Surveyor in Washington county by Governor Francis R. Shunk, for a term of three years, and at the expiration of the term, was re-appointed for a like term of three years. The office then becoming elective, he was nominated by his party and elected for another term. In 1857, under appointment authorized by an Act of the Legislature, Mr. Noble transcribed from the official records at Harrisburg, for the use of the county, all the drafts of original surveys not found in the record books. The surveys thus transcribed numbered twelve hundred, filling two large volumes. A Harrisburg paper spoke of this work thus: "This work has been done with an accuracy of detail and skillful beauty that does great credit to Mr. Noble, and they are said by the Surveyor-General to be the best executed drafts of survey ever made in the State, and will ever be preserved as an attestation of his competency as a public servant." He surveyed during his life upward of two thousand farms in Washington county and West Virginia, besides running many disputed lines and serving under appointment of the Court as a road or bridge viewer, and in dividing townships for nearly every term of court for thirty-three years. He possessed peculiar ability as an arbiter in the settlement of all manner of disputes, thus avoiding to those concerned much useless and expensive litigation. In the year 1855 he was defeated for the office of Prothonotary by a very few votes, while the opposing party was largely in the majority. On this occasion Mr. Noble received almost the unanimous vote of his home township, Donegal. In the year 1879 he accepted the chairmanship of the Democratic County Vigilance Committee, and notwithstanding his party was greatly in the minority, he effected such a complete organization in the county as to elect the candidate for Sheriff, the only office of importance to be filled that year. He was twice commissioned a Justice of the Peace—in the years 1874 and 1879. His standing in his party was such that he was at five different times nominated for offices by his party without any solicitation on his part, and had been urged at other times to become a candidate for the Legislature, but always declined. He always attended primary elections, and was an intense believer in the personal fitness of candidates; that they should be both capable and conscientious.

Mr. Noble opened a general store in Claysville in the year 1849, in which business he continued without interruption for a period of twenty-five years, commanding a large patronage, and in which he was quite successful. He had had at different times as partners, L. C. Truesdell, a brother-in-law, Chester B. Abercrombie, and M. L. Stillwagen. For thirty-five years he had been engaged extensively in many kinds of business in the purchase and sale of lands for himself and others, in buying of wool to the extent of from thirty thousand to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars each year; having been the agent for the Harris Woolen Company, Woonsocket, Rhode Island, at different times, for upward of thirty years, and having bought for them continuously for twelve years previous to his death, enjoying the confidence and esteem of the company to an unusual degree. He had also bought at different times for many firms at Boston, New York, Brooklyn and other places. He had done much to foster the growth of the wool-growing industry in Washington county. His high standing and extensive acquaintance enabled him to perform an important work in the matter of inducing a goodly number of manufacturers to come into the county from time to time as purchasers of our wools, thus giving an impetus to the industry which did much in the way of creating a spirit of competition, having a tendency to maintain both reputation and prices. He was the first to introduce to any considerable extent the first improved light-running harvesting machines in his own as well as some of the neighboring counties. He dealt extensively in hay and grain for the use of the Government during the late war. Besides his private business he had often filled many positions of trust, such as executor, administrator, guardian, etc. And although so long engaged in many kinds of business involving multiplied and varied transaction, he had never been a party to a suit in court.

He was for sixteen years a school director, and was an ardent advocate of advanced education. In the year 1854, Mr. Noble realized the fulfillment of an early conceived purpose to become the owner of a tract of land lying immediately west of Claysville, which he so well improved as to make it one of the many desirable Washington county farms, upon which he resided for twenty years previous to his death. The improvement and beautification of the New Cemetery at Claysville was a matter to him of much concern, he having surveyed and superintended the work of laying it out, and was president of the Board of Directors from its opening up to the time of his death. He was for a good many years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but afterward united with the Presbyterian Church during the pastorate of the Rev. Alexander McCarrell, D. D. He was, for ten years, superintendent of the M. E. Sabbath-school, and, for six years previous to his death, superintendent of the Presbyterian Sabbath-school. He took a deep interest in all Sabbath school work, and possessed singular ability in the way of creating an interest in the matter of regular and prompt attendance, as well as in infusing a spirit of emulation into the routine exercises. He was foremost in every movement and enterprise which had for its object the advancement of the interests of his town and county; was active and efficient in every agency which had for its object the advancement of religion, morals and education. His deep sense of integrity and regard for truth was the basis of that confidence so universally reposed in him. He was public spirited, ever considerate for the welfare of others and liberal in his giving. He enjoyed the pleasures of his home and comforts of his family. In the hallowed circle of his home he was the central object of uncommon reverence and affection.

In the year 1849 he was married to Miss Sarah M. Truesdell, whose parents had come to Washington county from Bristol, Conn. They had ten children, three of whom are deceased: Thomas J., Charlotte J., and Elizabeth M. Of those surviving, his daughters—Frances M., Harriet W. and Eleanor I.—are graduates of Steubenville (Ohio) Ladies Seminary. Of his sons, J. T. and T. C. are graduates of Washington and Jefferson College. J. H. obtained his education in the schools of Claysville, Trinity Hall, Washington, Penn., and Duff's College, Pittsburgh. Katherine M., on account of physical infirmities, has been unable to attend school. Mr. Noble died at his home near Claysville, November 29, 1882, the Rev. James L. Loeper, then pastor of the Presbyterian Church at that place, Rev. William H. Lester, D. D., of West Alexander, Penn., and the Rev. Henry Woods, D. D., of Washington and Jefferson College officiated at his funeral.

T. Clark Noble, son of T. C. and Sarah M. (Truesdell) Noble, was born on a farm near Claysville, Penn. His elementary education was obtained chiefly in the schools of his native town, but partly under the direction of his father, with whom he studied surveying. In 1879 he and his brother, James H. Noble, entered Trinity Hall, a school for boys established by Mr. W. W. Smith at Washington, Penn., which was at the time under the rectorship of the Rev. Samuel Earp, Ph. D., where he prepared himself for college. In 1881 he entered the freshman class of Washington and Jefferson College, where he graduated with the highest honors in the class of 1885. The year following his graduation he was an instructor at Trinity Hall, which was at the time under the rectorship of the Rev. Thomas Pitts, Ph. D. In 1887 he was elected adjunct professor of mathematics in Washington and Jefferson College, in which position he continued for two years, at the expiration of which time he commenced the study of law under the direction of James I. Brownson, Jr., and was admitted to the Washington county bar in the October term, 1891; and in the December following was admitted to practice in the several Courts of Allegheny county, at Pittsburgh, Penn., where he opened an office at No. 413 Grant street. Mr. Noble makes most careful preparation in all matters relating to his profession, and all his work is characterized by thoroughness and accuracy.

While pursuing his law studies he occasionally did land surveying as well as some road and bridge engineering under appointment of court. He is a gentleman whose scholarship is of a high standard. Mr. Noble enjoys the confidence and esteem of all who know him. He makes his home in Allegheny City, where he attends the Central Presbyterian Church.

WH. WINFIELD. This gentleman represents an English family who have acquired an enviable reputation as skilled musicians, of which art he is also a devotee. William Winfield (the grandfather) was a native of England, being born at Woodville, in Leicestershire. He was a potter by trade, and spent the earlier part of his life in Stafford, a city largely engaged in the manufacture of white ware. He was married May 29, 1830, to Mary Harvey, at Ashby De La Zouch, and emigrated to America in 1842. They had children as follows: Thomas, Rosanna, William, Levi, Jonah, Albert, Harvey and Sarah. After the birth of their fifth child, Jonah, Mr. and Mrs. Winfield sailed with their family to America, where their three youngest children were born. They first landed in New York, thence proceeded to Zanesville, Ohio, thence to East Liverpool, afterward moving to Pittsburgh, Penn., where they remained several years, and finally settled in the village of Granville, Washington Co., Penn. Mr. Winfield was an expert performer on various musical instruments, excelled also in vocal music, and he organized an instrumental band at California, Penn., known as "Winfield's California Brass Band." In religious connection he was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and in political opinion he was a Democrat. He died June 1, 1866.

Thomas Winfield, son of William and Mary (Harvey) Winfield, was born in England and emigrated with his parents to America. He learned and followed the pottery trade with his father at Granville, where his father built a pottery as soon as he settled there. He was first married to Martha Imlay, who died leaving two children, W. H., and John (deceased). For his second wife Thomas Winfield was married to Margaret Pester, who has borne him six children, two only of which (Mary and Annie) are living. In 1862 the family moved to Canada, where he is now engaged in the grocery business. While a resident of this country he affiliated with the Democratic party in politics; in religion he was a Cumberland Presbyterian while in the United States, but united with the Methodist Church since moving to Canada.

W. H. Winfield, son of Thomas and Martha (Imlay) Winfield, was born December 12, 1854, in Granville, Washington Co., Penn., and received his early education in the common schools and at the Southwestern State Normal School at California, Penn. He then attended Eastman National Business College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., graduating in 1883, paying his own expenses by teaching music. In 1884 he opened his present drug store in California, in which he has met with well-merited success. Since 1884 Mr. Winfield has managed the finances of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Coal Centre, Penn., with which he is identified, and was one of the building committee that attended to the erection of their present house of worship; he has also been trustee and treasurer of the church, and has been director of the choir for fifteen years. In political opinion he is a Democrat, was elected to the position of township clerk, and is now serving as a member of the school board and secretary of the same. On August 19, 1889, Mr. Winfield was married to Donnetta Newkirk, daughter of Henry and Olive J. (Richardson) Newkirk, of Bentleyville, Washington Co., Penn. Miss Newkirk graduated at the Southwestern State Normal School at California, Penn., in 1877. Besides being a teacher of marked ability, Mrs. Winfield is also a musician, and is a lady of many other accomplishments, and of excellent family. Since his marriage Mr. Winfield has resided at corner of Third and Union streets, California, Penn., where his drug store is also located.

SOLOMON WEAVER comes of German ancestry, the earliest of whom to immigrate to this country was Adam Weaver, who, with his son John, located in Washington county, Penn. Here the latter purchased 400 acres of land one mile north of Fredericktown on Fish Pot run, in East Bethlehem township.

John Weaver received a somewhat limited education, but by close observation of men and things, and attentive reading, gained a large amount of general information, becoming a very intelligent citizen. In 1788 he was married to Catherine, daughter of Martin Spoons, and the following children were born to them: Adam (deceased in 1860); Sarah, who married C. Michener, of Seneca county, Ohio, and is now ninety years of age; Jacob; Martin, a farmer of Seneca county, Ohio; Daniel; Mrs. Elizabeth Ault, who resided at Orville, Wayne Co., Ohio; Mrs. Catherine Huffman; Mrs. Mary Smith; John; Joseph, deceased in 1890, and Margaret. Of this family are yet living Sarah, Martin and Margaret. The parents died on the home farm in East Bethlehem township.

Adam Weaver, son of John and Catherine Weaver, was born in 1807 on the home place in East Bethlehem township, Washington county, where he passed an uneventful boyhood. He was married to Elizabeth Swartz, a member of a German family, and the young couple began life in a pioneer log cabin, surrounded by heavy forests, and there endured the usual privations of frontier life. As years passed by their industry was rewarded, the wild rough cabin home gave place to a more commodious dwelling, and golden grain waved in the breeze where the stately monarchs of the forest had but lately reared their lofty heads. Children came to bless their home as follows: John, Daniel, Elizabeth, Jacob, Solomon, Sarah and Adam. The father was called to his eternal rest January 17, 1867, having been preceded by Mrs. Weaver January 26, 1838. They were members of the Methodist Church.

Solomon Weaver, son of Adam and Elizabeth Weaver, was born January 3, 1823, on the old homestead where he is yet living in East Bethlehem township. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, but was an extremely delicate youth, weighing at the age of twenty years but eighty pounds, being now, however, a large man. His education was secured after he had attained a mature age, and he has well improved each opportunity. Mr. Weaver has always been an agriculturist, and, having never married, his maiden sister Sarah, who was born December 29, 1825, keeps house for him.

LEWIS GREENLEE, a farmer and harness maker of West Pike Run township, was born July 27, 1814, in West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn. He is a son of Samuel Greenlee, who was born in 1777, in Delaware, and when but a small boy came with his parents to a farm in Fayette county, Penn. Samuel Greenlee passed his youth in Fayette county, and there learned the shoemaker's trade, which he followed in connection with farming. When a young man he was married to Nancy Gance, who was born in 1779, in Fayette county, Penn. Mr. and Mrs. Greenlee were the parents of thirteen children, namely: John (a farmer of Greene county, Penn.), James (also an agriculturist of Greene county), Benjamin (living on the old homestead in West Bethlehem township, Washington county), Daniel (a farmer of West Bethlehem township), Anna (widow of Lemuel Cooper, of Licking county, Ohio), Lewis (subject), Elizabeth, Susan, Mary, Margaret, Jacob, George and Albert. Of this family the seven last named are deceased. About 1812 Mr. Greenlee came with his family from Fayette county, and located permanently on the place in West Bethlehem township, Washington county. He began life as a poor boy, but by constant industry succeeded in accumulating a good property. He was an eager reader of current literature. He took an active part in public matters, and in politics voted with the Democratic party. He and his wife were members of the Disciple Church.

Lewis Greenlee remained on the home place until about sixteen years of age, then served an apprenticeship of five years with Peter Flick, of Bentleyville, Washington Co., Penn., at the harness and saddle-maker's trade, and after learning his trade traveled from place to place for about five years. In 1843 he was married to Ann Eliza Kerr, who was born in 1820, in Taylorstown, Washington Co., Penn., a daughter of James Kerr, a member of a pioneer family of this county. James Kerr learned and followed the blacksmith's trade at Taylorstown, Penn., for many years, finally moving to Greene county, where he and his wife died. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Kerr were born as follows: Mary, widow of Alfred Gregg, living in Greene county, Penn.; Ann Eliza, wife of Lewis Greenlee; Archibald, a farmer of Greene county; Margaret, Rachel, Sarah, Emily and Isabelle, of whom the three first mentioned are yet living.

To the union of Lewis and Ann Eliza (Kerr) Greenlee three children have been born, namely: Virtue, widow of John Jenkins, of West Pike Run township; Mary W., widow of Morris Taylor, living in Ohio, and James, a miller of West Pike Run township. After his marriage Mr. Greenlee settled in Carmichael's, Greene county, and successfully followed the harness and saddlery business for about fourteen years. He then moved to Centreville, Washington county, continuing in business there until 1869, when he bought the forty-acre farm whereon he now resides, and has since devoted some time to agricultural pursuits. He votes the Republican ticket, has served five years as justice of the peace in West Pike Run township and has also filled the position of auditor. He and his wife are members of the M. E. Church at Beallsville, Penn., in which he has been class-leader for thirty years.

CEPHAS GARRETT, one of the most prominent citizens of West Bethlehem township, than whom none deserves more prominence, as an agriculturist, in the pages of this volume, is a native of the township, born July 14, 1842, near the farm whereon he now resides. He is a son of Samuel and Deliah (Grable) Garrett, and a great-grandson of Peter Garrett, whose son Nicholas was born in Maryland in 1779. Here the latter was married to Mary Ann Baumgardner, and thence, about the beginning of the present century, they removed to Washington county, Pennsylvania.

Cephas Garrett passed his boyhood days in attending school and assisting his parents upon the farm. He was employed for about eighteen months at carpentering; but, his elder brothers leaving the farm, he was obliged to return to agriculture, and never completed learning the trade. During the early part of the Civil war Mr. Garrett enlisted in the service of the United States, but was not allowed to serve, as he had not yet attained his majority. On May 24, 1866, he married Lyda Horn, daughter of John Horn (deceased), of West Bethlehem township, and to them have come the following named children: Alice, born March 25, 1871, and Samuel, born May 1, 1879, both residing with their parents. When Mr. Garrett and his industrious wife began life they possessed nothing worthy of mention, but their united efforts were crowned with success, which is now apparent in their well-kept farm, consisting of sixty acres of highly-cultivated land, upon which, in 1883, he erected a neat and handsome dwelling, besides making many other improvements. Mr. Garrett is modest and retiring, not at all disposed to thrust himself forward, and possesses the respect, esteem and admiration of all who know him. His honesty and integrity have won a high place for him in the community. In politics he is a Democrat, and, though not an office-seeker, is one of the counselors of his party. Both he and Mrs. Garrett are members of the Lutheran Church.

JESSE NICHOLLS, one of the self-made and prosperous agriculturists of West Bethlehem township, is a grandson of Rosmos Nicholls, who came from England at an early date. He settled in Hillsborough, this county, where he had a tavern for a number of years before the National pike was built. He afterward bought the "Nicholls' place," a small farm south of Hillsborough, and after remaining there a time again took charge of a tavern in Hillsborough, in a building that is still used as a hotel. In a short time, however, he again returned to the farm, where he remained the rest of his life. He was married to Mary Hall, of West Bethlehem township, and their union was blessed with the following children: James, Stephen, William, Rose, Achison, Mrs. Sarah Kehor, Mrs. Margaret Sargeant and Mrs. Betsey Trago, of whom Achison is the only one now living. Mr. Nicholls was a Democrat, and both he and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Nicholls died in 1840, and Mr. Nicholls in 1850.

Stephen Nicholls was born on the old homestead in 1795, and obtained his early education in the common schools. He remained upon the home farm until he was forty years of age, driving teams across the mountains and attending to the usual duties of the farm. In 1835 he married Margaret, daughter of Jacob and Mary Wise, of West Bethlehem township, and they had nine children: Jesse, Mrs. Mary Gregg, Mrs. Nancy Wilkins (deceased), Sarah Jane (deceased), William (deceased), Joshua (deceased), Maggie (deceased), Mrs. Catherine Biens and Hiram. Mr. Nicholls was a true Democrat, although not an active politician. He died in 1881, in his eighty-fourth year; his widow, aged seventy-six years, is still living.

Jesse Nicholls was born December 8, 1836, upon the home farm. He received a partial education at the common schools, and at the age of fifteen years he began life for himself, working by the month. He was married February 4, 1858, to Margaret Taylor, and they had children as follows: Mrs. Sarah McCarthy (deceased), Lucy, Mrs. Emma Kinder (deceased), Laura, Samuel, Joseph, Ray, John and Maggie. Although his early opportunities were few, Mr. Nicholls is an intelligent, well-read man, and beginning life with no capital save strong hands, a quick brain and a healthy body, he has, by dint of honest principles, hard work and economy, succeeded, with the aid and encouragement of his wife, in securing a fine farm of 140 acres and a competence for his family. He is a Democrat, and has served several terms as supervisor of his township, but has been too busily engaged in his private business to give much attention to political questions. Mrs. Nicholls was a member of the M. E. Church. She passed away May 28, 1891, deeply mourned by her many friends and relatives.

PLANTS, CHRISTIAN and GEORGE, are representatives of one of the oldest and most prominent families of East Finley township. The earliest pioneer of that name, of whom any authentic account can be secured, was Christian Plants, from whom the present generation of the family trace their ancestry.

Christian Plants, who was of German descent, grew to manhood in eastern Pennsylvania, where he married Catherine Haines, and in 1796 they moved to Washington county, Penn., locating at the foot of "Gallows Hill," near Washington. In 1806 he settled in Finley (now East Finley) township, on what is now called "Enlow fork of Wheeling creek," and on the farm afterward owned by his son Leonard. The children born to Christian and Catherine (Haines) Plants were Leonard, Solomon, George, Christian, Catherine, Maxwell, Elizabeth, Hannah, Jacob, Mary, Daniel, John and an unnamed infant. Of these children the only one now living is Maxwell (a retired farmer residing near Cameron, W. Va.). Mr. Plants farmed during the summer, and taught school in the winter months. He lived to a good old age.

Leonard Plants was born March 22, 1797, on his father's farm near Washington, this county. In 1806 he came with his parents to East Finley township, and passed his boyhood on the farm, enduring all the privations and hardships which are inseparable from the lives of pioneers. In 1815 he was indentured with Jesse St. Clair to learn the stone mason's trade, and after serving an apprenticeship of three years began to work for wages on the National pike, then building, and continued to follow his trade till 1880. On May 6, 1819, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Barney, who died in 1826, leaving four children: Elizabeth, now residing in Wetzel county, W. Va., wife of Stephen Hill; Christian; George, and one that died in infancy.

Mr. Plants afterward married Fannie Barney (a sister of his first wife), and she died in January, 1874, leaving the following children: Jesse and Leonard, farmers in East Finley township, this county; Mary Jane (widow of Andrew Stoller), also a resident of East Finley township; Hannah (wife of Daniel Plants), residing in Morris township, Washington county; John B. (a farmer and mason), residing in East Finley township; Margaret (wife of Nathan Stoller), also in East Finley township; Martha (Mrs. John Nickerson), in east Finley township; Daniel, in Kansas, and Catherine, Fanny, Nancy, Adolphus H. and Christina (all five deceased). On July 23, 1874, Mr. Plants was married to Nancy L. Miller, and to this union one daughter, Catherine L., was born. Mr. Plants began life one of the "poorest boys imaginable," but his physical and mental strength, combined with energy and business tact, surmounted all obstacles to success, and gave him a considerable property, much of it being in lands, which he superintended and improved during his later years. Politically he was first a Jacksonian Democrat, then a strong Abolitionist, and finally a Republican. In 1840 he united with the U. P. Church, to which he always contributed liberally. His widow and daughter are living on the old home.

CHRISTIAN PLANTS was born April 22, 1822, in East Finley township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his boyhood on the farm, receiving but little school education, as his parents were poor and required his assistance on the farm. He remained at home with them until twenty-three years of age, when he learned the gunsmith's trade, having a natural inclination for mechanical work; he also did cropping on his father's farm. On November 26, 1846, he was united in marriage with Rosanna Marshall, born July 19, 1821, a daughter of John and Nancy (McWherter) Marshall, of East Finley township, and she bore him three children: Leonard Martin (who died at the age of eight years) and twins, born August 7, 1861, one of whom died unnamed; the other, Robert Blachly, is a prosperous young farmer of East Finley township, residing on his father's farm; he is married to Lizzie A. Sprowls, daughter of John and Hannah (Reed) Sprowls.

After marriage Mr. Plants successfully followed the trades of watchmaker, gunsmith and stone mason, although he never served an apprenticeship at any of them, but made a practical application of his general knowledge. He has always owned some land, and has farmed on a limited scale. He is at present actively engaged in general merchandising, which he has followed several years. Mrs. Plants united with the U. B. Church in early life, and died in that faith January 24, 1886. Mr. Plants is also a member of the U. B. Church at Fairmount, and contributes liberally to its support. He has given valuable aid toward the development of Washington county, assisting to place her in her present position, among the foremost counties of the Keystone State. In politics he has always been a Democrat.

GEORGE PLANTS was born July 13, 1824, in East Finley township, this county, and received a limited education in the common schools, which he has made the nucleus to a valuable store of general knowledge. At the age of eighteen he began to learn the mason's trade with Powers Bros., of Claysville, and served an apprenticeship of three years with them, receiving the very modest compensation of $12 a year. At the age of twenty-one he began life for himself, $8 in debt, but he had learned the trade, and industry soon brought success. On June 1, 1848, he was united in marriage with Mary (Gones) Seeman, of East Finley township, and the following children have come to them: Franklin (deceased April 10, 1850), Ethelinda B. (deceased), McFarlin, Mary, Elizabeth, Clarissa (deceased), Leonard (deceased), William S., an infant son (deceased), Joseph L., Nathan C., Nancy and an infant daughter. Since his marriage Mr. Plants has farmed and followed his trade. He is a man of exemplary habits, and has acquired a comfortable competency. In politics he has always been a Republican. He and his wife are members of the U. B. Church, and he was for twelve years a trustee of the church at Fairmount.

L EVI DAGUE. Among the many prominent and honored old residents of West Bethlehem township, none stands higher in the estimation of his neighbors than the above-named gentleman.

He is the only living son of John Dague, a native of Maryland, born in 1788, who, when a boy, along with his brother, was brought across the mountains placed in pack-saddles, which were thrown upon the back of a mule. His father settled in West Bethlehem township, where John grew to manhood, and married Catherine Horn, who was born in Germany, and became one of the first settlers of Washington county. To them were born the following children: Jacob, John, Samuel, Henry, Levi, Dewalt, George, Catherine, Elizabeth, Annie and Lavina, all of whom are now dead except Levi and Annie.

Levi Dague, the subject proper of this sketch, was born in West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., May 27, 1815. His boyhood was spent in assisting in the work of the farm and attending school in the old log schoolhouse, of which he has a very distinct recollection, and describes minutely. After attending the German school two years, he married Rachel, daughter of Abraham Mowl, who, about the beginning of the present century, emigrated from Germany to America, settling in Washington county. Mr. and Mrs. Dague have the following children: Abraham, John Adams, Adelina, Solomon, Eliza Jane, Emory and Clark, and of these all except Abraham reside in Washington county. Mr. Dague has always voted the Republican ticket, and has held many offices of trust. Both he and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church, and command the respect of all.

J OHN ELWOOD CRUMRINE is one of West Bethlehem's most prominent farmers. His grandfather, John Crumrine, emigrated from Germany about the beginning of the present century, to Washington county, Penn., and here married. They reared the following children: John, William, David, George, Abraham, Lucinda, Sally, Polly, Susan and Maria, of whom George, David and Polly are deceased, the remaining children being all residents of this county.

George Crumrine was born in 1814, on his father's farm, situated on Daniel's run, in Bethlehem township. He learned the carpenter's trade, and was considered one of the most skillful workmen of his time. In 1861 he built the present house of his son John, with no assistance but that of his boys, and to-day it stands a silent but eloquent witness of his skill. He received his education at the subscription school, a small log cabin with slab seats and desks and other primitive furniture. In 184- he married Miss Mahala Barnett, daughter of James Barnett, of Washington county, and she bore him the following children, all of whom are living: James Le Roy, Eveline, Lucy, Dora, Julia, Della and John Elwood.

John Elwood Crumrine was born April 4, 1858, and on February 2, 1882, he was married to Emma, daughter of John Myers, of West Bethlehem township. Their union has been blessed with the following children: Warren, Leslie, Ethel and Grayson, all living. Mr. Crumrine is a young man of more than ordinary intelligence, and possesses the esteem and cordial friendship of all who know him. Politically his views are Democratic, and he is one of the leading men in his party, while Mrs. Crumrine is as famous for her gracious hospitality, as is the name of her husband, in his circle of business acquaintances, a synonym for enterprise and honor.

WILLIAM P. IRWIN. This gentleman, one of Carroll township's most respectable and reliable citizens, claims descent from honorable Irish ancestry, one William Irwin having emigrated from Ireland to America many years ago, settling on a large tract of land in Chester county, Penn. He was a pioneer agriculturist, and passed the remainder of his life on the farm where his children were born.

James Irwin was born in Chester county, Penn., and in 1827 came to Washington county. He was dependent upon his own exertions for a livelihood, and learned the cooper's trade; then began farming in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn. He married Jane Morton, a resident of Chester county, Penn., and daughter of James Morton. Mr. and Mrs. Irwin were the parents of four children, all of whom are now deceased. They were members of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics he affiliated with the Democratic party.

William P. Irwin, whose name introduces this biography, was born October 12, 1815, in Chester county, Penn. His father owned forty acres of land in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn., which William P. bought, also purchasing a lot in Monongahela City, where he erected a house. In 1850 our subject married Eliza Jane, daughter of Benjamin Dickey, a resident of Fallowfield township. After purchasing his father's farm of forty acres, Mr. Irwin continued to save his earnings, and finally bought an adjoining tract of seventy acres, upon which a handsome house and other buildings have been erected. He has been engaged in general farming and stock raising. Politically he votes with the Democratic party, and in religion he is a member of the Episcopal Church. He has had four children, namely: Mary Jane and Margaret (both deceased), Benjamin D., who manages the farm, and William Porter, also living at home.

WILLIAM FORGIE is a Canadian by birth, a Scotchman by descent. His grandfather, Francis Forgie, a son of Scotia, probably of the Highlands, as he spoke the Gaelic dialect, was a soldier in the British army, and on his retirement from the service joined the Irish constabulary. He married a Miss McClelland, and they both died in Ireland, the parents of five sons, named respectively: Samuel, William, Thomas, Francis and James, of whom the four youngest immigrated, in 1824, to Canada, making a settlement on the Bay of Quinté, in Hastings county, upper Canada (now Ontario). From Montreal to their new home they poled up the St. Lawrence what was known as a "Durham scow." The nearest mill to their place of settlement was at Kingston, some sixty miles east, and thither they had to take their wheat in sacks slung over the back of an ox, they walking alongside, and as there were at that time no roads they had to be guided by the sun to their destination. Of these stalwart young men, William followed lumbering, and was drowned while rafting in the Moira river, which empties into the Bay of Quinté (he had crossed the ocean several times).

Francis Forgie, father of our subject, became a farmer. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Mulholland, a Methodist minister in Ireland, where he died (his widow immigrated to Canada with her only son—who was drowned in the St. Lawrence—and four daughters, Eliza, Rebecca, Mary and Elizabeth, and lived to an advanced age, dying an earnest Christian, devoted to her faith). After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Francis Forgie continued to reside on their farm in Canada. They were the parents of six children, viz.: Isabella, married to Thomas E. Bell, of Peterboro county, Ontario; John and James, in Pittsburgh; Mary J., wife of John McCaw, of Hastings county, Ontario; William, the subject of this sketch, and Thomas Edward, who died when young. The mother of this family died in 1854, and in 1862 the father married a Miss Ramsey, who bore him two sons: Frank (working with his half-brother, William), and Samuel C. (deceased). She died in 1868, a member of the M. E. Church; the father passed away in 1887 at the age of seventy-seven years.

William Forgie, the subject proper of this memoir, was born March 17, 1850, in the township of Thurlow, county of Hastings, Ontario, and his education was received at the common schools of the neighborhood of his birthplace. Until twenty years of age he worked on the home farm, and then proceeded to Red river, in the "Northwest," along with the troops sent out to quell the Riel rebellion of that year. He and a neighbor, William McCready, had been comrades in the Argyle Light Infantry, of Belleville, Ontario, and when volunteers were called to suppress this rebellion, they joined the First Ontario Rifles. In the "Northwest" they served two years, and had a taste of the winters out there, which were remarkable for their severity. In 1873 Mr. Forgie came to the United States, making his first home here at Parker's Landing, on the Allegheny river, where he was employed as an oil producer, in which, during the twelve years he was engaged in the business, he met with varied success. In 1886 he came to Washington, where for a time he continued his oil speculations, and in 1887 he embarked in the manufacture of oil and gas well rig irons, cants, arms and pins, etc. He also turns out a large number of the far-famed and most useful sand reel and tool-wrenching jack (of which he is the patentee), vast improvements on anything of the kind hitherto made, and which add very materially to the convenience and profit of the trade.

In 1876 Mr. Forgie married, in Parker's Landing, Miss Henry, who died in September, 1878, leaving a six months-old son, who followed his mother in September, 1879. Our subject married, in 1889, Miss Ida Belle Lytle, daughter of Robert Lytle, of Donegal township. The family residence, which Mr. Forgie recently built, in Washington, is situated on Hall avenue. Politically he is a Republican, in sentiment a free-trader; while in Canada he was an Orangeman and a Presbyterian, and he is still an ardent advocate of Protestant rights and religious principles.

FRANKLIN P. SCOTT, M. D., a prominent and successful physician of Monongahela, was born December 26, 1839, in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of John Scott, whose father, William Scott, was a farmer of Washington county, and died in North Strabane township, in politics a Democrat and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church.

John Scott was born on the home place in Washington county, Penn., and attended the public schools, afterward teaching for several years. He married Lydia, daughter of George Pees, a tombstone cutter, and who also followed farming. John Scott and his wife settled in Somerset township, this county, and afterward moved to Washington borough, where they died. They had the following children: Mary, George, Franklin P., Lydia J. (deceased wife of Lewis Dague), Sarah E. (since deceased), William J. (living in Washington county, Ohio), John R., and Winifred (both living in Ford county, Ill.). Mr. Scott voted with the Democratic party, and for several years, in Somerset township, served as justice of the peace, also for a time as associate judge. He was a member of and elder in the Presbyterian Church in Somerset township, and on removing to Washington borough, united with the U. P. Church at that place, in which he was an elder until his death.

Dr. Franklin P. Scott passed his earlier boyhood in Somerset township, where he received his primary education at the common schools. After the family removed to Washington borough, he attended the public schools there, and then taught for four years, afterward studying the languages under John Messenger. He then entered the office of Dr. Boyd Emery, at Duncingville, Penn., and in 1859 attended Jefferson Medical College. Upon leaving that institution he took a course at the University of Louisville, graduating from there in 1871, and in 1889 he took a degree at the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia. Dr. Scott first began the practice of his profession at Mount Morris, Greene Co., Penn., where he remained for three years, and in 1863 removed to Claysville, Donegal township, this county. In 1877 he came to his present home in Monongahela, and is now enjoying a highly lucrative practice.

In 1860 Dr. Scott was married to Amelia, daughter of Samuel Pugh, of Mercer county, Penn., whose wife was formerly a Miss Vaughn. One child was born to the union of Dr. and Amelia Scott—Emma L., a graduate of the Washington Female Seminary. She is now the wife of W. L. Gaston, and the mother of two children, Mernie and Franklin S. In 1865 Dr. Scott married, for his second wife, Jennie A., daughter of Stephen Corkle, of Claysville, this county, and they have one daughter, Anna R., a graduate of the Female College and Conservatory of Music at Pittsburgh. After her graduation Miss Scott was elected a member of the Faculty. Dr. Scott is a hearty advocate of the principles embodied in the platform of the Democratic party, and in religion is a member of the M. E. Church, of the board of trustees of which he has served as a member for several years.

MRS. SARAH D. HAWKINS is a daughter of Henry Myers, a native of Maryland, born in 1808. He married Elizabeth Drake, who was born March 14, 1820, also in Maryland, and they had children as follows: Sarah D. (Mrs. Hawkins), Eli (a farmer in West Bethlehem township), Mary E. (living with her brother Alva on the old homestead), and Walter (living in Washington county). The father of this family was a successful farmer; in politics he voted with the Republican party. He died September 13, 1890, and the mother followed him January 29, 1891. She was a member of the Lutheran Church. Of the children of this family, Sarah D. was born August 22, 1844, in West Bethlehem township, this county, and on January 12, 1865, was married to Joseph H. Hawkins, a record of whose grandfather, William Hawkins, will be found on page 379.

John Hawkins, father of Joseph H., was born on the old homestead in this county, and received his education at the subscription schools. On December 10 1829; he was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Young, who bore him three children, namely: William (deceased), Samuel A. (farming in Somerset township), and Joseph H. (deceased). The mother died April 26, 1834, and for his second wife Mr. Hawkins married Susanna Farmer, who was born August 31, 1807, in Columbiana county, Ohio, and the following children came to their union: Jerusha N., born July 23, 1837; Sarah (wife of Milton Patterson, living in Beallsville, Penn.), born March 3, 1839; John W., born October 4, 1842; Mary E. (married to Joseph H. Rogers, of Somerset township), born December 1, 1844; Martha J. (wife of James M. Miller, of Allegheny county, Penn.), born February 17, 1847, and Rebecca, born February 3, 1850 (deceased). The father was a prominent farmer; he was an active member of the Republican party, serving his township in various offices. He died April 17, 1880, being preceded by the mother October 1, 1876.

Joseph H. Hawkins was born April 26, 1834, in Somerset township, this county, grew to manhood on the home farm, and attended the district schools of the neighborhood. After his marriage to Miss Sarah D. Myers, the young couple settled in Somerset township, where two children were born to them, viz.: Jennie N., born May 13, 1866 (died August 4, 1888), and Shannon, born March 9, 1875. Mr. Hawkins was actively interested in all progressive movements, and politically he voted with the Republican party.

THOMAS M. WILEY, senior member of the well-known furniture firm, in Washington, of Thomas M. Wiley & Son, is a native of the borough, born in October, 1824. His grandfather, who was a Virginian by birth, was married to Elizabeth Tannehill, daughter of a Maryland planter, who at the time of the Revolution was loyal to England. William Wiley, father of Thomas M., a bricklayer by trade, married Martha, a daughter of Massy Harbison, who was the mother of eleven children, two of whom were killed by the Indians within view of their mother, who was captured by them, and whose wonderful escape from captivity is related elsewhere. William Wiley had born to him children, as follows: John and Martha (both deceased), Thomas M., Henry, Maria, Frank, Ellen, William and Annie (all in Washington).

Thomas M. Wiley received his education at the public schools of his native town, and while a boy learned the trade of cabinet maker. In 1850 he paid a visit to California, where he remained two years. In 1855 he commenced the business of cabinet making on his own account, in Wheeling, W. Va., where he remained ten years, at the end of which time he returned to Washington and opened a small store, from which developed his present mammoth establishment. In 1876 he received his son, James C., into partnership, and in 1878 he erected his present handsome block, on Main street, all now occupied as a furniture store.

In 1852 Mr. Wiley was married, in Wheeling, W. Va., to Miss Elizabeth Courts, a native of that city, who died in August, 1888, at the age of fifty two years, leaving three children: James C., now in partnership with his father; Kate, wife of William Van Kirk, of Amwell township, and Anna, living at home. Our subject is a Republican, and has frequently served in the borough council. Socially he is a Freemason, and at one time was a member of the L. O. O. F. He is a typical self made man, having from very small beginnings, by industry, intelligent effort and judicious economy, made an enviable and well-merited success.

JOHAN M. MORROW is a native of the county, born March 21, 1850, in the portion of Canton township that is now included in West Washington. His paternal great-grandparents, Adam and Elizabeth (Crozier) Morrow, came to this country from Ireland about the year 1804, making their first home in their adopted country in Virginia, where they carried on farming, and thence, in 1820, they moved with their family to Washington county, Penn., where they passed the remainder of their lives, the great-grandfather dying July 24, 1846, and the great-grandmother, February 14, 1846. They had seven children as follows: William (died in Iowa), Adam (killed in Virginia by the limb of a tree falling on him), James (died of small-pox), John (of whom special mention is made further on), Andrew (died in New Orleans), Jane (married a Mr. Carney, and died in Cincinnati leaving a family), and Susan (died when young in Washington, Penn.).

John Morrow, grandfather of subject, was born

January 2, 1800, in Ireland, and was consequently four years old when brought by his parents to this country. In 1823 he was married to Sophia Hallam (a sketch of whose family follows this), and they then settled on land in Washington county, where the aged widow yet lives, her husband having passed away June 22, 1859. He was a blacksmith and wagon maker by trade, and many of the wagons made by him were used in the construction of the National pike, while fifty-six were bought by the Government for use in the Mexican war. He was regarded as a man of much ability, and was not excelled as a mechanic. His old workshop on East Wheeling street, Washington, is now owned by J. D. Jackson. His widow, at this writing, nearly ninety years of age, possesses remarkably good health and memory. She is a member of the M. E. Church at Washington. Seven children were born to this honored couple: Adam Crozier (special mention of whom follows), Thomas Hallam (died in New York), John Andrew (died in Omaha), Robert Latimer (died in Washington, where his widow and one daughter are yet living), Sarah Margaret (died unmarried), Elizabeth Jane (deceased wife of John McEnas, of Boston, Mass.), and William Henry (now living in Boston, Mass.).

Adam Crozier Morrow (father of John M.), was born August 16, 1825, in Washington county, Penn., at the common schools of which place he received his rudimentary education, after which he attended college four and a half years, but did not graduate. He learned the trade of blacksmith with his father, and followed same until 1850, when he embarked in the dry goods business, later taking up the grocery trade, which he carried on in Washington some twenty five or thirty years. During part of this time—from 1868 to 1880—he kept the "Auld House," then known as the "Morrow House," and previously called the "Railroad House." Having sold out all his business interests in Washington in 1880, Mr. Morrow, in 1886, moved to Pittsburgh, where he has since made his home. On June 15, 1848, he married Ann Elizabeth, daughter of Col. John and Nancy Morgan, of Chartiers township, whose children were: Martha, married to Godfrey Cook, also of Chartiers (both now deceased); Major Jacob Morgan (deceased), whose widow, Alice (McCloskey), now resides on Prospect avenue, Washington borough; Emily, married to William Cundall (both deceased); Robert, married to Mary Mackie (both deceased); Nancy, wife of James Harvey, living in Mt. Pleasant township; William; Rebecca, wife of J. R. McCloskey, in Kansas; Hugh, also in Kansas, and Ann E. To the marriage of Adam and Ann E. Morrow were born ten children, as follows: John (our subject), Lucius S. (born August 8, 1852, died at the age of about four years), Annie S. (born May 16, 1855, married to W. D. Roberts, of Washington), Charles C. (born November 30, 1858, now a resident of Pittsburgh), Sallie M. (born June 14, 1860, also living in Pittsburgh), Jennie M. (born September 10, 1863), Hugh W. (born November 23, 1867), Mollie and Alice (twins, born in 1870, died in infancy), and Thomas (who died in childhood). The mother died January 13, 1890, in Pittsburgh, at the age of sixty-three years. The father is a staunch Democrat, and has filled various offices of trust, such as member of council for a time; he became a member of the I. O. O. F. at an early age.

John M. Morrow received his education at the common schools of the district, and on completing the usual curriculum entered Dull's Mercantile College at Pittsburgh, from which he graduated in 1871. He then received the appointment of cashier and bookkeeper for Major Morgan, an extensive wool dealer in Washington borough. At the expiry of a year he accepted a similar position with S. Ewart & Co., wholesale grocers, but in 1872 he returned to Washington to assist his father in the grocery business, in which he continued till 1880, when the latter sold out, as already related. Our subject then entered, July 1, same year, the employ of George Davis.

On January 25, 1875, Mr. Morrow was married to Miss Elizabeth W., daughter of M. G. Kuntz, and three children have come to bless their home, viz.: Eliza Ann, born August 23, 1877; Sophia Elizabeth, born January 31, 1879; and Wray Grayson, born September 23, 1881. The family reside in the comfortable and handsome residence, No. 87 East Maiden street, built by Mr. Morrow in 1889. They are all members of the Second Presbyterian Church of Washington. Socially our subject is a member of the Royal Arcanum and the Improved Order of Heptasophs, Washington; politically, he is a Democrat.

Mrs. Sophia (Hallam) Morrow was born January 31, 1804, in South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., a daughter of Thomas Hallam, who was a son of John, Sr., and Isabella (Fell) Hallam, who both died in Washington county early in the century, having immigrated in 1763 to this country with five sons, two of whom went to the Far West, Thomas and John coming to Washington, this county, where the latter died of smallpox in 1800. Thomas was twice married, first time to a Miss Beshear, by whom he had eight children, all now deceased. His second wife was Sarah Voorhees, daughter of Isaiah Voorhees, who died in Columbus, Ohio, and whose wife was called from earth in Washington, Penn. After marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hallam settled on the farm in Franklin township, where John Reddick now lives. For a time they kept a hotel which stood on ground now called "Pancake." Later, having rented their farm here, they moved to Wellsburg, W. Va., where Mr. Hallam had bought a ferry, which he ran for about a year. They then returned to Washington county. Mr. Hallam traded the "John G. Clark" farm in Franklin township for 1,500 acres in Ohio, whither he and his wife moved in 1828, and here he died August 1, 1829, at the age of eighty-four years. He was very successful in all his undertakings, but died comparatively poor, having lost most of his property by going bail for others. He participated in the Whisky Insurrection. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hallam had eight children, viz.: Thomas (died in Ohio), Absalom (died in Illinois), Sophia (widow of John Morrow), Samuel D. (living in Monmouth, Ill.), David (died in Iowa), Margaret (deceased wife of John Stone, of Illinois), Sarah (died in Ohio) and Isabella (deceased wife of Thomas Goodman, of Texas).

WH. DAVIS, a member of the prominent lumber and hardware firm of W. H. Davis & Co., Washington, Penn., was born in Allegheny (Allegheny City), Penn., April 25, 1846, and is descended from pioneers of the State.

George Davis, his father, was the son of Joshua, references to whom are made in the history of the Davis family of South Strabane township. George was a farmer in early manhood, but some short time after the venerable Charles Carroll opened the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, that novel industry won his attention, and next he is found in the service of the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad Company as engineer. For many years he followed engineering, and, only toward the latter years of his life, did he resume farming. He was united in marriage with Miss Martha Crawford, who was a resident of Lexington, Ky., and immediately after they located in Allegheny county; subsequently moved into Allegheny City, and, in their later years, or about 1854, in Peters township, this county, where he died, in his fifty-sixth year, December 14, 1870. His widow died April 8, 1872, aged fifty-four years.

George and Martha Davis were the parents of six children, namely: Mary Jane, wife of Dunning Hart, of Amwell township; Maggie A., wife of John Finley Scott, of Buffalo township; William H., the subject of this sketch; Wilson C., a lumber dealer at Saltsburgh, Penn.; Martha W., widow of Alexander Wilson, of Allegheny county, and George B., an architect of Monmouth, Ill. The parents of this family were, at the period of death, members of the Brush Run United Presbyterian Church. The father was a staunch Republican.

William H. Davis accompanied his parents to Washington county in 1854, and grew to manhood here. He received a primary education in the schools of Peters township, and completed a commercial course in Duff's Commercial College, Pittsburgh. His marriage with Miss Lucy M., daughter of John and Mary P. (Adams) Fife, of Allegheny county, Penn., took place November 10, 1870. The Fifes were represented in Allegheny county at a very early date, and in the history of that section of the State, published by A. Warner & Co., the name is repeatedly mentioned, and the biography of the present head of the family given. William H. Davis and wife took up their residence on the home farm in Peters township, and remained there until 1881, when they moved to Kansas. After a stay of three years there, they returned to Washington county, Penn., where Mr. Davis opened a lumber yard at Hills, on the Chartiers road, which he carried on for six years. The storms and floods, in the spring of 1889, resulted in heavy loss to him, as the waters rushing through his yards carried away a considerable quantity of lumber and damaged permanent improvements.

In the fall of 1889 he established his yard at Washington, Penn. Soon after, his cousin, J. K. Davis, became his partner, but he, in the course of a few weeks, sold his interests to W. H. Davis, Jr., another cousin, who continued in the firm until March 21, 1893, when he withdrew, and it was reorganized under the present title. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Davis are: Mary Etta, wife of W. R. Woods, of Allegheny county, Penn.; George; Martha Crawford; Sarah Viola, and Addie Maria, all residents of Washington. The parents are members of the First Presbyterian Church. Politically Mr. Davis is a Republican, but the close personal attention he gives to his extensive business interests does not permit him to take an active part in politics.

WILLIAM GREGG. Among the early settlers of Washington county, whose deeds are an undying monument to their memory, were Mr. Gregg's first ancestors in this country, a record of whom is presented on page 1267, this volume.

Henry Gregg, son of Henry and Jane (Dowler) Gregg was born November 22, 1796, on the home place in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn. He attended the schools of the period, then learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for some years, but finally gave his attention to farming. On February 8, 1821, he married Eleanor Gregg, who was born in 1796, in Washington county, and nine children were born to them, of whom but two are yet living, William and John. The father was an industrious, practical farmer; in politics he affiliated with the Republican party. Mrs. Gregg died in 1811, followed by her husband in 1876. Both were members of the M. E. Church.

William Gregg, son of Henry and Eleanor (Gregg) Gregg, was born December 9, 1822, on the home place in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn. His educational opportunities were very limited, the greater part of his youth being passed in agricultural duties; but by energy and perseverance he has overcome these early disadvantages, and is now a thoroughly cultured gentleman. He and his brother John, neither of whom have married, reside on the old homestead, which contains ninety eight acres of good land. They conduct an extensive business in general farming and stock raising. In politics they are earnest workers in the Republican party, though never accepting official honors. They are universally known as honest, energetic business men, possessing warm sympathies for those who have been unfortunate.

AY. SWICKARD, a prominent business man, and proprietor of a well known meat market in Monongahela, was born May 10, 1859, in Nottingham township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of Daniel and Harriet (Loyda) Swickard, a sketch of whom appears at page 735 in this volume.

He received his education at the common schools of Monongahela, and in 1881 entered into partnership with his father in the shoe business in that town, which continued some four years when it was dissolved by mutual consent, and our subject then went into the employ of Stewart Hackett & Co., as traveling salesman. With them he remained in that capacity until 1891 when he embarked in his present prosperous business.

On December 9, 1888, Mr. Swickard married May, daughter of Johnston Coulter, and two children came to bless their union: Helen Irene (deceased), and Marie C. Our subject and wife are adherents of the Presbyterian Church; politically he is a Democrat, ever taking an active interest in the affairs of his party. Mr. Swickard is recognized and respected as a useful, loyal citizen, having at heart the welfare and prosperity of his city, township and county.

ANDREW McDONALD, son of John McDonald, was born April 20, 1840. John McDonald was born in 1789, in Virginia, and was a lifelong farmer. In 1803 he moved to Washington county, Penn., and the following year purchased 175 acres of land which is now known as the old homestead. In 1839 he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Fish, of this county, who bore him the following children: Andrew, Gabriel, James H., John, Hiram, Mary (Mrs. Jennings), Nancy J., Edith G. and Matilda. Mr. McDonald served as supervisor several years, township clerk for twenty five years, school director a long time, and in various other township offices. He died in November, 1853. Mrs. McDonald is yet living with her children, and enjoys good health.

Andrew McDonald has had charge of the old place since his fourteenth year, having at that early age begun the seemingly impossible task of supporting and educating the eight younger children, thus early left without a father. Heroically he toiled, and nobly did he succeed in this laudable effort. In September, 1862, he enlisted in the army, as the other children were then old enough to provide their own maintenance. He entered Company E, Twenty second Pennsylvania Cavalry, (the Ringgold Battalion), and fought under Sheridan in all the battles of the Shenandoah Valley until the close of the war, when he returned home. On May 17, 1866, he married Isabella Whitfield, a native of this county. Mr. McDonald has been clerk of Nottingham township for the past twenty seven years, and is now serving his third term as justice of the peace, having filled that office twelve years. He has held every office in the township with the exception of constable. He is an adherent of Democratic principles, and, in religious faith, a member of the Presbyterian Church.

MRS. REGINA BALDWIN is a daughter of Frederick Schrontz, who was of German birth, and who at an early age immigrated to America, where he married Elizabeth Schudler, a resident of Washington county, Penn. She bore him six children: Catherine, Regina, George, Jacob, John and Frank. He was a Democrat in politics, and in religion was a member of the Lutheran Church.

On September 27, 1832, Regina Schrontz became the wife of Thomas Baldwin, an energetic young citizen of Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn. His ancestors were natives of the State of New Jersey, the first of whom to settle in Washington county, Penn., was Jonathan Baldwin, the grandfather of Thomas. At that period Washington county was an unbroken wilderness, but Jonathan Baldwin settled in Morris township, and with the aid of his three sons—William, Francis and Jonathan—soon established his pioneer home.

After the death of his parents Francis Baldwin was married to Rebecca Hill, a resident of East Finley township, who bore him children as follows: Stephen, Sarah, Thomas, John, Phoebe, Francis, Sealy, James, Amos, Silas and Cephas. Mr. Baldwin was one of the organizers of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Van Buren, Washington county, and in political opinion he was a Whig.

Thomas Baldwin was born August 7, 1811, in Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his early life in assisting to improve and clear the farm. Like other pioneer children, his education was necessarily limited to the primary principles of text book knowledge, but in other matters his training was more thorough than that of the modern scholar. After his marriage to Regina Schrontz, the young couple settled on a farm in Morris township, Washington county, where they remained until 1860, when they removed to the farm of 200 acres which is the present home of Mrs. Baldwin. The children born to this union are as follows: Sarah, Elizabeth (Mrs. Stephen Miller), Francis T., Jacob, Melzer, John, Silas, Mary (Mrs. Jesse Borth), Calvin and Thomas.

Mr. Baldwin was formerly a Whig and then a Republican, taking an active interest in political matters. For many years he was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Van Buren, being an ardent supporter of that society. [Since the above was put in type, we have been informed of the death of Mrs. Baldwin. — Ed.]

GRANT MONINGER is one of those well-educated, intelligent and enterprising young citizens of Anwell township, on whom the elder portion of the community begins to depend. As the strength of the seniors in years fails, they naturally look proudly to the sturdy, active young men who are ready to take the burden of life on their strong broad shoulders, before the aged and weary toilers have fallen to rest by the way.

John Moninger, who was the pioneer of the family of that name now residing in Anwell township, emigrated from Germany to America in 1801, and settled on a farm in Anwell township, Washington Co., Penn. His occupation was farming and carpentry, in both of which he was very successful. His children were Henry, George W., John, Jacob, Mrs. Mary Harshman, Mrs. Catherine Harshman, and Mrs. Elizabeth Moore. Mr. Moninger was one of the organizers of the Republican party in Washington county.

George W. Moninger, son of John, was born January 7, 1812, on the old farm near Lone Pine, Anwell township. His father drove stock, and the younger days of George were passed in assisting in that work, and in attending the rate schools of the neighborhood of his home. Notwithstanding many disadvantages, he afterward became one of the best teachers in the township. To illustrate the adventurous spirit of this youth, an incident of his boyhood days is given: When a boy of twelve years, he and his father went to Barre with stock, and "young America," becoming impatient with the more leisurely movements of his paternal ancestor, started home alone, arriving there two days before the rest of the party. On reaching maturity he began teaching school, a profession he followed six or eight years; then commenced stock driving and wool buying, making his headquarters in Washington borough, and traveling through Washington and Greene counties, soon winning for himself by his business popularity the appropriate sobriquet of "Drover George Moninger." He continued to prosper in this line until he formed a partnership with Morgan Brothers in the wool business, when he lost his entire property, and at the age of forty five was obliged to begin the world anew, with no capital save that of the old courageous spirit stronger in him than ever. Within a few years he accumulated another fortune, some $15,000 or $20,000 which enabled him to purchase the Reason Luellen farm. In September, 1845, Mr. Moninger was married to Mrs. Sidney (Horn) Swart, widow of Amos Swart, who was killed at Spottsylvania, and they had two children, Grant, born February 11, 1869, and Franklin, born August 11, 1872. Mr. Moninger was highly esteemed in his community, and was a representative Republican of his township. In the Disciple Church at Lone Pine he was one of the most zealous workers. On July 25, 1888, he passed peacefully away, after an honored and useful life of seventy six years and six months.

Grant Moninger, son of George and Sidney Moninger, was born on the old home farm near Lone Pine, his rudimentary education being received at the common schools of the neighborhood, which was supplemented with a five or six years' attendance at Pleasant Valley Academy; he then took a course at the Iron City College, Pittsburgh, Penn., which properly included from eight to twelve months, but which he completed in four months. He was always one of the brightest students in school, and he is gifted with an active mind and superior intelligence. Since his seventeenth year he has had charge of his father's estate, and is the appointed guardian of his younger brother. The brothers have a farm comprising 350 acres of prime land. When but seventeen years of age, Grant Moninger united with the Disciple Church of Lone Pine, of which he has ever since been an active member.

WK. GALBRAITH, the popular young postmaster of Caronsburg, is a grandson of William Galbraith, a native of Scotland, who married Isabella Welch, who was born and reared in the Emerald Isle. They came to America soon after their marriage, locating on the old farm near Burgetts town, Smith township, Washington Co., Penn., where children were born to them as follows: Matthew, James A., Robert (deceased), John (deceased), William R., Middleton, Jane, Margaret, Elizabeth (deceased) and Isabelle. The father was a staunch advocate of the principles embodied in the Whig party, and served several years as justice of the peace. He was a member and ruling elder of the U. P. Church at Burgettstown for many years. He died in 1860.

James A. Galbraith was born on the old farm in Smith township, this county, and at the age of eighteen years began to teach school, following that profession several years. He then became a clerk at Cross Creek village, this county, continuing as such twenty-one years. He finally engaged in the hardware business at Burgettstown, Smith township, and in 1875 was elected county recorder. At the expiration of his term of office he moved to Canonsburg, and has since been profitably employed in handling grain and machinery. He was wedded to Mary A. Behout, of Cross Creek village, who has borne him seven children, namely: Aaron, married to Dora Chambers, of Canonsburg, Penn.; Belle, deceased wife of Charles Harding, station agent of the Waynesburg & Washington Railroad; W. K., whose sketch follows; Elizabeth, wife of S. A. Croser, a merchant of Canonsburg; Robert, a druggist of Pittsburgh, Penn., married to Ann Coleman; and Nettie, wife of Joseph Thompson, who is interested in the oil fields of Pennsylvania.

W. K. Galbraith was born December 12, 1878, in Cross Creek village, Penn., and when ten years of age came with his parents to Burgettstown. He entered the high school, and graduated with the class of '98. After leaving school he assisted his father in the duties of the recorder's office, and when the term was ended worked one year for the new recorder. He then conducted a tobacco store in Canonsburg for eight years, then entered the office of the Central Grain Elevator Company, of Pittsburgh, Penn., remaining in their employ until his appointment, in 1899, as postmaster of Canonsburg. On November 13, 1881, he was united in marriage with Mary E., daughter of James Mumford, of Canonsburg. They have three children: James Lloyd, Katie E. and Robert R.

Mr. Galbraith has a beautiful home on East College street. In politics he is a faithful adherent of the Republican party, and in religion a member and liberal supporter of the U. P. Church at Canonsburg. He is an influential citizen, respected by all.

ROBERT D. NESBIT is a son of Robert Nesbit, whose parents, John and Martha (Donaldson) Nesbit, came from Cecil county, Md., to Washington county, Penn. John Nesbit was accompanied by three neighbors, one of whom soon after returned to Maryland, while the others located upon a tract of land which lies upon the boundaries of Chartiers and Canton townships. John settled on 119 acres of land, and children were born to these pioneers, but in the winter of 1837 a deadly fever raged in the neighborhood. Before spring the father and three of the children—John, Margaret and Jane—had died. Of the once happy family now remained a widowed wife and bereaved mother, who clung closely to her one remaining son, Robert. The Death Angel soon called her to join the loved ones gone before, and on April 26, 1843, she too died.

Robert Nesbit was born in 1800, in Canton township, on his father's farm. On June 12, 1828, he was married to Mary Ann Anderson, a native of Chartiers township, this county, and three children were born to them, namely: John A., Sarah (Mrs. Edward H. Daugherty), and Martha (deceased wife of William Stewart). Mrs. Nesbit died September 27, 1837, and he was afterward married to Margaret Shaw, a native of Ireland, who came with her parents to America when but a child. They were married in Washington county, and settled upon the farm where their only son Robert D. is now living. Mr. Nesbit took an active interest in political matters, and in church relation was many years an elder and leading member of the United Presbyterian Church. He died in 1861, and was followed by his wife in 1863.

Robert D. Nesbit was born March 25, 1841, on the old home farm in Chartiers township, receiving his education in the district schools. In 1862 he enlisted in an independent cavalry company for a term of three years, or until the close of the war. This company was afterward organized into the Twenty-second Pennsylvania Regiment, and then became a part of the Ringgold Battalion. Mr. Nesbit took part in the battles of Winchester, Fisher's Hill and Cedar Creek. In 1865 he received an honorable discharge at Wheeling, W. Va., after which he returned to Chartiers township. On August 26, 1868, he was married to Miss Lizzie Lee, a native of Chartiers township, daughter of David and Maria (McLanghlin) Lee. They had emigrated from England to Maryland, finally locating in Washington county, Penn., where the remainder of their lives was passed. After his marriage Mr. Nesbit settled on the farm which is now his home. The land is not only valued for its agricultural properties, but also for grain which has been developed thereon. To Mr. and Mrs. Robert D. Nesbit the following children have been born: David H., Robert, Maggie, Bertha and Lizzie (twins). Mr. Nesbit is not only interested in the Republican party, and has served as a member of the school board and judge of inspect. He and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church and are ever ready to lend a helping hand to further any worthy enterprise.
